MR. ARTHUR WALENN

(BARITONE).

Now Booking for Next Season.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S "EVERYMAN."

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, RICHMOND, May 2. Of this Concert—
The Herald says: "Mr. Arthur Walenn's fine baritone voice was heard to much advantage in the exacting solos for Everyman."

The Surrey Comet: "Mr. Arthur Walenn gave to the character of Everyman the deepest expression and impressiveness, at the same time avoiding that exaggeration which would tempt a singer of less culture."

The Richmond Times: "Of the soloists, the place of honour must certainly be given to Mr. Arthur Walenn, who, as Everyman, had so much to do. It was always difficult, requiring great variety and expression, to ward off a suspicion of dullness that might otherwise have crept in. In Mr. Walenn's hands nothing of the kind happened; he has a bass voice of very pleasing quality, well under control, and was evidently thoroughly acquainted not only with the music itself, but with the spirit of the work."

Ashworth Mansions, Elgin Avenue, London, W.

MR. EDGAR ARCHER

(BASS-BARITONE).

Principal Bass, City Temple. Oratorios, Banquets, Concerts, &c.
For terms and vacant dates, apply, "Langdale," Rutland Park, N.W.

MR. WILLIAM FORINGTON

{(BASS-BARITONE).}

"EVERYMAN." Dr. WALFORD DAVIES'S Cantata at Northampton, May 11, 1905.

"Mr. Forington gave a very polished and impressive rendering of the part of Everyman. . . Mr. Forington's singing of the Lament was distinctly touching in its sincere humility and resignation, and the power as well as the expressiveness of his fine voice found full scope in the declaratory music. . . Everyman's prayer to God was also very reverently interpreted, and Mr. Forington's work in the concerted numbers was well balanced and careful."—Northampton Herald, May 12, 1905.

"Mr. Forington was equally a success in the bass solos. He had a hard evening's work, but he made the most of every opportunity to bring out the dramatic beauties of the numbers allotted to Everyman, and his efforts richly deserved the hearty reward they obtained at the close."— Northampton Mercury, May 12, 1905.

MR. CHARLES KNOWLES

(BARITONE).

Of the London Musical Festival; Leeds Triennial Musical Festival; Sheffield Triennial Musical Festival; also Chester, Scarborough, and Morecambe Musical Festivals.

MORECAMBE MUSICAL FESTIVAL. "KING OLAF."

Sheffield Independent, May 20, 1905.

"Sir Edward had chosen his own principals—Madame Squire, Mr. Coates, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. Charles Knowles infused into his part all the dramatic force required, declaiming with burly vigour and full tone that were quite first-rate in quality, his solid and resonant voice being perfectly in accord with the breezy Norseman. . . . Mr. Charles Knowles found most grateful scope for his fine baritone voice in Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' solo, the 'Vision.' Endowed with splendid vocal gifts, this admirable artist has now thoroughly acquired that art which conceals art. Of the many highly excellent results of this exacting and expressive number which we have heard in Sheffield and elsewhere, we have no hesitation in declaring this to be by far the best. Mr. Knowles should travel much farther than at present. He is worthy to rank as the mantle bearer of at least one man famed as a baritone."

Yorkshire Observer, May 20, 1905.

"Mr. Charles Knowles's strenuous and incisive style gave point to all the bass solos. . . . In the second part, Mr. Knowles gave a very artistic rendering of 'Hiawatha's Vision,' from Coleridge-Taylor's work."

Sheffield Daily Telegraph, May 20, 1905.

"The soloists, Madame Squire, Mr. Coates, and Mr. Charles Knowles, were each in magnificent voice. . . . Mr. Charles Knowles sang 'Hiawatha's Vision,' from the 'Song of Hiawatha,' Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's beautiful music being most charmingly rendered."

GLOUCESTER CHORAL SOCIETY.

Gloucester Journal, May 13, 1905.

"Mr. Charles Knowles was in great form, and his rich and flexible voice—a striking feature of which is the fulness of the top notes—was heard to advantage in a dramatic rendering of 'The Prologue' to 'Pagliacci' and a brace of stirring ballads, 'Young Dieterich' (Henschel) and 'A Soldier's Toast' (Airle Dix). Mr. Knowles was recalled after each appearance—twice after 'The Prologue.'"

PLYMOUTH. "HIAWATHA."

Western Morning News, November 28, 1904.

"Mr. Charles Knowles has made 'Hiawatha' one of his chief successes, and it is thoroughly useful to the vigorous and musical baritone quality of his voice, which he used with invariable good judgment and control. . . . Personal yet artistic emotion was the convincing feature of his reading of the tragedy; and manly fortitude and submission were the keynote of the departure and farewell. The recital of his vision, and the expressive song, 'Beautiful is the sun,' were very finely delivered."

MR. CHARLES KNOWLES IN "ELIJAH."

Bristol Times, April 3, 1905.

"Mr. Knowles was magnificent in his embodiment of the rôle of the Prophet. His fine, rich, and full voice enabled him, with his artistic instinct, to do every justice to the music of the Seer of Horeb. The opening recitative, 'As God the Lord,' was finely declaimed; the utterances, fervent and scornful, on the mountain were highly praiseworthy; and 'Is not His word?' and 'It is enough' were admirable examples of vocalization."

MR. CHARLES KNOWLES IN "ELIJAH."

Western Daily News, April 3, 1905.

"Bristol audiences of the present generation have experiences of Santley, Watkin Mills, and Andrew Black in the title rôle. In making the acquaintance of Mr. Charles Knowles in the oratorio, they listened to a singer who was fully alive to the dramatic requirements of the music, and he was especially energetic in the 'Carmel' incidents. Bitterly ironical towards the Priests of Baal, he was solemn and devotional in the lovely petition, 'Lord God of Abraham,' which comes in sharp contrast to the fierce appeals of Baal's worshippers, by its soothing and its prayer. The impetuous number, 'Is not His word like a fire?' was declaimed by Mr. Knowles, appropriately energetic. The pathetic outburst, 'It is enough,' was given with much feeling, and, indeed, throughout, the competent artist proved highly efficient."

MR. CHARLES KNOWLES IN "MESSIAH."

Belfast News Letter, December 17, 1904.

"Mr. Charles Knowles was superb in the bass solos. It is not many years since the Leeds vocalist made his first appearance on the concert platform, but he has made great progress, and he may be said to be in quite the front rank of singers at the present time. His voice seems to have deepened in timbre and strengthened in tone since we heard him last, and from the very outset he made a splendid impression. The stern and menacing 'Thus saith the Lord of Hosts,' and the air 'But who may abide' were interpreted with decision and forcefulness, and he was also very effective in 'For behold, darkness shall cover' and 'The people that walked in darkness.' Perhaps his greatest achievement, however, was his singing of 'Why do the nations,' in which he made the pulses throb with the great fire and vividness of his rendering. Seldom has it been our lot to hear the difficult solo so efficiently rendered."

Mr. Charles Knowles, 24, Acacia Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

Telegrams—"Singspiel, London."

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE)

(Westminster Abbey).

Of the Royal Choral Society, Queen's Hall Symphony and Promenade Concerts, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace Concerts, Gaiety Choral Union, Belfast Philharmonic Society, &c.

Telegrams—"SOLOIST, LONDON." Phone—519 (P.O.) HAMSTEAD.

BOSTON. "ELIJAH."

"Mr. Montague Borwell, in the rôle of the Prophet, was worth going miles to hear. His voice is of the first quality; but not that alone, but his dramatic interpretation of the part, captivated his hearers and held them spellbound. Mr. Borwell has been heard before in Boston, and we shall hope to hear him many times again."—Boston Independent, April 23, 1905.

RAMSGATE. "ELIJAH."

"In a case such as this, one hardly likes to institute comparisons, which at times are odious, but we can say without hesitation that we have never heard better singing by a bass vocalist in any oratorio. Mr. Borwell's work was magnificent, and in no small measure was the undoubted success of the performance due to his efforts."—Thanet Advertiser, April 8, 1905.

STOKE NEWINGTON. "ELIJAH."

"Mr. Montague Borwell sang the music allotted to the Prophet with dignified power and fine phrasing. Majestic, scornful, pleading, and victorious, each musical phrase of the Tishbite's mood was rendered by him with fitting appreciation."—Stoke Newington Recorder, March 31, 1905.

OLDHILL. "MESSIAH."

"Mr. Montague Borwell, the bass, earned and obtained a splendid reception. His voice, rich rather than powerful, was admirably suited to the work he had to perform. He did well in 'But who may abide,' better in 'Thou art gone up on high,' and best of all in 'Why do the nations,' the conclusion of which was drowned in applause."—County Express, March 11, 1905.

COLERAINE. "MESSIAH."

"Mr. Montague Borwell, now quite a favourite in the North of Ireland, sang 'But who may abide,' with excellent good taste, and 'Why do the nations,' with great mastery."—Belfast Evening Telegraph, March 16, 1905.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE. "HIAWATHA."

"Mr. Montague Borwell is a baritone vocalist who, it is sincerely to be hoped, will frequently appear on the local Philharmonic platform. He possesses a magnificent voice, fine presence, and truly sympathetic method, and his treatment of the 'Vision' was a fitting crowning point to a brilliant contribution."—Weston Mercury, May 13, 1905.

GLASGOW. "DREAM OF GERONTIUS."

"The soloists of last night did much for the performance. . . . The strong, telling voice of Mr. Montague Borwell came out well against the chorus in the priestly music of the first part, and as the Angel of the Agony, he was also eminently satisfactory."—Glasgow Herald, February 8, 1905.

AND

MISS WINIFRED MARWOOD

(Mrs. Montague Borwell)—SOPRANO.

Of the Royal Albert Hall, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace, and Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, &c.

BARNET. "REDEMPTION."

"Miss Winifred Marwood, to whom was assigned the taxing soprano solos, achieved a great success. The solo and chorus, 'From Thy love as a Father,' excited much enthusiasm, and an encore was demanded, but wisely declined."—Barnet Times.

SUNDERLAND. "ELIJAH."

"Miss Winifred Marwood is a talented vocalist, and her singing was one of the most pleasing features of the evening."—Sunderland Daily Echo.

DORKING. "BRIDE OF DUNKERRON."

"Miss Marwood created a most favourable impression in each of her solos, and was each time loudly applauded. She has a sweet, clear-toned voice, and her enunciation is excellent."—Surrey Advertiser.

COLERAINE. "MESSIAH."

"Miss Winifred Marwood, with a soprano voice of liquid purity, had a perfect conception of her part. She sang the pastoral music with a rare charm, and the difficult solo, 'Rejoice,' has seldom been sung with so much ability; the long, florid runs were taken with the ease and grace that denote a highly cultivated organ. Her delivery of 'I know that my Redeemer liveth' was one of the most beautiful items in the Oratorio."—Colrairie Constitution, March 18, 1905.

HEDDINGHAM. "CREATION."

"Miss Marwood, the possessor of a sweet and clear soprano voice, executed her parts in charming manner; her high notes being especially admired."—Halstead Times, May 6, 1905.

BEETHOVEN

NINE SYMPHONIES

BY

GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

PRICE, CLOTH, GILT, SIX SHILLINGS.

"I recognise it, without the smallest hesitation, as one of the most important and valuable among recent contributions to musical literature. . . . The best informed of professional musicians may learn a great deal about the master-works of Beethoven from Sir George Grove, whose wide reading and acute perceptiveness have enabled him to marshal an astonishing array of facts, and whose intimate acquaintance with the spirit of the master has qualified him to throw light upon pages which, to many, are still obscure. . . . I must be satisfied with the remarks already made, earnestly recommending all who recognise Beethoven's greatness as shown in his immortal symphonies to obtain Sir George Grove's volume, and walk in the luminous paths through which he is ready to conduct all who trust his guidance."—Daily Telegraph.

MISS FANNY DAVIES.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

The history of distinguished lady pianists may be said to begin with Nanette Stein (born 1769), the daughter of the celebrated pianoforte maker of that name. At the tender age of eight she played to Mozart, who criticised her performances in the following severe terms :

Whoever sees her and hears her without laughing must be as much of a stone (Stein) as her father himself. She sits right up in the treble, instead of in the middle of the instrument, so that she may be better able to move about and make grimaces. Her eyes roll, and she simpers and smirks. If a thing comes twice over, it is played slower the second time; and if a third time, it is slower still. The arm goes high up in the air when a passage comes, and the emphasis is given by the whole arm instead of the finger, clumsily and heavily. But the best of all is when, in a passage that ought to flow like oil, the fingers have to be changed; it makes no difference at all to her, but when the time comes, up goes her hand, and she begins again quite calmly; so that one is always in expectation of a wrong note, which makes the effect very striking. I only write all this to give you some idea of what clavier-playing and teaching may be brought to; I leave you to make your own use of the hints. Herr Stein is quite infatuated over his daughter; she is eight and a half years old, and learns everything by heart. She may turn out something; she has genius. (Otto Jahn's 'Mozart,' Eng. Trans., i. 361.)

The gifted little lady—who, by-the-way, was a grandmother of the late Ernst Pauer—not only survived this attack, but became a very clever woman of business. As Frau Streicher she on one occasion took charge of Beethoven's lodgings and clothes, which were in a deplorable state. Schindler relates that 'he (Beethoven) had neither a decent coat nor a whole shirt'! Frau Streicher and her husband made the composer comfortable by procuring him two servants, and in looking after his interests. To have had the honour of playing to Mozart and mending Beethoven's shirts are privileges which many a lady pianist might envy.

Another renowned pianist was Madame Oury (née Anna Caroline de Belleville), born 1808, who appeared in London during the season of 1831. The Harmonicon, in noting her performances, said that she 'galloped over the keys of the pianoforte, in a fantasia by Herz, but not with quite so much precision as we find in the self-acting instruments'! How different this reads from the kid-gloved criticism of to-day, with its pianola opportunities for comparison. Schumann makes some interesting remarks on her playing and that of his beloved Clara—the Queen of pianists. He says:

They should not be compared. They are different mistresses of different schools. The playing of the Belleville is technically the finer of the two; Clara's is more impassioned. The tone of the Belleville flatters, but does not penetrate the ear; that of Clara reaches the heart. Anna is a poetess; Clara is poetry itself.

Limiting the present survey to the first half of the last century, other foreign lady pianists of note were Madame Szymanowska, Madame Dulcken (sister of Ferdinand David), and Madame Pleyel. In regard to our own countrywomen, Mrs. Anderson (1790-1878) claims honourable mention in that she was the first lady pianist to play at a concert of the Philharmonic Society. This portentous event occurred on April 29, 1822, nine years after the Society had been founded. Miss Kate Loder (afterwards Lady Thompson), who recently died, and Madame Arabella Goddard are names of native performers who excelled in the artistic interpretation of pianoforte music. And now we have to consider the claims of a worthy successor to those already mentioned, in the person of the lady who forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Miss Fanny Davies was born on June 27, 1861, at Guernsey, where her parents—Birmingham folk—were temporarily residing. Her mother's father, John Woodhill, was an excellent amateur violoncellist who had played duets with old Bob Lindley. At the age of ten months the infant Fanny was taken to Birmingham to live with her aunt, Miss Woodhill, who kept a large and flourishing ladies' school in that city. The earliest indications of the child's musical capabilities were evidenced when the baby tapped the tea-tray to the rhythm of a polka which one of the schoolgirls was playing. Before she attained the age of two the precocious Miss Fanny went to the pianoforte and played by ear the opening bars of Haydn's 'Surprise,' with the following interpretation of the second strain of that familiar melody:

This F natural so worried the little creature that she simply howled, and would not be comforted until her aunt placed the child's tiny finger on the necessary black note.

As a mere baby aged three she could play (by ear) the treble part in pianoforte duets with her aunt. The Abbotsford Polka was a favourite piece in that duet repertoire, the young lady's rhythmical faculties being further developed as she grew older by her performance (as a solo) of the Merry Kittens (quadrilles). She received her first pianoforte lessons (at the age of five) from Miss Welchman, who taught the young ladies at the aunt's school. Her progress was so rapid that when only six and a half years old she played the whole of Beethoven's sonata in A flat (Op. 26), including the Funeral March—entirely from memory, but without octaves—at the Birmingham Town Hall. The occasion was a Bazaar held therein, the smallness of the child contrasting strongly with the vast building and the grand pianoforte upon which her little fingers played. No publicity was given to this achievement, but the little maiden reaped a rich reward in the approval of her aunt and her friends and in more tangible tokens of chocolates and a big doll.

'You must not play Beethoven, you must play Mozart,' said Mr. Charles Edwin Flavell to little Miss Fanny. A pupil of Aloys Schmitt, Mr. Flavell was a well-known professor at Birmingham. 'I should like to have a finger in that pie,' he remarked to the aunt of the 'pie,' with the result that, at the age of nine, Fanny Davies became Mr. Flavell's pupil. She also took harmony lessons from Mr. A. R. Gaul, who taught singing in the aunt's school. 'I owe a great deal to Mr. Gaul,' Miss Davies says: 'his lessons were very pleasant and interesting. One of his maxims I shall not forget: "So many of the greatest melodies are on next notes." As a girl of thirteen I took some lessons on the violin from Henry Hayward, known as the Wolverhampton Paganini, who frequently visited Birmingham. Under his guidance I first tasted the delights of ensemble chamber music. We used to play every classical thing—a Beethoven sonata every week, and so on, I playing the pianoforte and Hayward the violin. But please understand that I was never allowed to be exploited as a prodigy—in fact, except that Bazaar performance, I never played in public until I had passed my twenties. For a year or two I had delicate lungs, and was therefore compelled to remain indoors for one or two winters; but I used the time in assimilating all the music I could get hold of. I studied catalogues by the yard, worked through (by myself) all the pieces in Halle's 'School,' and steeped myself in the whole range of classical pianoforte music as well as operatic arrangements by Thalberg and Sydney Smith, which I thought very beautiful! A Broadwood grand pianoforte, given to me by my dear aunt, was a source of endless delight and of the greatest assistance during this period of self-teaching. I was continually picking up. At the Birmingham Festival of 1870 I had heard Madame Arabella Goddard play Mendelssohn's G minor concerto. I had learnt it then and wanted now to play it with a second pianoforte. When my friend and I sat down to play, we found that the old Bord was half a tone lower than my Broadwood, so I played the whole of the solo part in F sharp minor, while the other girl played the orchestral part in the original key.' 'Did you play the concerto in the transposed key from memory?' we ask. 'Of course I did: I have always played from memory, it is natural to me, and it is no trouble for me to play anything I know in any key.'

During various visits to London the subject of this sketch took some lessons from Charles Hallé. She also attended the recitals of Rubinstein and Hans von Bülow, following their performances with the music before her and marking the nuances, phrasing, &c., according to the interpretation of the player, using a red pencil for Rubinstein and a blue one for Bülow: 'but when I listened to Madame Schumann,' she says, 'I needed no pencil, for she played everything exactly as it was written.'

It was not until 1882 that circumstances permitted Fanny Davies to fulfil her heart's desire and study earnestly for the profession of music. On telling Hallé her plans he said, 'Then you must go to school.' To school she went by entering the Conservatorium at Leipzig, where she studied the pianoforte under Reinecke (who kept her chiefly to Beethoven) and Oscar Paul (who gave her a great deal of Liszt). Fugue and free counterpoint—'which Mr. Gaul had taught so well'—were discoursed upon by Jadassohn. 'I never regret,' she says, 'the year spent at Leipzig, with its ever-varied musical experiences, from the Gewandhaus concerts and meetings with Liszt and other celebrities, to the many endeavours to rehearse pianoforte concertos with the then curiously balanced students' orchestra of the Conservatorium—which often ended in Felix Weingartner playing second piano to my concerto and I the second piano to his, and dispensing with the band, for Weingartner was then a budding genius.'

But all the time she was at Leipzig—where she remained one year only—her heart yearned for her great ideal, Madame Schumann. She ventured to write to the Queen of pianists, who in reply said that in order to study with her she would have first to play to her, and if accepted enter the Hoch Conservatorium at Frankfurt. The time came, however, when Madame Schumann received Fanny Davies as her pupil—may we not now say, her most distinguished lady pupil? That was in September, 1883. At Frankfurt for nearly two years she studied fugue and composition under Dr. Bernhard Scholz, director of the Conservatorium, and the pianoforte with Madame Schumann.

On her return to England (in 1885) Miss Davies brought with her letters of introduction from Madame Schumann to Sir August Manns and the late Mr. S. A. Chappell ('Uncle Arthur,' of the Pops). Her actual first appearance in public was at the Crystal Palace on Wednesday, September 9, 1885, when she played the first movement of Beethoven's C minor concerto and Mendelssohn's Scherzo Capriccio in F sharp minor; but this was only in the nature of a trial performance, just to see what she could do. At the end of the concert

'dear old Manns' said: 'I shall tell the friend who recommended you that you do play very bad indeed!' That was only his fun, as he then and there engaged her to play at the first Saturday concert of the season, October 17, 1885, this being her actual début before any audience, English or foreign. She selected no less formidable praise with which the Press greeted her at that first appearance, THE MUSICAL TIMES joined its approving voice in the following terms:

A very favourable impression was created by a débutante, Miss Fanny Davies, whose pleasant touch, intelligence, and finished execution proclaim her to be a distinct acquisition to the ranks of legitimate, as opposed to phenomenal or eccentric pianists. Besides sustaining a test-piece than Beethoven's G major concerto, followed later in the programme by Schumann's Romance No. 2, in F sharp, and Graun's Gigue in B flat. Her success was undoubted, and from that time she has worthily maintained her position as a pianist of the highest rank. In the chorus of the solo part in Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G major (No. 4)—a work notable for its magical union of majesty and grace—Miss Davies contributed pieces by Graun and Schumann. It is worthy of notice that the cadenzas introduced by the performer in the first and last movements of the Concerto are by Madame Schumann, whose pupil we understand Miss Davies to be.

Concerning her first appearance at the Popular Concerts (on November 16, 1885), THE MUSICAL TIMES may be further quoted :

English music and musicians have enjoyed many triumphs of late, and another occurred on the 16th ult., when Miss Fanny Davies made her first appearance at these Concerts. The success she had gained at the Crystal Palace aroused high expectations, which happily were more than fulfilled. The young pianist has certainly had the best possible teachers in Mr. Charles Hallé, Herr Reinecke, and Madame Schumann, and the influence of the last-named great artist is strongly perceptible in her playing. There was very much to commend in her rendering of Bach's Chromatic Fantasia, though it was by no means a sensational performance. The passage writing and the fugue subject were brought out with beautiful clearness, and the original text was adhered to with praiseworthy devotion, considering that the work is now usually played in a modernised form. As an encore Miss Davies gave No. 7 of Mendelssohn's Characteristic Pieces with charming technique. She was enthusiastically received and her future seems secure.

There is no need to enlarge on the subsequent career of Miss Fanny Davies. Is it not known and read of all men? She has played at all the important concerts in London, including the Philharmonic, also in the English provinces and in Scotland; at the Leipzig Gewandhaus, Vienna Philharmonic, Hamburg Philharmonic, Berlin, Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Milan, Paris (Colonne and Lamoureux concerts), Budapest, and elsewhere. In 1893 she appeared at the Beethoven Haus Festival at Bonn, on which occasion she was elected a member of the Beethoven Haus, and at the Donizetti Centenary Festival, held at Bergamo in 1897. The distinction of the membership of the Academy of St. Cecilia was conferred upon her in Rome. On two occasions she had the honour of playing before Queen Victoria at Balmoral, and five times before Queen Margherita of Italy at the Quirinal.

She is always increasing her repertoire, which now consists of about 500 pieces—including thirty concertos. She has had the distinction of introducing the following compositions by Brahms : Intermezzi (Op. 116 and 117) for pianoforte, the clarinet sonatas and the clarinet trio, also the D minor sonata for pianoforte and violin, with Dr. Joachim, at Berlin. Of Dr. Joachim's friendship and inspiring influence Miss Davies speaks in terms of reverence and gratitude, for she can never forget the unfailing kindness shown to her by him (and Piatti) even in the days when she was a young and inexperienced artist. To return to her executive gifts. Versatility is a marked feature in her artistic equipment. She interprets new music (Sgambati and others) with the same intuitiveness and enthusiasm as she does old Netherlandish strains. And here we may quote the conclusion of a letter—dated 'Milan, January 25, 1905'—written to her by Signor Boito :

Merci pour les vieux Neerlandais, et pour le divin Chopin, et pour la 110 [Beethoven Sonata], et pour votre admirable Schumann, dont l'âme est passée dans votre âme. Enfin merci pour tout ; vous nous promettez de grandes joies musicales. Nous vous attendons avec impatience.

Au revoir dans un mois

Votre admirateur dévoué

ARRIGO BOITO.

Her most recent concert—Queen's Hall, March 7, 1905, was thus commented upon by The Times :

The finished art of Miss Fanny Davies, the participation of the London Symphony Orchestra, and the presence in the conductor's place of M. Edouard Colonne, made up a group of such attractions that a large audience was a matter of course in the Queen's Hall last night. The pianist played three concertos, of which one had never, so far as is known, been heard in England before. Yet it is a work of rare beauty, gentility and power, bearing the sign-manual of Mozart on every page, containing a slow movement of undying beauty, and a finale of light-hearted gaiety such as no one but Mozart has ever touched. It is in G major, and is numbered 453 in Köchel's catalogue. The cadenzas, quite possibly the composition of the player, were in admirable taste, and did absolutely nothing to impair the symmetry of the movements in which they occurred. The solo part and the accompaniments were alike perfectly played. In Brahms's D minor concerto Miss Davies's playing has an authority to which only a handful of pianists in the present day can lay claim; there is nothing in the work that escapes her interpretative insight, or for which her technical accomplishment is insufficient. Her dignity of style in this, and the sparkling brilliance of her playing in Saint-Saëns's G minor concerto at the end of the programme were equally striking. She has never played more finely, and she had a most enthusiastic reception.

As a teacher Miss Davies is in great request. Her vivacious personality, high artistic ideals, keen ear for tone; and faultless technique are combined in her tuition genius. One of her earliest professional pupils has, at our request, kindly contributed the following 'appreciation' of her much-beloved teacher :

The knowledge which Miss Davies imparted when I first knew her, so opened up a new world to me, that a note of enthusiasm was immediately struck which developed into chords of desire, followed by a great thirst for every lesson that followed, for I soon recognised that she had much to teach, no matter what master's works were being studied.

She has a great gift for making pupils think for themselves. Her standard allows of nothing but the best work one can give—not only in regard to technique, but in the interpretation of each particular composition. I can only say that what she has imparted to me has been invaluable to me in my career as a teacher.

Another pupil writes :

I can only say that I love my lessons and that Miss Davies so enters into the lesson she is giving as to make the pupil forget everything else but the music. She is very strict, but at the same time kindness itself, and she makes one feel that she is not only a teacher but a friend.

In regard to hobbies, Miss Davies is a great lover of nature; she is fond of travelling, art, and literature. The sister art of painting has also claimed her attention, and the product of her brush is evidenced in several excellent 'little bits' of water-colour.

As to her recollections of Brahms, may she not speak for herself? 'I had the good fortune,' she says, 'to see something of Brahms during his later years. I remember well my first impression of him. It was in Baden-Baden on a hot September day, when I was walking with a friend down a non-frequented road which we had chosen to avoid the fashionable Lichtenthalerallee.

On the other side we noticed a figure in shirt-sleeves carrying hat and coat, walking with head bent as if in thought, and with a swinging, almost rolling, rhythmical gait. Although seen from several yards, there was something different from other people in the general appearance of this figure. Suddenly it stopped, wheeled round, took out a red pocket-handkerchief and then stood at rest for some moments. By that time we had approached—there was no mistake—"It's Brahms!" I whispered, and it was. For sure enough, later in the day, that figure, now arrayed in a very loose coat, stood on the balcony of a comfortable inn with Clara Schumann and Joachim. I little thought when I saw the coatless wayfarer that I was that very afternoon going to hear the great master play his (then new) C minor trio with Joachim and Hausmann—besides his violoncello sonata in F; that Clara Schumann would sit by the pianoforte and turn for him; that he would play the trio from my copy on a cottage pianoforte in a little private room in the hotel. What sounds he brought forth from that modest instrument! What a touch he had! I remember how he turned round to Clara Schumann with "Ich mache schreckliche Geschichte, nicht wahr?" ("I compose terrible stuff, don't I?"), and how she replied, with a quiet nod, "Nein, schöne Geschichte" ("No, beautiful stuff"), and how I afterwards marked down in the copy every little detail I could remember of his own reading of that "schöne Geschichte." Later on, at Frau Schumann's request, to my surprise and delight, Brahms wrote a few lines on my copy in remembrance of that never-to-be-forgotten afternoon. Needless to say that I count them among my greatest treasures. After this I saw a good deal of the master at intervals; among other delightful times spending two memorable Christmas Days with him at the houses of mutual friends in Vienna—Frau Anna Franz, and Herr and Frau Dr. Fellinger, with both of whom he was very intimate, and quite at his best, often hearing him play, and on several occasions playing before him. Brahms was always most kind to me. The last time I saw him was when I had been playing in Vienna and Budapest. One winter afternoon, about five o'clock, I had gone up to his house in the Karlsgasse to say good-bye. I shall never forget that impression. The inner room in which Brahms was sitting was connected with the first room by a glass door which had no curtain. I hesitated some moments before entering the inner room, for the picture seen through the glass door arrested me. There sat Brahms on the sofa before his table, the full light of the lamp, in an otherwise dark room, thrown on his grand head, again bent, but this time he was intent on twisting cigarettes! "I always make my own," he said, and continued to do so while we sat and quietly talked, he apologizing for sitting in the place of honour—the sofa, and offering me his leather armchair, comfortable and simple like all his surroundings.

No better conclusion could be found for this biographical sketch of Miss Fanny Davies than a few words on her pupilage and intercourse with her revered teacher, Madame Schumann:

'Speaking as a reproductive artist and pianist, I must say that my own traditions come directly through Clara Schumann, and are therefore directly connected with that great renaissance of music so largely represented by the circle in which she moved—a circle made up of Schumann, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Liszt—and later, Joachim and Brahms. It is interesting to recall that Clara Schumann herself was the child of a period when the compositions of Haydn and Mozart were dominant factors, and when Beethoven was the innovator. Thus there flowed, through Clara Schumann's art, the uninterrupted stream of the world's great musical traditions. The basis of her teaching was balance, both in technique and in musical interpretation. Like all great artists she demanding the subordination of detail to the spirit of the whole. The greatest care had to be taken by her pupils to acquire the command of a pure legato, even in the most rapid passages. Is this legato now considered essential to beautiful playing, as it certainly was with the greatest pianists—Liszt and Rubinstein, for instance? We must not forget that Liszt, the maker of modern technique, developed even this technique out of the solid ground of the so-called 'old' (legato) school, for once he was a pupil of Czerny, as Bülow was a pupil of Friedrich Wieck, Clara Schumann's father and teacher. However complicated are the developments of technique, the foundation remains the same, and must do so, if the player is to produce beauty of tone and repose.

Clara Schumann's aim was to be technically perfect, but never to think too much of the instrument and too little of the music.'

'Can you give an instance of this?' we ask Miss Davies.

'Yes: at the last bars of Beethoven's sonata in C minor, Op. 10, No. 1, Madame Schumann exclaimed: "Very good, I see you want to show off your nice chromatic scales, but this is not the time or place for Glockenspiel; what about the left hand which must be played piano?" "Entbehren, sollst Du" was the thought immediately aroused. It was just this word "Entbehren" that was the keynote to her glorious teaching, for she never allowed a pupil to forget that in order to forego the "something," that "something" must first be there. Does it not seem as if there were nowadays a danger of forgetting all this—a growing tendency to restlessness and sensationalism—a gradual dying out of veneration? And if this is so, what is there to replace it? What has made England great in herself and in the council of nations is her steady development along the lines of definite traditions,—and is it not the same in art? I am convinced that veneration is an absolutely necessary element in the artistic as well as in the national life.'

A VISIT TO DONCASTER.

'From the beauty of the town, the salubrity of the air, the goodness of the roads, the delightful promenades, and from other advantages, . . . Doncaster may perhaps vie with any town in the kingdom, as a most desirable residence, not only for the affluent, but more particularly for persons of small fortune.' Thus wrote Dr. Edward Miller one hundred years ago. He goes on to say: 'Doncaster has never been what is usually called a trading town. Formerly it was rather noted for knitted stockings, and of late years several attempts have been made to establish manufactories of various kinds, but without success.' Again, in quite a Utopian strain: 'The inhabitants of Doncaster enjoy privileges which are rarely to be met with in any other country town. Here are no assessments to be paid for lighting or for paving the streets, the expense of both is defrayed by the Corporation. . . . No constable assessment is levied; and families are supplied with river water chiefly at the expense of the Corporation. Coals are cheap and servants' wages moderate.' Happy Doncaster! At that time the inhabitants numbered less than 6,000. What would the old organist-historian say to-day if he were to re-visit the town of his adoption? He would find that the population had increased from 6,000 to 29,000, and as to there being no manufactories in 1804, he would rub his eyes upon beholding the extensive locomotive and carriage works of the Great Northern Railway Company, at which upwards of 4,000 men are employed. Sic transit gloria mundi the composer of 'Rockingham' might, or might not exclaim, but he could not fail to be astonished at the methods of transit—railway and motor—unknown in his peaceful and less strenuous day.

To go still farther back than Miller, in the region of history, Doncaster was the ancient Danum of the Romans. Standing on the Roman road from York to Lincoln, it was a place of strategic importance; important it is to-day if we substitute railway for strategy, the town being situated on the Great North road leading from London to Edinburgh and beyond. A Roman votive altar, coins, and urns have been found which bear testimony to the antiquity of the place. Originally circumscribed by a moat, the town became the Dona Castre of the Saxons: in 1195 it was named Danecastre, and twenty years later Doncastre, from which its present designation is easily evolved. The Saxon Northumbrian kings formerly had a palace here, and it is not surprising to learn that the Danes frequently ravaged the place. After the battle of Marston Moor, Doncaster was for some time the headquarters of the Earl of Manchester, while its annual races in the month of September—first run so long ago as the year 1600—have given a certain fame to the town.

Doncaster has frequently been favoured with the visits of English monarchs. That of King John involved an expense to the town of £1 11s. 4d. for 'forty voltarii (game drivers), 178 greyhounds, and 23 dogs of moto, with Ferling, the huntsman.' Henry III., James I. (who attended a service in the church), Charles I., and Queen Victoria all honoured Doncaster with their regal presence, as have also four King Edwards, II., III., IV., and our own Most gracious Sovereign. When Cromwell favoured Doncaster with his presence he was

Not only the moral and spiritual welfare of the inhabitants seem to have been cared for, but the education of the rising generation enlisted the sympathy of a 'certain noble benefactor' in the person of one Thomas Simpkinson, mayor in 1541

Among quaint decrees that are to be found in the Corporation Records the following (dated 1617, or thereabouts) may be quoted:

Item. I gve towarde a foundacon of a Scoill in Doncaster aforesaid that it go forwarde, flou acres of medowe.

These 'flou acres of medowe' inauguated a fine field of educational enterprise fertile in results.

The musical aspirations of old-time Doncastrians were to some extent satisfied by the Mayor and Corporation. So far back as the year 1585 four waites were appointed who were to 'play about the towne every night between eight and nine of the clocke as they do in other places.' These roving musicians were evidently in request at nuptial celebrations, as it was decreed that 'they shall not receive at any wedding for their wages above 2s. 8d. and to divide the same indifferently amongst them.' Among the 'Ordinances for the good government of the town,' drawn up in 1617, the following has reference to the duties of the 'lower comon waytes' of Doncaster:

Item, it is ordered and agreed by the maior aldermen and capitall burghesses that there shalbe in this towne fower common waytes, and all of them to be parteners in all vayles and duties. And that they shall from henceforth have yearlye allowed them of this coporacon iijli towards buying them livery cootes of stanell and that they shall yearelie provide and weare their cootes orderley every Saboth and festiual day. And that they nor any of them shall goe oute of the towne either in christmas or any other tyme above three dayes without lycence first obteyned of the maier. And that they and everey one of them shall beginne their watches the Mundaye after Michaelmas day every yeare, and continew the same until Shrove tuesdaye following upon payne to forfeit for any of the offences for every tyme xs. And that they shall not directly or indirectly guide or conduct strangers from house to house to playe at men's houses. Provided if they misdemeane themselves in any respecte towards the maior aldermen and burghesses that then they shall lose their whole wages.

In 1806 the quartet was reduced to a trio of performers, and their salaries were advanced from £6 13s. 4d. to ten guineas per annum. Five years later it is recorded that 'the Corporation will not allow their going about playing in the streets at night,' but, apparently as some consolation for the prohibition of those nocturnal perambulations the salaries of the peripatetic musicians were 'augmented to twenty-five pounds a piece per annum.' As Mr. Tomlinson, the historian of Doncaster, facetiously remarks, 'the waits were evidently rising in the social scale'; however, they soon 'waited' no longer, as the Corporation, in view of a Municipal Reform Act, resolved (on February 17, 1832) 'that the present wait be discontinued, and that £20 be given him in addition, to become due next quarter day.' This solitary wait took his full score of sovereigns, and thus ended the old institution of the Corporation waits of Doncaster.

Later on there seems to have been a Corporation band—another instance of music being subsidized by a municipality—as the records contain this entry under date May 13, 1763:—

Ordered, that if Mr. Miller, the organist, will undertake to instruct the Corporation band of music to play upon the hautboy and bassoon, the Corporation will be at the expense of the instruments.

The visitor to Doncaster to-day will be struck by the well-built nature of the town, of which its High Street is a mile long. The fine old elms which, like sentinels, line the broad and level road leading southwards to the race-course will also claim his attention. But the centre of attraction is the fine Parish Church, known to all daylight travellers on the East Coast Route to the North. This stately fane is a modern edifice only half-a-century old.

One of the late Sir Gilbert Scott's finest churches, it stands on the site of a former noble building which was unfortunately destroyed by fire on February 28, 1853. This terrible calamity evoked widespread sympathy. A subscription list, headed by Queen Victoria, was at once opened to provide the necessary funds for the re-building. On October 14, 1858, the new church was consecrated, its entire cost being about £45,000. In several details of its architecture Sir Gilbert Scott had the judgment of Lord Grimthorpe (then Mr. E. Beckett Denison, Q.C.), the designer of 'Big Ben,' who died the other day: an ample commentary on the architectural character of the building will be found in his 'Lectures on church building.' On approaching the building—one of the finest parish churches in England—one cannot fail to be impressed by its noble tower, 170 feet high. The repose and dignity of the lofty interior, with its clustered columns with graceful foliated capitals, is very striking in its Gothic splendour. The great height of the nave would seem to require greater length, but this defect is neutralised by the grandeur of the whole design. The church is 169 feet long, 65 feet broad in the nave (including the aisles), and 91 feet along the transepts. Its great East window is of fine proportions and of vast dimensions, measuring 49 feet, and costing £1,050. The pulpit, 'almost a preaching gallery,' was the gift of the late Lord Grimthorpe, and is one of the largest of modern, if not of ancient English pulpits. For the rest the reader is referred to the accompanying photographs of this beautiful sanctuary.

Returning to matters more musical perhaps than the waits, there are some interesting references to the organs of Doncaster Parish Church. First in regard to the former building. The parish register, under date of July 26, 1567, mentions the burial of James Dempsey, an organ maker, who had probably made the first organ, as in the earliest existing 'Church Reckonyng' the Churchwardens in 1569 charge the parish with 13s. 4d. 'for certain chests and an organe case.' This was doubtless a very primitive instrument, one that was capable of being manipulated by the parish clerk, as indeed it was about the year 1600. Some years later an instrument of better quality and a performer of higher attainment appear to have been provided, as in 1641 the name of 'Richard Routledge, organist, deceased,' is recorded in the burial registers.

An important event occurred in the year 1739, when a Faculty was obtained for the erection of John Harris's fine instrument, and it was agreed 'that a separate loft should be built at the East end of the church over the carved oak screen at the entrance of the chancel.' Through the kindness of Mr. Thomas Anelay, Vicar's Churchwarden, we have before us a copy of the agreement, dated March 19, 1738, for the building of the organ. It is between 'John Harris of Red Lyon Street in the parish of Saint Andrew Holborn in the county of Middlesex' and the vicar and churchwardens of Doncaster. In this document worthy John Harris undertakes to erect 'a Tuneful and compleat organ in one handsome front and a case' for the sum of £525. (The receipt for the payment of this sum is signed by John Byfield, acting, by power of attorney, for John Harris.) The great organ contained 12 stops, which included two open diapasons and two trumpets; the choir 'or Quoir' organ, 4 stops, stopped diapason, flute, fifteenth, and bassoon; the eccho organ, 6 stops, including 'one cornet of three rows.' In regard to the last-named section of the instrument, John Harris thus expatiates upon its capabilities and charms: 'The Eccho Organ to contain the following stops which Harris's organ originally stood in a gallery 'in the middle isle of the chancelle'—i.e., upon the chancel screen; but in 1822 it was removed to the West gallery. Thirty years later another removal was being made—to the North chapel of the chancel—when this fine instrument was burned with the church. John Stanley had so high an opinion of its splendid tone that he told Dr. Miller he thought that every pipe of the reeds was 'worth its weight in silver.'

The present organ is a magnificent instrument—five manuals and twenty-five stops on the pedal!—by the celebrated German firm of Schulze, of shall eccho and swell to express passion in degrees of loudness and softness, as if inspired by human Breath.' One must assume that all these conditions were fulfilled as, at the opening of the instrument (in 1739) a sermon was preached by a curate named Fawkes, who, after having waxed eloquent in praise of sacred music, referred to the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psalter, dulcimer and all kinds of musick, and turning towards the new organ apostrophized it thus—'But O what!—O what!—what shall I call thee, thou divine Box of Sounds?'

Paulinzelle, the builders of the organ in Leeds Parish Church. As our illustration shows, it occupies nearly the whole of the North chapel. This furnishes a most spacious location—in fact, to walk about the instrument is almost like perambulating a roomy house. The space occupied by the organ is 31 ft. wide by 26 ft. deep; in height nearly 40 ft. The swell-box encloses a space 18 ft. wide, 12 ft. deep, and 11 ft. 6 in. high, as large as a good-sized room. In playing upon this splendid Schulze organ one cannot fail to be charmed by the loveliness of its flue-work tone: it is a noble instrument, worthy of the building within whose walls it stands. The following is its specification :

The organ is blown by a Shipley gas engine.

In 1895 Messrs. Abbott & Smith, of Leeds, supplied new pneumatic action (partly tubular) and a fresh blowing apparatus. In the latter connection it causes some amusement to inspect the treadmill method of blowing the organ adopted by Schulze, a method which is still available if the engine should at any time fail. This treadmill method is thus described by Mr. William Shepherdson, in his valuable pamphlet on the Doncaster organ, published in 1862. Under the heading 'The bellows, reservoirs, and wind trunks,' he says:—

At the rear of the organ are two tiers of diagonal bellows, each ten feet long and five feet broad. Each tier contains six bellows, the thin ends of which run into the principal trunks. To fill them with wind each bellows is connected by a wheel, pulley and rope with a panel which slides perpendicularly in the case. In each panel there is a foot hole, into which the attendant blowers place their feet, the weight of the men of course bringing down the slide and, as a natural consequence, raising the upper board of the bellows and filling it with wind. When the blower has brought down one slide he steps on to the next, until the whole twelve are brought down, when the organ is supposed to be full of wind; but if the organist is playing at the time, the blower will find that by the time he has reached the last bellows of the series the first has been nearly exhausted, so that he must commence again, and by these means the supply of wind is kept up. When the full organ is played upon, three or four blowers find plenty of work to keep the slides down. This work is performed in a long, narrow passage behind the organ, provided with handrails, &c., to enable the men to do their work conveniently.

The organistship of Doncaster Parish Church was for many years a Corporation appointment. The 'Courtiers' (Records) of the Corporation, under date of May 16, 1739 (when the Harris organ was built) contain this entry:

Ordered that an instrument in writing be prepared against the next meeting for settling £20-a year, to commence from such time as an Organ shall be erected in the Parish Church Doncaster, for the use of the Organist who shall from time to time be appointed by the Corporation.

On January 11, 1740, William Tireman was appointed organist. He soon left, however, on being elected organist of Trinity College, Cambridge, and (subsequently) to the University. After a Mr. John Maddock (who held office from 1741 to 1755), John Camidge, of York, the first of that distinguished family of church musicians, became organist of Doncaster. A pupil of Dr. Greene and (it is said) of Handel, John Camidge soon returned to York on being appointed organist of the Minster in which he had sung as a chorister.

We now come to the best known organist of Doncaster, his most beautiful hymn-tune named 'Rockingham' having made him known in all the churches. His appointment is thus recorded in the 'Courtiers' of the Corporation on August 19, 1756:

Mr. Edward Miller appointed Organist of the Parish Church of Doncaster, at a salary of £30 a year, on the recommendation of Dr. Nares, formerly of York Cathedral, but then of His Majesty's Chapel Royal.

Edward Miller, the son of a pavior at Norwich, was born in that city in 1735 (some biographers give the year 1731, but the later date is probably more correct). The boy was put to his father's business, but preferring music to stone-masonry, he ran away from home. He then became a pupil of Dr. Burney, with whom he formed a lasting friendship. As a boy Miller played the flute in Doncaster's orchestra. He relates the following characteristic anecdote of the great composer:

About the year 1753 a minor canon of Gloucester Cathedral offered his services as a singer, which Handel accepted, and he was employed in the chorusses. Not satisfied with this dept. Handel acceded to the Canon's request that he shd sing a solo, so that his voice shd appear to better advantage. But he sang so badly that the audience violently hissed him. When the performance was over, by way of consolation, Handel made him the followg speech: 'I am sorry, very sorry for you indeed, my dear sir; but go back to your church in de country. God will forgive you for your bad singing; dese wicked people in London, dey will not forgive you.'

Miller held the organistship of Doncaster till his death on September 13, 1807. He was buried in the North chancel of the old church of which he had been 'chief musician' for upwards of fifty-one years. As already stated, his salary was at first £30, but the 'Courtiers' of the Corporation record (on April 8, 1767) an increase of emoluments in these words:

The salary of Mr. Miller, the Organist, is increased to 40 guineas, in consequence of the dearness of provisions and of his business as a teacher of music having declined.

In 1774 he was admitted a Freeman of the Borough without fee, and in 1786 he took the degree of to have discovered Herschel, the great astronomer. In this connection he may speak for himself:

It will ever be a gratifying reflection to me that I was the first person by whose means this extraordinary genius was drawn from a state of obscurity. About the year 1760, as I was dining with the officers of the Durham Militia, at Pontefract, one of them informed me that they had a young German in their band, as a performer on the hautboy, who had only been a few months in the country, and yet spoke English almost as well as a native: that, exclusive of the hautboy, he was an excellent performer on the violin, and, if I chose to repair to another room, he should entertain me with a solo. I did so, and Mr. Herschel executed a solo of Giardini's in a manner that surprised

Doctor of Music at the University of Cambridge. 'Miller,' says Robert Southey, 'was a warm-hearted, single-hearted, right-hearted man; an enthusiast in his profession, yet not undervaluing, much less despising, other pursuits.' 'His company,' says another biographer, 'was much sought after, as he was an agreeable, well-bred man, and his conversation abounded in anecdote and apt quotation.' He had literary gifts, several theoretical and literary works being the product of his pen. His 'History of Doncaster' (1804) remains as a tribute to his literary and antiquarian attainments. He claims me. Afterwards I took an opportunity to have a little private conversation with him, and requested to know if he had engaged himself to the Durham Militia for any long period? He answered 'No; only from month to month.' 'Leave them, then,' said I, 'and come and live with me. I am a single man, and think we shall be happy together; doubtless your merit will soon entitle you to a more eligible situation.' He consented to my request, and came to Doncaster. It is true at that time my humble mansion consisted of but two rooms; however, poor as I was, my cottage contained a small library of well-chosen books, and it must appear singular that a young German, who had been so short a time in England, should understand the peculiarities of our language so well as to adopt Dean Swift as his favourite author. . . . I soon lost my companion, as his fame was spread abroad. . . .

About this time a new organ was built by Snetzler for Halifax Parish Church. Mr. Herschel and six others were candidates for the organist's place, and they drew lots how they were to perform in rotation. My friend Herschel drew the third lot—the second performer was Mr. (afterwards Dr.) Wainwright, of Manchester, whose finger was so rapid that old Snetzler ran about the church exclaiming, 'Te level, te level! he run over te key like one cat; he vil not give my piphes room for to speak.' During Mr. Wainwright's performance I was standing in the middle aisle with Herschel. 'What chance have you,' said I, 'to follow this man?' He replied, 'I don't know; I am sure my fingers will not do.' On which he ascended the organ loft, and produced from the organ such a full volume of slow, solemn harmony, as I could by no means account for. After a short extempore effusion of this character, he finished with the Old Hundredth tune, which he played better than his opponent had done. 'Aye, aye,' cried Snetzler, 'tish is very goot, very goot indeet; I vil luf tish man, for he gives my piphes room for to speak.' On my asking Herschel by what means he produced so uncommon an effect, he replied, 'I told you my fingers would not do it,' and, producing two pieces of lead from his waistcoat pocket, he said, 'One of these I placed on the lowest key of the organ, and the other on the octave above: thus, by accommodating the harmony, I produced the effect of four hands instead of two.'

It will be remembered that those were pre-pedal days in regard to English organs. Herschel was duly appointed, but shortly afterwards settled at Bath, and the musician has long been forgotten in the astronomer.

Dr. Miller's views on the psalmody of his day are instructive and interesting. Concerning congregational singing, he says:

If any one should step into a parish church while the psalm is singing, would he not find the greater part of the congregation totally inattentive? Irreverently sitting—talking to each other—taking snuff—winding up their watches, or adjusting their apparel.

Again:

It is a disgrace to the members of our Established Church, that Dissenters of various denominations should be more devout in performing this delightful part of their duty. They seem to make music an important object; and perhaps more people are drawn by their attractive style of singing than by any other cause whatever. In parochial psalmody, no difficult music ought to be used. The tune should be so simple and easy that all the congregation may readily join in this essential part of their duty.

In regard to church choirs, he says:

No encouragement is given in this church (Doncaster) to a detached set of singers, who are so frequently permitted in our villages to burlesque music, by squeezing through their noses compositions which they call ju-gues, to the amazement and derision of the sensible, unemployed part of the congregation. In Doncaster church, eight children, with good voices, are taught by the organist, or his deputy: who attends one evening in the week for that purpose. These children are paid by the parish; and their voices, united with the organ, prove a sufficient guide to the rest of the congregation.

And then as to the accompaniment of psalm-tunes he recommends 'that there should be a short shake between each line of the old melodies, and a little silent pause between each line of the new, where these do not break off the connection of the words.'

In or about the year 1790 Dr. Miller published the following work:

THE PSALMS OF DAVID for the use of Parish Churches. The words selected from the version of Tate and Brady by the Rev. George Hay Drummond. The music selected adapted and composed by EDWARD MILLER, MUS. DOC.

London: Printed for the author and sold by Broderip and Wilkinson, Haymarket, &c. Price 12s. 6d.

This book owed its origin to the unsatisfactory state of psalmody prevalent in churches during the 18th century. At that time the parish clerk in most churches chose the psalm to be sung 'to the praise and glory of God.' He considered himself a much more important official than the organist, and the only communication he held with Dr. Miller was to let him know the tune he should play, and how often to repeat it! 'Strange absurdity,' says Miller. 'How could the organist in this degrading situation properly perform his part of the service?' It so happened that one Sunday the clerk gave out some verses which were either ridiculously inapplicable to the services of the day, or bore some accidental or ludicrous application, as to cause many of the congregation to smile. Thereupon the vicar told Miller that in order to prevent any such occurrence in future, he would make a selection of the best verses in each psalm from the authorized version of Tate and Brady, and arrange them for every Sunday and festival throughout the year, providing he, the organist, who was perfectly qualified for such a task, would adapt them to proper music. This proved to be the greatest service that was ever rendered to Dr. Miller in the whole course of his life, for, through the vicar's influence, the King and the Archbishop patronised the work, of which nearly five thousand copies were subscribed for. At Ramsey, in the Isle of Man, a public subscription was raised for 'a large Psalmodic, or Barrel organ, to be erected in the church to perform all the tunes in Dr. Miller's Selection, with additional interludes and voluntaries of his adoption.'

Miller's book is interesting in that it contains the first appearance of his familiar and devotional tune 'Rockingham,' wherein it first appeared in the following form :

ROCKINGHAM. L.M.

Part of the melody taken from a hymn tune.

Largo con affetto.

The name of Dr. Edward Miller is always given as the composer of 'Rockingham,' but it will be observed that he states, 'Part of the melody taken from a hymn tune.' 'From what tune?' is a very natural question, to which no satisfactory answer has hitherto been returned. 'Rockingham' is nearly always headed Largo con affetto. It appears eight times in the book and once in the appendix—nine times altogether: in the key of E flat three times, in E four times, in F twice, one of the last-named settings being a three-part arrangement. The following four-part version shows that Dr. Miller could write melodious inner parts, just as Dr. Hopkins did in later years :

Con affetto.

The pitch variants of the tune are just such as any experienced organist would make use of in accompanying a congregation under various conditions. 'Rockingham' derives its name from the Marquis of Rockingham, twice Prime Minister, and Miller's patron. At the Marquis's death, in 1782, the Doncaster organist wrote a poem entitled 'The Tears of Yorkshire,' of which 600 copies were sold at York Minster on the day of the interment. The organists in succession to Dr. Miller have been Isaac Brailsford (1807-1835), Jeremiah Rogers (1835-1879), and his son, Mr. R. M. Rogers, who retired in 1904. 'Jerry' Rogers—as Dr. Hopkins used to call him—and his son held the organistship between them for seventy years.

The present holder of the office is Mr. Wilfrid Ernest Sanderson, Mus. B., a former pupil of Sir Frederick Bridge, for whom on several occasions he deputised at Westminster Abbey. He has held the following organ appointments: St. Stephen's, Walthamstow (at the age of seventeen, in competition against 96 other candidates), All Hallows', Southwark, and St. James's, West Hampstead. In addition to his degree of Mus. B.—which he took at Durham at the age of twenty-one—Mr. Sanderson holds the diplomas of the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists and the Licentiatehip of the Royal Academy of Music. An excellent player and skilful choir trainer, he has already shown his complete fitness for so important an appointment as organist and choirmaster of Doncaster Parish Church.

For kind help in the preparation of this article the writer is indebted to Mr. Thomas Anelay, Vicar's Churchwarden and a genial and well-informed antiquary; to Mr. Wilfrid E. Sanderson; and to Mr. Ove Thomsen for his excellent photographs.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

OUR NORTHERN CHOIRS.

AN APPRECIATION BY FREDERICK CORDER.

I am getting to be an elderly musician now and have naturally outlived many of my youthful enthusiasms. When, as a boy, I first heard Mozart's overture to the 'Flauto Magico' come pealing and rippling from Covent Garden orchestra I went into hysterics. When I first heard the sublime strains of the 'Parsifal' prelude well up from the mystical abyss at Bayreuth the emotion was again too great to be endured. But now the greatest orchestral triumphs have not power to stir the pulse of the experienced musician, whose thoughts are critically intent upon comparing one splendid rendering of a work with another a little more or less fine. Such an one goes up to Yorkshire or Lancashire to a competition of choirs with condescending feeling of toleration in his heart for these worthy provincials who have probably never been in London in their lives and therefore can hardly know what good music means. A very short experience in the North is sufficient to make him heartily ashamed of this attitude and to make him understand the real meaning of Sir Edward Elgar's words that 'the true musical centre of England is not to be sought in London, but much farther North.' Really, we Londoners need not be so absurdly conceited over Queen's Hall and Covent Garden. Outside these two establishments what has this mighty concourse of five millions or so to show in the way of music?

Let the blasé musician in want of a new sensation just pay a tenth part of what would take him to Bayreuth, and let him spend a couple of days at one of these wonderful gatherings I speak of. There he will hear not only the best of good music, but music of a class to which he is probably an utter stranger. Beyond this he will have such a surprise as to the possibilities of choral performance as no words of mine can hope to describe. For instance, a dozen or more mixed-voice choirs—all restricted to the manageable number of fifty to sixty members, and therefore carefully selected—enter for a prize. No. 1 comes up and sings faultlessly; No. 2 comes up and sings faultlessly. The only perceptible difference is in a greater or less sonority of the individual voices. The Londoner thinks 'When have I ever heard part-singing to compare with this?' He expresses this opinion, perhaps, to the judge, who smiles, and says, 'Wait till you hear some of the really crack choirs.' Presently one comes, and the effect is something different altogether. The rendering cannot be more faultless than that of the previous choirs, but this one neither gets flat nor sharp, it is like some transcendental harmonium—I can find no other comparison—of immutable pitch and with all degrees of light and shade, of accent and fall, precisely the same in each individual voice. This is what it is, reduced to cold fact and phrase, but what words can describe the effect of this upon the nerves of the hearer? It is the charm of the really superb soloist magnified to sixty dimensions, with the added power of beautiful harmony. A part-song of perhaps mediocre musical merit when thus performed would surely make its writer believe himself a genius, but when a piece written by a really good composer who understands his effects is so treated, the heart of the hearer must be made of flint to withstand it. I have heard choirs of mill-girls that made me wonder what was left for the archangels; I have heard choirs of rough men brought to the fine edge of a solo quartet of trombones, but that crowning glory of the North, the well-selected mixed choir carefully trained by some local conductor, can touch the heart and compel the unwilling tear in a way that nothing else can. O young composers, young composers whom I love so dearly! Waste not your lives in ineffectual rivalry of the great deeds of Wagner and Strauss. Go North, and learn what a marvellous field there is for you to work in if you only will. Here is England's strength and beauty: why is not the fact better recognised? Shame upon those critics who neglect their duty! Shame upon us composers who do not lay our best efforts at the feet of these genuine enthusiasts! And shame, above all, upon those—myself among them—who feebly assert that 'choral music is so limited' or 'has had its day.' One visit to a northern Festival will eradicate that belief, at least. To end with a not very novel simile, I feel like a child playing with pebbles upon the seashore while a whole ocean of music lies unexplored before me.

RUGBY SCHOOL AND ITS MUSIC.

There is a little town, within short space
Of England's central point, of various brick
Irregularly built, nor much adorn'd
By architectural craft—save that, indeed,
As you approach it from the south, a pile
Of questionable Gothic lifts its head
With somewhat of a grave collegiate air,
Not unbefitting what, in truth it is,—
A seat of academic discipline
And classical education :—at its base
Stretches a broad expanse of verdant turf
With stately trees bestudded—the resort
Of schoolboys from studious toil released,
And bent on sport athletic.

JOHN MOULTRIE.

The dawn of Elizabethan literature coincides with the foundation of the great School located in Shakespeare's county of Warwickshire. Four hundred years ago there was born—presumably at Rugby—one Lawrence Sheriffe. He became 'a citizen and grocer of London' and lived and carried on his business in Newgate Street. This worthy citizen of credit and renown was a staunch adherent of the Princess Elizabeth, and moreover supplied her household with spices. When she came to the throne he was made an esquire and received a grant of arms, of which the following is the technical description :

Azure, on a fesse engrailed between three griffins' heads, erased, or, a fleur-de-lis of the first, between two roses gules. Crest, a lion's paw, erased, or, holding a bunch of dates, the fruit of the first in the pods argent, the stalks and leaves proper.

Sheriffe's arms—of which we give an illustration—have naturally been adopted as the arms of the school (Rugby) which he founded. They are not derived from some fabulous ancestor, but have reference to his trade as a grocer—e.g., griffins, legendary guardians of the treasures of the East, whence the spices came, and the lion's paw holding the dates in which Sheriffe probably did a roaring trade at his Newgate Street shop. That he rapidly rose in the social scale is implied by the fact that in 1562 he exchanged New Year's gifts with good Queen Bess! On that occasion her most gracious Majesty sent him 'one gilt salt with a cover weighing 7 oz.,' in return for his present of a 'sugar loaf, a box of ginger, a box of nutmegs, and a pound of cinnamon!' In 1567 Lawrence Sheriffe died, and was buried in Christ Church, Newgate Street. In his will he devised the rent of his parsonage and farm at Brownsover [near Rugby], with all his property at Rugby, and one third of his Middlesex estates, together with £50 for building purposes and £100 to be invested in land for the site of the school and to provide for the maintenance of its headmaster and for the building of almshouses.

He had already taken steps, during his lifetime, to found a school at Rugby, which was to be called the 'Free School of Lawrence Sheriffe, of London, Grocer'; a seminary that was 'to serve chiefly for the children of Rugby and Brownsover, and next for such as be of other places therunto adjoining.' Thus is outlined the foundation of a local school in an obscure country town, but which in the course of time has become one of the greatest of the great Public Schools of England, with a splendid reputation that has reached unto the ends of the earth.

Unlike Eton and Winchester, Rugby cannot boast of picturesque old school buildings. The earliest structure is of the year 1809, built at a period when England was in a very bad way architecturally. It is interesting, however, to visit the room in which Dr. Arnold took his sixth form. Here many a boy has left his mark on the woodwork covering the walls, and the interest of the room is enhanced by the large window containing the names and portraits of former headmasters, a happy thought of Dr. Percival, now Bishop of Hereford, who presented this appropriate memorial of his predecessors in the headmastership. Previously to the year 1821 the boys attended service in the Parish Church. The School chapel then built (in 1821) was a poor building, and as years went on proved to be totally inadequate. It gave place to a more imposing sanctuary, designed by Mr. Butterfield, erected in 1872 and enlarged in 1898 (see the photograph on page 381). In entering the chapel one naturally turns to the Mecca of Rugby, the simple stone which covers the grave of Thomas Arnold. Many stained glass windows, mostly memorials, add to the beauty and dignity of the building, which is so spacious as to accommodate all the boys in the School—now numbering 571—and the masters. The organ is a four-manual instrument (the solo organ is prepared for only) by Bryceson, and contains a thirty-two-foot stop on the pedal. Its action is electric; the keyboards, which have black naturals and white sharps, are placed in a small gallery on the north side of the chapel, as shown in the illustration. In addition to the School-House and chapel already referred to, the remaining buildings constituting the School proper (apart from the various Boarding-houses) are the Gymnasium (1872), the Swimming Bath (1876), the Observatory (1878), the Temple Reading Room and Art Museum (1879), the New Quadrangle (1885), New Big School (1886), the Drawing School (1888), the Chemistry School (1904). New Big School, where concerts are given, is provided with a good, three-manual organ by Bryceson and contains a fine collection of portraits of former headmasters and a huge bust of Arnold. A statue of a most distinguished Rugbeian, Tom Hughes of 'Tom Brown's Schooldays' fame, graces the forecourt of the Temple Reading Room. One other building must be mentioned, that which does duty for the physical science and music schools, a shed-like structure hardly worthy of its surroundings. But the time will doubtless come when Rugby will fall into line with Harrow, Winchester, and Clifton in providing an adequate music-school building: in the meantime it is quite open to any wealthy Rugbeian to hand down his name to posterity by providing the necessary funds for the erection of so desirable a building.

To write about Rugby without mentioning football would be regarded as an unpardonable offence, but in the present instance it may suffice if we state its origin as recorded on a tablet affixed to the wall of the Close—the playground of the School. It reads thus:

This stone
Commemorates the exploit of WILLIAM WEBB ELLIS who with a fine disregard for the rules of football as played in his time first took the ball in his arms and ran with it thus originating the distinctive feature of the Rugby game.
A.D. 1823.

If the School buildings are not hoary with antiquity, Rugby can certainly boast of many distinguished headmasters and alumni. As to the former the name that pre-eminently comes first and foremost is that of Dr. Arnold, who, during his headmastership,—1828 to 1842—made the reputation of the School. A man of immense power and the highest ideals of life and duty, Arnold had the tact to make himself loved and feared. The high tone and moral influence which he infused into the School may be estimated in a remark he made when he had been compelled to send away several boys: 'It is not necessary,' he said, 'that this should be a school of 300, or 100, or of 50 boys; but it is necessary that it should be a school of Christian gentlemen.' To Arnold succeeded Tait and Temple (both subsequently Archbishops of Canterbury)—Goulburn, Dean of Norwich, coming between them—Dr. Jex-Blake (now Dean of Wells), and Dr. Percival (now Bishop of Hereford). The present headmaster, the Rev. Dr. H. A. James, appointed in 1895, worthily upholds the fine traditions of the School over which he so ably presides.

The list of old Rugbeians includes some distinguished names: e.g., statesmen, Lord Goschen and M. Waddington; divines, Deans Stanley, Vaughan and Bradley; in literature, Walter Savage Landor, A. H. Clough, Matthew Arnold, Tom Hughes, T. H. Green, and the author of 'Alice in Wonderland,' C. L. Dodgson ('Lewis Carroll'); tragedian, Macready; musicians, Sir Herbert Oakeley and Mr. C. A. Barry, in addition to a well-known amateur, Mr. C. Stuart-Wortley, M.P.

Music at Rugby School is under the capable administration of Mr. Basil Johnson, B.A., who has held the office of 'chief musician' for eighteen years. A son of a former Dean of Wells, he was an academical clerk at Magdalen College, Oxford, during the regime of Sir Walter Parratt, under whom he subsequently studied the organ at the Royal College of Music. Mr. Johnson has an excellent staff of assistant music-masters in the persons of Mr. A. H. Castle, M.A. (also a former student at the Royal College of Music), Mr. G. H. Hidden (organist of Rugby Parish Church), Mr. F. Yuille-Smith (violin), Mr. A. J. Priestley (violoncello), while Mr. E. R. Stebbing is the bandmaster of the brass band attached to the Rifle Corps. About 150 of the 570 boys in the School learn instrumental music, the majority favouring the pianoforte; but eight are studying the organ, two of these pupils being sufficiently advanced to take the chapel services; twenty take the violin, and six the violoncello. There are also classes each week for harmony and counterpoint, and ensemble classes for the practice of string quartets and other chamber music.

The School choir consists of 125 voices—110 boys and 15 masters—distributed thus :

Trebles	41
Altos	24
Tenors	14

Total 125

This vociferous body undertakes double duty, in that it forms the chapel and concert choir. The chapel services are congregational. The Public School edition of the Cathedral Psalter (as marked by Dr. James, the headmaster, for occasional unisonal singing) is used, in addition to a hymnal (words and music) specially compiled for the School. There is a short organ recital after the Sunday morning service which is much appreciated and enjoyed. The School orchestra, numbering thirty performers—twenty-four boys and six masters—is a flourishing institution : it includes among the ranks of the 'cellists Mr. A. E. Donkin, one of the House-masters and the bearer of an honoured name in musical circles. Choir and orchestra are 'keen on music,' and their zeal is often rewarded—in the case of the orchestra by so important a concession as the privilege of rehearsing once a week during school hours, and in the case of the choir by the remission of certain work each week and by being excused saying 'lines' at the end of the term. Sectional rehearsals are also held—trebles, altos, tenors and basses—whereby efficiency is gained and enthusiasm fostered. Three concerts are given every year, the most important being that at the end of the Christmas term. Here is the programme of their last music-making :

PROGRAMME OF THE CHRISTMAS CONCERT, 1904.

Carol ... 'See amid the winter snow' ...	Goss
Concerto for Four Pianofortes and String Orchestra (played by four boys) ...	Bach
Song ... 'Die beiden Grenadiere' ...	Schumann
Violin Solo ... 'Torch Dance' ...	German
Part-song... 'For the New Year' ...	Mendelssohn
Pianoforte Solos (a) 'Warum' ...	Schumann
(b) 'Fransk Serenade' ...	Grieg
'Blest Pair of Sirens' ...	Parry
Waltzes for String Orchestra ...	Brahms
Part-song... 'Vineta' ...	Brahms
Pianoforte Solos (a) Prelude in A flat ...	Chopin
(b) Gigue in G ...	Scarlati
Song ... 'The Pilgrim of Love' ...	Bishop
Part-song... 'Early one Morning' ...	Old English
Songs ... (a) 'Homeward' ...	Grieg
(b) Heart's Melodies, No. 1 ...
Overture in C major (in the Italian style) ...	Schubert

This programme speaks for itself ; but attention may be directed to the fact that Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' was sung, that four boys played Bach's concerto ; that the accompaniment of the carol was scored for orchestra by a boy ; that two boys undertook the organ-playing throughout, supplying the missing 'winds,' &c. ; and that the headmaster sang as a second bass in the chorus !

A professional orchestral concert is given annually. The nature of the fare which is set before the boys

THE REV. DR. H. A. JAMES,

HEADMASTER OF RUGBY SCHOOL.

(Photograph by Mr. E. H. Speight, Rugby.)

"An interesting and valuable feature of the musical life at Rugby is the 'Singing competition,' in which every year the various Houses test their vocal attainments in friendly rivalry. The rules governing this quartet competition are thus formulated—

HOUSE SINGING CHALLENGE CUPS.
CONDITIONS.

I. Vocal Quartets.

1. This competition is confined to members of the choir, orchestra, and brass band.

2. Four voices only from each house may compete. S.A.T. and B.

3. Each quartet will sing (a) a four-part composition chosen by the choirmaster, (b) an additional one at discretion chosen by themselves with the approval of the choirmaster.

4. At the competition each four will be required to sing without accompaniment and without help.

5. In awarding the Cups the attention of the judge will be specially directed to—

- | | |
|----------------------------|------------------------|
| (a) Accuracy of parts. | (e) Expression. |
| (b) Good intonation. | (f) Quality of tone. |
| (c) Time. | (g) Balance of voices. |
| (d) Articulation of words. | (h) General style. |

II. School Songs.

1. This competition is open to all members of the School.

2. Not less than twenty nor more than thirty from any house to compete. Any combination of voices admissible.

3. Each house will sing a selected song from the School song book.

4. The songs shall be sung by all voices throughout in unison.

5. The same accompanist shall play for all.

6. The attention of the judge shall be specially directed to—

- | | |
|---------------------------|----------------------------|
| (a) Good intonation. | (c) Articulation of words. |
| (b) Spirit and unanimity. | (d) Quality of tone. |

For both Contests.

1. The choirmaster will go at least once to each house to rehearse the unison song and the quartet : but beyond this no professional help may be obtained by any house in preparation for the competition.

2. The competition to take place towards the end of the Easter term.

3. The winning house in each to retain the Cup or Cups until the next competition.

4. A judge shall be nominated by the House-singing committee, whose decision shall be final.

5. The songs (quartets and school songs) may be taken in any key.

Hatton's 'Spring Song' was the test-piece on the last occasion (in March); the 'additional pieces' were :

When the rosy morn ...	Sydenham.
The moon shone calmly bright ...	Hatton.
Drink to me only with thine eyes ...	Old Melody.
O who will o'er the downs ...	Pearsall.
The harp that once thro' Tara's halls ...
Little maiden mine ...	Jan Gall.

The refining influence of such a competition, and the keenness to excel which it stimulates, cannot be overestimated.

To return to the individual instruction in instrumental music. The list of pieces played at the last examination (July, 1904) is a highly creditable one. Pianoforte solos ranged from Bach to Rachmaninov, and included Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Chopin and Brahms. Organ students played Bach, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Brahms, and Rheinberger; while the violin and violoncello selections were equally good. One boy played Stanford's Intermezzi for clarinet; another performed flute solos by Radoux and Henselt; while a third among those youthful wood-winders favoured the examiner with Mendelssohn's 'Song without Words' (No. 4), and a March by Rosey, played on the piccolo!

The following is last year's scheme of the music examination for prizes :

For all instruments.—(a) Boys must be prepared to play not less than two and not more than three works in contrasted styles. They must not repeat their pieces from former examinations. Candidates must also be prepared with the following :

Pianoforte.—(b) All major and minor scales, both hands together in octaves.

(c) A scale of staccato double octaves from the wrist in key of C, and a chromatic scale of similar octaves.

(d) Sight-reading.

Violin and Violoncello.—(b) Major and minor scales up to four sharps and four flats.

(c) Portions of the orchestral music for the term.

(d) Sight-reading.

Organ.—(b) To improvise and modulate.

(c) To transpose.

(d) Sight-reading.

Wind Instruments.—(b) The following scales: C, F, B flat, G, D, and their relative minors.

(c) Portions of the Orchestral or Brass Band music for the term.

(d) Sight-reading.

The Music Paper (for prizes, first and second) is not intended for the harmony classes only.

Any boy may compete for the prizes.

The paper consists of (i.) Questions in musical notation, &c., and (ii.) Alternative questions in theory or general musical knowledge.

MR. BASIL JOHNSON, B.A.

ORGANIST AND DIRECTOR OF THE MUSIC.

The advance that has been made in music at public schools during the last few years is as gratifying as it is astonishing. At Rugby excellent work was done by the former music-master, Mr. Edwin Edwards, still a highly respected resident in the town, to whom all honour is due for his zealous labours during twenty-two years. The work is most efficiently carried on by Mr. Basil Johnson, who is keenly interested and unsparing in his devotion to it. If only he could get his music school! And perhaps an outsider, in the spirit of friendly criticism, may venture to suggest that—at all events among the junior boys—a sight-singing class, to form a part of the school curriculum, with compulsory attendance thereat, should be introduced. Its advantages would be great, not only in regard to the choral work of the school, but as forming a valuable asset in educational equipment.

Occasional Notes.

Are there not, then, two musics unto men?—

One loud and bold and coarse,

And overpowering still perforce

All tone and tune beside ;

Yet in despite its pride

Only of fumes of foolish fancy bred,

And sounding solely in the sounding head :

The other, soft and low,

Stealing whence we not know,

Painfully heard, and easily forgot,

With pauses oft and many a silence strange

(And silent oft it seems, when silent it is not),

Revivals too of unexpected change :

Haply thou think'st 'twill never be begun,

Or that 't has come, and been, and passed away :

Yet turn to other none,—

Turn not, oh, turn not thou !

But listen, listen, listen,—if haply be heard it may ;

Listen, listen, listen,—is it not sounding now ?

ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH.

The Folk-Song Society seems to have entered upon a new lease of life under the energetic regime of its new honorary secretary, Miss Lucy Broadwood. The Journal of the Society recently issued contains a large number of folk-songs that have been noted down in Somersetshire and North Devon by Mr. Cecil J. Sharp. This enthusiastic collector of old ditties reaped his harvest from singers who were well over sixty years of age—one of them being seventy-five, another eighty-two, and one still older, a venerable soprano or contralto of ninety-one! 'Tis never too old to sing! Mr. Sharp says: 'Of the 500 airs that I have collected, 125 are modal tunes. Of these one half are in the Mixolydian mode, while the remainder are equally divided between the Dorian and Æolian modes. I have not noted a single tune in the modern minor scale.' The words of the songs printed in this issue (No. 6) of the Journal are for the most part very poor, but the melodies are certainly worth preserving. The songs are annotated by Mr. Sharp, Mr. Frank Kidson, Mr. Fuller Maitland and the hon. secretary. A list of 'works useful for the study of the folk-song of Great Britain and Ireland' adds to the value of the publication.

The appointment of the Rev. A. A. David as headmaster of Clifton College is a matter for sincere congratulation. He plays the viola, and his name may be found as a performer on that instrument in the programmes of the Oxford University Union, of which he was a member during his tutorship at Queen's College, Oxford, and, as a matter of fact, he was a 'recruiting serjeant' for that club. It may therefore be taken for granted that in his new sphere of work Mr. David will foster the cause of public school music and thus carry on the good traditions of Clifton, to which we had the pleasure of referring in an article on the College in our April issue. Cliftonians, masters and boys, are to be warmly congratulated upon their new 'Head.'

Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, organist of Gloucester Cathedral, has been created a Doctor of Music by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the interesting ceremony of conferment taking place at Lambeth Palace on May 20. Dr. Brewer is warmly to be congratulated upon an honour so well deserved.

HANDEL'S WATCH, NOW IN THE POSSESSION OF DR. W. H. CUMMINGS.

Handel's watch, a time-honoured and interesting relic of the great composer, has recently been acquired by Dr. W. H. Cummings. Its history may be briefly told. On the death of Handel the watch became the property of George Amyand, one of the executors. It subsequently passed into the possession of William Snoxell, an amateur violinist in the orchestra of the now defunct Sacred Harmonic Society, who resided in Charterhouse Square. At his death it was sold, on July 21, 1879, by Messrs. Puttick & Simpson, at their auction rooms, the purchaser being Miss Henrietta M. Mackenzie, also a member of the Sacred Harmonic Society. This lady constantly wore the watch; and while she allowed it to be exhibited on more than one occasion, she refused all offers of would-be purchasers, even when the sum of £150 was named; moreover, she was most anxious that it should remain in England. Ill health has now induced her to part with the watch, its purchaser being Dr. Cummings. No better custodian could be found for this precious treasure. In passing into the hands of the Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, the watch joins the company of Handel's autograph will, the death mask taken by Roubiliac for the monument erected by him in Westminster Abbey, and other Handelian relics.

The watch, of which we give photographs, bears on its face the inscription 'Golling, Augspurg,' the name and address of the maker, this information being duplicated on the interior works. Traditionally said to have been presented to Handel by one of his admirers in the year 1745, it is a fine specimen of repoussé art in silver. On the back is a representation of a musical performance, the group of figures including a conductor with baton in hand standing in the centre, while near him is a lute player, a spinet player seated at his instrument, and a performer on the bass-viol. Two other figures complete the picture—one probably a singer, the other a gentleman in courtly costume, holding in one hand a flagon and in the other a salver upon which stands a glass. Beneath this musical group is engraved 'G. F. HANDEL,' a spelling of the composer's name which should be noted.

The development of the musical competition movement throughout the country has ample and gratifying testimony borne thereto in the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. The article by Mr. Frederick Corder, fresh from the Morecambe Festival, on 'Our Northern Choirs,' is one that will be read with interest as being the conviction of a competent critic and a musician of wide experience. The condensed reports of the numerous gatherings that have taken place bear witness to the good work that is being done. These specially prepared reports will be found on page 393 et seq. We may add that an important meeting and conference of the Association of Musical Competition Festivals will be held at Messrs. Broadwood's, Conduit Street, on Tuesday morning and afternoon, June 27, under the presidency of Lady Mary Trefusis.

Mr. Mark Hambourg recently offered a prize of ten guineas for the best short pianoforte solo,—prelude, nocturne, barcarolle, romance, or scherzino—and he is so well pleased with the result of the first competition that he promises to make it an annual fixture. The adjudicators—Miss Fanny Davies, Mr. J. S. Shedlock and Mr. Percy Pitt—awarded the prize to Mr. Frank Bridge for his 'Capriccio,' a composition which Mr. Hambourg intends to perform at his recitals. No fewer than 96 compositions were sent in—60 by male composers and 36 by the gentler sex, the ages of the competitors ranging from ten to twenty-six years, the latter being the age-limit according to the conditions. Two consolation prizes, of three guineas and two guineas respectively, were awarded—to Mr. Watling, of the Royal Normal College for the Blind, and Mr. Felix Swinstead, of the Royal Academy of Music.

At a recent school examination held in Natal, the following information was given concerning a certain tyrannical ruler:

Nero was the greatest Roman Emperor who gave violin lessons.

Sir Edward Elgar's oratorio 'The Apostles' is making its way on the Continent. Performances are already announced at the Singakademie, Berlin (conductor Herr G. Schumann), the Singakademie, Danzig (under Herr Bünden's direction), at Amsterdam and at Gera; while 'The Dream of Gerontius' is to be given at Breslau. As the music of Dvorák is so little known in Germany, special interest will be created in a stage representation of 'St. Ludmila,' to be performed at Königsberg in September next.

Two interesting performances of 'Don Giovanni' are to be given at the Vienna Opera House, under the direction of Herr Mahler. The first will be similar to that at Prague, when the work was produced in that city on October 29, 1787; the other in the form in which it was afterwards given in Vienna. The Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung, by-the-way, refers to the autograph score of 'Don Giovanni' as being in the possession of Madame Viardot-Garcia, who, in her will, has bequeathed it to the Paris Conservatoire de Musique. As a matter of fact, however, the autograph was presented by that distinguished lady to the Conservatoire many years ago, where it is naturally regarded as a very precious treasure.

Quiet preparations have been in progress during several years for a complete edition of the works of Joseph Haydn, and at last definite steps have been taken at Vienna towards the consummation of so desirable a proposal. A conference has been held at the Opera House between Haydn specialists and a representative of the firm of Breitkopf & Haertel, of Leipzig. A commencement will be made next year, and within a period of from ten to fifteen years the whole edition will be issued.

Local poets are variously inspired. They 'burst into poetry' on all sorts of occasions, however much anyone may be averse to their verses. But at no time is their muse more awakened than when a subject presents itself for apostrophic adulation. Then they display their rhyming magniloquence in bathetic versification. Such an instance is recalled by the death, recorded in another column, of Mrs. Sutherland, the 'Yorkshire Queen of Song.' She was an immense favourite in her native county, and whenever she appeared crowds would flock to hear her mellifluous voice. At York, on one occasion, the local Milton was so enraptured by the lady's vocalization that he gave vent to his feelings in these lines:

Sweetest songstress—Prima Donna—
Queen of the seraphic sphere—
Yes! "I'll follow thee" when, on a Visit, thou art warbling here.

What enchantment, charming syren,
Lingers on those lips of thine;
Hearts would melt, tho' made of iron,
Touch'd by melody divine.

Philomel would cease to warble,
List'ning to thy dulcet strain;
Handel, from his sculptur'd marble,
Into life would start again.

Horn-player, who has been dining not wisely but too well, to anxious amateur conductor:
'Don't you say anything to me, or else I'll follow your beat.'

The conclusion of Sir George Grove's analysis of Brahms's First Symphony will be found on p. 397.

Church and Organ Music.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS AND CHANTS.

It is not surprising that the great composers, being foreigners, did not enrich the smaller forms of English Church music. Even Mendelssohn, who knew England so well and was quite familiar with the services at St. Paul's Cathedral and other London churches, had to confess his ignorance of a long-metre tune. When, in 1841, Henry Edward Dibdin, of Edinburgh, was compiling his 'Standard Psalm Tune Book,' he asked Mendelssohn for a contribution thereto. The composer responded by sending 'a little prelude for the organ,' saying: 'I was sorry I could not write exactly what you desired me to do, but I do not know what a "long measure psalm tune" means, and there is nobody in this place [Leipzig] at present to whom I could apply for an explanation. Excuse me, therefore, if you receive something else than what you wished.'

There are, however, instances of original contributions to the aforesaid 'smaller forms' by the great masters. Mozart, as a little boy of nine years, composed a short anthem, or introit, to the words 'God is our refuge and strength.' This, his only composition to English words, he wrote at the British Museum, where the autograph is now preserved, on the occasion of his visit to our National Library in July, 1765. From his long residence in England one might expect that Handel would have enriched the church-song of the people to a greater extent than he did. His only original creations of that nature are the three hymn-tunes set to Charles Wesley's words, and of which the composer's autograph copies are among the treasures of the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge. One of this trio of Handelian tunes has found its way into many modern hymnals, where it is named 'Gopsall,' after the Leicestershire seat of the composer's friend and patron, Charles Jennens. Mendelssohn wrote a common-metre tune for 'The National Psalmist,' compiled in 1839 by Charles Danvers Hackett, of Wakefield. It is in the key of C minor and set to the words 'Defend us, Lord, from shame,' these words doubtless having been sent to the composer by Hackett.

But if we seek in vain for original chants by the great composers, it may not be without interest to point to some instances of adaptations from the works of Handel, Beethoven, Spohr, and Mendelssohn. Nearly all psalters and collections of chants contain this Handelian strain:

This chant is an adaptation, by William Knyvett, from the duet in Athaliah, 'Joys before our eyes appearing.' The late J. C. Marks, of Cork, similarly adapted 'Where'er you walk' (from Semele), and the Rev. G. Heathcote adapted the duet 'Thrice blest be the King' (Solomon). Mention must also be made of a chant arrangement of the Dead March in Saul which, by a stroke of genius, someone assigned to the words 'Come, let us join our cheerful songs'!

It is not easy to trace the source of a single chant (in E, or E flat) adapted by James Turle from Beethoven; but no such difficulty exists in regard to the following effective double chant which Goss derived from the slow movement of the A major symphony :

Sir John Stainer chanted—if the word may be allowed—the lovely melody of the Adagio in the Sonata Pathétique. Here it is :

It first appeared in 'The St. Paul's Cathedral Chant Book' (No. 63), where it is assigned to Psalms 60 and 61.

Spohr seems to have furnished a happy hunting ground for chant adapters, as there are at least seven examples said to be derived from his works. The best known of these are the themes of 'All glory to the Lamb that died' and 'Blest are the departed,' both from 'The Last Judgment.' Two adaptations from Mendelssohn—one of them from the 'Elijah' chorus 'Open the heavens'—must be added to our list, which is by no means put forward as being complete.

Considering the frequency with which Wagner is played in churches nowadays, it is surprising that no one has chanted some of his themes. But his time may come, and also, perchance, Richard Strauss.

A NEW ANTHEM BOOK.

There was a time when 'human hymns,' not to say organs, were—to put it mildly—tabooed in the services of Presbyterian churches in Scotland. That was not so very long ago; but now, thanks to the generosity of Mr. Carnegie, organs are rapidly finding their way into kirks that were formerly organless; and the time may not be far distant when hymns and chanted Psalms will to a large extent supersede the singing of the Psalter as rhymed by Francis Rous. As for anthems, they were simply anathematised, and even when, in their simplest form, they became 'authorised for use,' they were designated 'Sentences.' Now all that is changed; anthems, no longer under sentence of being excommunicated, are sung to the edification of the worshippers and the distinct improvement of the service of praise in Scottish churches.

A further and, we may add, a very remarkable proof of the changed order of things in Scotland is furnished by a book now before us entitled 'The Anthem Book of the United Free Church of Scotland,' which Messrs. Novello have just published. A quotation from the Preface to the book—which, be it noted, is 'Issued by authority'—will serve to show its origin and scope :

After the union of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches in 1900, a desire was expressed that a Book of Anthems should be prepared for use in the congregations of the United Church, and accordingly, in 1902, the General Assembly remitted to the Praise Committee 'to prepare and issue an Anthem Book for use in congregations.'

In carrying out this remit the Committee have judged it expedient to restrict the collection to anthems in the rendering of which the congregation, as well as the choir, may take part. They have endeavoured to provide an adequate supply of material suited to the needs of the many congregations of the church where it is desirable that the music employed should be of a somewhat simple nature; but they have also included compositions presenting greater degrees of difficulty to meet the requirements of congregations of higher musical attainments.

The collection is now issued by the Committee in the fervent hope that its use may stimulate devotion, and add variety and interest to the service of praise.

All the claims set forth in the Preface are fully met in this most comprehensive collection of 167 anthems. There are a few—only a few—that in our opinion might very well have been omitted; but it must be borne in mind that there are many tastes and capabilities that have to be considered, and that a book like this must be largely educational in its purport. Some of the best known names in English church music—e.g., Goss, Hopkins, Ouseley, S. S. Wesley and others—are represented in these pages, which even contain an example from Palestrina. Six anthems have been specially composed for the book, among the contributors being Mr. Myles Foster, Mr. Josiah Booth and Professor Prout.

A few words may be said as to the setting forth of the music in these 480 pages. Those who have had experience in working similar anthem books—the vocal parts of which are mostly printed in short score—have met with serious hindrances at their choir practices owing to various typographical shortcomings. Music-printers, with a laudable desire to make their work look 'nice,' are sometimes prone to forget the practical requirements of those who sing and play; after all, music is not published for show in glass cases, but for use. In this collection of anthems great attention and care have been paid to such important matters as the clear and distinct printing of the words in close proximity to each of the voice parts, when the latter do not move together; the printing of the organ accompaniment on a separate stave whenever that seemed desirable in the interests of clearness; the duplication of expression marks as aids to intelligent and devotional interpretation of the music; and there are other advantages which, it is hoped, will tend to increase the practicability and add to the usefulness of the book. Various settings of the Canticles are included—among them Smart's Te Deum in F, Dykes's in the same key, Goss's Benedictus in A, Stainer's Magnificat in F, &c.—while a Tonic Sol-fa edition, under the experienced translatorship of Dr. W. G. McNaught, has been issued.

Although this collection of anthems has been prepared for use in the United Free Church of Scotland, it may safely be assumed that its merits will cause the book to find its way into other churches, especially among the Nonconformist community south of the Tweed.

A 'LARNED' EPITAPH.

The following two-versed poem records the virtues of Samuel Leek, who died April 13, 1729, aged 46 years. It is inscribed upon a stone, 'erected by his Scholars of Harpole,' in Harpole Church. Above the epitaph is the musical notation of 'Psalm 23, Meeter,' therefore, by inference, Mr. Leek was the parish clerk and chief musician of the above Northamptonshire sanctuary. The stanzas read :

He larned singing far and near Full 20 years or more ;
But fated Death hath stopt his breth,
And he can larn no more.

His scholars all that are behinde
Singing he did unfold,
Exhorting all their God to minde
Before they turn to molde.

The Rev. W. Garrett Horder, of The Manse, Ealing, Editor of 'Worship Song,' writes :

In your commendatory notice of 'Worship Song' you express a preference for the old over the new tunes. In relation to this I should like to make two remarks: (1) New tunes were absolutely needed, since many of the hymns in 'Worship Song' had never been provided with tunes, nor were there any in existence of their metres, or, if there were, the accents were not suited to these new hymns; (2) It is quite natural to prefer the old to the new in tunes, but it is needful to remember that the old tunes now so loved were new once, and only use has made them loved. I venture to say that even Dr. Dykes's tunes at first were not appreciated—indeed, we know they were criticised unfavourably. Some very competent critics who have carefully examined the new tunes in 'Worship Song' declare many of them to be equal to those of Dr. Dykes. They do not scruple, for example, to declare that Mr. Henry Baker's tune 'Procter' to 'The way is long and dreary' is far finer than Dr. Dykes's to the same words, since that tune in the first two bars is identical with the old tune 'Missionary.' All new tunes as well as new hymns, even the noblest, have had a hard fight for existence, but we should have been in a poor way both as to words and music if all new things had been met with the remark 'the old is better.'

[With reference to the above letter, it is an obvious truism that new tunes are needed for new hymns of unusual metres, including those lyrics that are misfitted when they are perforce put into the straight jacket of a hymn-tune. It is also true that 'old tunes now so loved were new once'; but we do not agree with Mr. Horder that 'only use has made them loved.' These cherished strains came into the world healthy with melody and harmony, and the tunes at once made their way into the affections of the people; and they were singable, which is more than can be said of all recently composed hymn-tunes. We fear that not a few of these new compositions will share the fate of hundreds of old tunes that have passed into oblivion. As in most things, the survival of the fittest here applies; and while time alone will definitely settle the question of fitness, it is not difficult for one of long practical experience in congregational singing to tell whether certain tunes will live or whether they will soon give up 'the hard struggle for existence.' To compare one single tune with another associated with the same words, or to say that Dykes's tunes were criticized unfavourably on their first appearance, is rather begging the question. Looking at the matter from a practical point of view, one has only to carefully examine modern hymnals to find that the majority of their new tunes are failures in that they do not meet the requirements of the great congregation.—THE WRITER OF THE NOTICE.]

Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was sung at Hornsey Parish Church on May 10, the band and chorus, numbering 130 performers, being under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Baker, with Mr. Herbert J. Baggs at the organ.

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.

The oratorio service—one of an interesting series—held on May 4 was of special importance in that a new sacred cantata, entitled 'The Abode of Worship,' by Dr. H. C. Perrin, organist of the cathedral, was performed for the first time. The work, in which the plain-song melody 'Pange Lingua' is introduced, appears to have made a favourable impression, being devotional in feeling and furnishing evidence of sound musicianship. The cantata, of which the words are by Mrs. Hemans, is laid out for a mezzo-soprano soloist (Miss Alice Venning), chorus and orchestra, and occupies about half-an-hour in performance. It received an excellent rendering under the direction of the composer, who held sway over a band of fifty performers and a chorus of 150 voices. The remainder of the service included performances of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and the last movement of Beethoven's C minor symphony.

Mr. C. J. Dale has been presented with two water-colour drawings and an illuminated address bound in morocco on resigning the post of choirmaster of Holly Park Wesleyan Church, Crouch Hill, the duties of which he has efficiently and genially discharged during the past ten years.

Mr. William Angus has resigned the office of organist of All Saints' Church, Petersham, near Sydney, South Australia, which he has held with distinction for the past eighteen years.

In the article on Castle Rising and Sandringham, which appeared in the April number of THE MUSICAL TIMES, the writer inadvertently omitted to state that in all the three churches referred to—Castle Rising, West Newton, and Sandringham—the organs are built by Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons.

AN OLD MUSICAL DIRECTORY.

A Musical Directory of the year 1794! Let us take a few peeps at its pages. Although an English book, and published in London, a few names of foreigners are included therein. The most distinguished is the following:

Haydn, Dr. Joseph, Composer, Pia Forte, Prof. Con, Oper, Sol Con.—No. 18, Gt Pullney-Street, Golden-Square.

Concerning above abbreviations we shall have something to say farther on. Two other eminent names are to be found in Schubert, one a trombone player living in Soho, the other a Wagner, whose entry reads thus:

Wagner, Violin, Con, Que Ba, Abb.—Buckingham-House.

Here are four pianists of mark:

Clement, Muzis (sic), Composer, Piana Forte, Pro Con, &c.—Upper Marylebone-Street.

Cramer, J. B. Pia Forte.—Titchfield-Street.

Dusseck (sic), Pia Forte, Prof. Con.—No. 67, Dean-St. Soho.

Hummel, Master, Soprano, Pia Forte, Sol Con, Ora Col Th, Abb.

Only twolady violinists figure in these eighty-four pages. Madame Gautherot, who played at Salomon's concerts conducted by Haydn, and a Madame Hartog, who lived at No. 12. Leadenhall Street. The address of Signor Viotti is given as 34, Wells-Street, Oxford-Street. The great opera singers Mesdames Mara and Storace have a whole alphabet of abbreviations after their names:

Mara, Madame, Soprano, Acad, Con, Abb, Prof Con, Oper, Dru La Th, & Ora C G.—No. 25, Queen-Ann-Street, East.

Storace, Signora, Soprano, Acad, Con, Prof Con, Oper, Abb, Dru La Th.—No. 36 Howland-Str. Tottenham Ct. Road.

'Howland Street,' by-the-way, is a somewhat suggestive thoroughfare for a singer's residence. A quartet of composers are to be found under the letters S and W:

Shields (sic), William, Violin, Viola, Composer, Ro So Mu, Prof Con, Oper, Kin Ba, Lady's con, Abb.—Goodge-Street, Tm Ct Road.

Spofforth, Reingale (sic), Organ, Composer, Tenor, Con, Cov Ga Th & Ora, Abb, Teacher.—James-Str. Westminster.

Stevens, Richard, Composer, Organ, Ro So Mu, Orgt Temple Chu.—Lambeth-Walk.

Webb (sic), Samuel, Senr. Composer, Organ, Prin Bass, Ro So Mu, Ana So, Abb.—No. 1, Great-Square, Gray's-Inn.

The name of Goss occurs four times, including a 'Master Goss' and a 'Master Goss Junr.', all of whom resided at Salisbury. A trio of organists are directorised thus:

Jacobs, Benjamin, Organ, Tenor, Ora D L, Abb, Orgt

Bentick Cha.—No. 13, Queen-Street, Seven-Dials.

Shrubsole, William, Organ, Alto, Pia Forte, Teacher,

New Mu Fu, Lo Ac So, Sur Cha So, Acad, Ora D L, Abb, Orgt Spa Fields Cha.—No. 13, Great-Sq.

Gray's-Inn.

Smart, G. T. Harpichord, Violin, Bass, Orgt St.

James's Cha, Oxf Me 1793, Con, Cha Ro Ch, Acad.

No. 331, Oxford-Street.

The first of these became organist of Surrey Chapel and a Bachist brother of Samuel Wesley; the second is the composer of the tune 'Miles's Lane'; and the third developed into Sir George Smart, Thackeray's 'Sir George Thrum.'

Niceties of location did not seem to trouble Mr. Doane, the compiler of this Directory, as three names have no other address than 'Italy'; nine have 'Lancashire' only, two 'Yorkshire,' and one 'Cheshire.' There are no fewer than thirteen names of musicians residing at Philadelphia. They seem to have formed a little colony of singers and players in the Quaker city where, so early as the year 1749, one 'John Beals, music-master from London,' advertised himself as 'teacher of the violin, hautboy, flute, and dulcimer,' and professed himself ready to play at balls and entertainments.

A few amateurs find a place, e.g., the Duke of Leeds, as 'Vice Presi of Ro So Mu,' and the Earl of Uxbridge, as 'President of Ro So Mu'; but it is difficult to account for the inclusion of Mr. J. Shade, a Bill-Sticker, except that 'Dru La Th' follows his name. Among some oddities in the entries is the name of one Courtney, a player on the 'Bag and Union Pipes' (Was he a Scotsman?); that one Sutton, a bass, resided at the 'Black Dog, Oxford-Market'; and that a Mr. Hindmarsh lived at 'Hampstead Common' (not Heath). That ten Sharps are to be found in a Musical Directory is not altogether surprising, and the following entry, more especially by reason of its abbreviations, must be given in full:

Perry, Musical Glasses, & Horn, Sad We Th, Ed & Ba Th.

The reader may have been puzzled, if not amused, at some of the abbreviations in the above extracts, which have been copied literatim et verbatim from the Directory. They are so numerous and so complicated that two entire pages of the book are devoted to their elucidation. Here are a few specimens:

Apo Ga -	-	Apollo Gardens
Ba -	-	Bath Theatre
Cho Fu -	-	Choral Fund
Ed -	-	Edinburgh Theatre
Kin Ba -	-	King's Band
Lo Ac So	-	Long Acre Society
Mad So -	-	Madrigal Society
Man Me -	-	Manchester Meeting
Ora C G	-	Oratorios Covent Garden
Pro Con	-	Professional Concerts
Ro So Mu	-	Royal Society of Musicians
Sad We Th	-	Sadlers Wells Theatre
Tit Cha So	-	Titchfield Chapel Society
Wind Ch	-	Windsor Choir

We may return to this interesting book again, especially in regard to the various musical societies, concerts, &c., recorded therein; meanwhile we desire to acknowledge the kindness of Mr. Robert Marr, of Edinburgh, for placing his copy of the Directory at our disposal for the purposes of this article.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED IN THE YEAR 1844.

THE MUSICAL TIMES is the oldest English journal devoted to music and musicians; moreover, its existence has exceeded that of any other musical journal ever issued in this country. Started in June, 1844, it first appeared in the form of a modest sheet of eight pages; but in the intervening sixty years it has, like Topsy, "grewed" to about seventy pages every month.

Biography has been a special feature during recent years. Upwards of seventy Biographical Sketches, with special supplementary portraits, have appeared since July, 1897. These articles have been received with much favour not only at home and abroad, but in Britain beyond the seas. English and foreign musicians of eminence, contemporary and bygone, have been included in this large gallery of MUSICAL TIMES Biographical Sketches: the subjoined list of names speaks for itself.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES WITH SPECIAL PORTRAITS THAT HAVE APPEARED BETWEEN JULY, 1897, AND MAY, 1905.

Illustrations have become an important and almost indispensable adjunct of present-day periodicals. This much-appreciated feature has of late been considerably developed in the pages of THE MUSICAL TIMES. The articles on English Cathedrals and College Chapels have furnished scope for the pictorial embellishment of the descriptive matter, by "Dotted Crotchets," relating to these interesting subjects. The following places of interest have been included in the survey:

This illustrated series will be continued, and also the articles on important musical libraries, public and private.

The survey under the heading Church and Organ Music has been greatly extended. The aim has been to provide matter that shall be both interesting and of practical helpfulness to those who officiate in "Quires and places where they sing."

The old-established characteristics of THE MUSICAL TIMES have been brought up to date. The "Occasional Notes" covers wide range of subjects, and records of music-makings in various centres of musical activity are supplied by the leading writers on music abroad and in the Provinces. In the "Answers to Correspondents" section, no pains are spared in furnishing satisfactory replies to the questions asked, even though the interrogations be, as they often are, posers.

Reference may be made to the music—anthems or part-songs—appearing month by month, and to other well-known features of this old-established journal. THE MUSICAL TIMES has a large circle of friends and well-wishers in various parts of the world; and the many gratifying tokens of appreciation that are constantly being received, not only by letter but by frequent quotation in the Press, act as a stimulus to the Editor to increase the brightness of its pages and to make the paper more acceptable in the future even than in the past.

THE MUSICAL TIMES is published on the 1st of every month. Price 4d. Annual Subscription, post-free, 5s.

Musical Competition Festivals.

The musical competition movement continues to expand, and it bids fair to exert considerable influence over the progress of music in England. Probably it serves the requirements of country districts more than it does those of cities and towns. Anyhow, these competitions for their own sake need not be valued very highly. But it is another story when, as a means to an end, they transform unmusical countryside districts into centres of musical life and activity. Everyone familiar with the work of the great majority, if not all the competition schemes now so common up and down the land will agree that prize-winning is subordinate to the idea of learning something from others, or it may be of teaching others, and of getting properly acquainted with good music and standards of execution, to say nothing of the invaluable social side of the propaganda. In scarcely any other way than through these schemes can the amateur conductor get object-lessons in the alphabet of his task. Then again the hitherto unknown and unsuspected real talent of a choir-trainer can rarely find proper recognition except at such gatherings. They are then a school of music for the people. The competitive instinct is strong, and it is a beneficial stimulus to the best work; we have to make full use of it, and do what we can to keep it in right channels.

It is worth while to note that in nearly all the festival gatherings reported in these pages the prizes are insignificant in value. In some cases (Kendal is typical) no money prizes at all are given.

TYNEDALE FESTIVAL, HEXHAM, APRIL 28 AND 29.

This Festival is in its second year. Mrs. J. H. Ridley and Mrs. Arthur Gibson are the honorary secretaries and managers and have all along been the chief promoters. Last year one day sufficed, but this year two days were well filled. Thirteen school choirs and twenty-two adult choirs entered to compete at this year's Festival. The school choirs generally sang with good tone and taste, and the sight-singing was satisfactory so far as it went. Some of the adult choir singing was particularly good, both as to correctness of execution and tasteful expression. Bywell (Mr. Walton) was first in the madrigal class, Blaydon (Mr. Unwin) coming only two marks behind. In the Church and Chapel Choir class there were six entries, and Hexham Wesleyan (Mr. R. N. Wilkinson) were the winners. Blaydon was first in the male-voice choir class and Haltwhistle (Mr. F. Willey) first in the principal female-voice class. At an evening concert the choirs combined to perform Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' under the direction of the adjudicator, Dr. McNaught. The performance was an excellent one. The various choirs had thoroughly learned the music and were able to sing it fluently without a combined rehearsal. It was evident that the scheme of the Festival is thoroughly appreciated, and that there is in the district ample musical ability in all stages of development to be brought into the sphere of its operations.

BURNLEY, APRIL 30.

The second Musical Festival and Competition instituted by the Hon. Mrs. Marshall Brooks in connection with the Girls' Friendly Society was held at Burnley on April 30. Seven choirs, consisting entirely of girls employed in the neighbouring factories, competed in two sections. Section I., comprising those who had previously competed, had to sing 'Fly, singing bird' (Elgar), 'Elves' duet' (Bendl), and 'Wood nymphs' (Smart), the winners being the St. Paul's Choir, Burnley—conductor, Mr. Alfrey. In Section II., for choirs that had not entered for competition before, the pieces were 'The Angel' (Rubinstein), 'The maybells and the flowers' and 'Greeting' (Mendelssohn), the first place being awarded to the choir connected with the Parish Church, Bury, conducted by Mrs. Wild. There was no sight-singing called for, but it is hoped that this may form a feature of future gatherings. Quite a high level of excellence was attained by most of the choirs, much attention having obviously been given to expression and correct enunciation. The girls' voices were fresh and bright, and commendably few mistakes in execution were noticeable. The Bishop of Burnley presided, and Lady Thursty presented the prizes. In the unavoidable absence of Mr. W. H. Leslie, who was to have adjudicated, the awards were made by Mr. W. G. Rothery.

BRISTOL, MAY 1 TO 6.

The 'Eisteddfod' set going here two years ago mainly by Mr. W. E. Fowler, a local professor of music, is making good progress, although it does not yet command the support it deserves. The scheme caters for musical students of all sorts and degrees. In the only report for which space can be afforded it is hardly possible to do more than allude to the chief classes. There were nearly 1,400 competitors, and the adjudicators were Dr. Cummings and Dr. McNaught in the vocal solo and choral sections, Mr. Tobias Matthey (pianoforte), Mr. Alfred Gibson (violin), and Mr. Hubert W. Hunt, who took the organ class, assisted in other classes. Mr. Ernest A. Dicks also took part as an adjudicator. The chief prize for pianoforte playing, which was a pianoforte presented by Messrs. Milsom, was won by Vivian Langrish, a lad of eleven years of age. In the chief choral section the 'Sine Nomine' choir, under Mr. R. Simmons, was awarded the first-prize, and the challenge shield for male-voice choirs went to the Newport choir (Mr. Spencer E. Jones). The test-piece in the latter section was Maunders' 'Song of the Northman' and German's 'O peaceful night.' An interesting and useful feature was a lecture on pianoforte playing given by Mr. Tobias Matthey. The prizes were distributed by Madame Blanche Marchesi.

PETERSFIELD, MAY 2, 3, AND 4.

The fifth annual Festival in this Hampshire town was very successful. Twenty-one choirs entered in the adult section, and the standard of performance was highly satisfactory. Dr. Allen was the judge. Buriton was first of the seven male-voice choirs, Woolbeding first of the seven mixed-voice choirs competing in the oratorio chorus section, Littlegreen first of seven choirs in the madrigal section, and again first in seven female-voice choirs. First prizes were gained in various sections by choirs from Purbrook, Havant, Petersfield, and Horndean.

The concerts are important features at this Festival. Mr. Donald Tovey conducts and takes an active interest in the preparations. 'Blest pair of Sirens' (Parry) was one of the pieces performed by the combined adult choirs. Miss Fanny Davies played a Beethoven pianoforte concerto, and the excellent orchestra played Schubert's B minor symphony. One of Handel's Coronation anthems was also included in the programme.

MID-SOMERSET, FROME, MAY 2, 3, AND 4.

This Festival, now in its fourth year, is not always held in the same place. Frome was selected for this year's event, and Mr. Walter Alcock (Chapel Royal and Westminster Abbey) and Miss Broadwood adjudicated. Mrs. Mansel is the Secretary and prime mover of the scheme. No details of the results have reached us.

THE WESTMORLAND MUSICAL FESTIVAL, KENDAL, MAY 4, 5, AND 6.

This Festival has now been in existence for twenty years and continues to show progress. The competitive side is secondary and ancillary to the combined executive side. The great works to be performed at concerts are the end. None of the competitions are open—only residents within a limited radius may compete or sing at the concerts. The importance of the Festival, which was originated by Miss Wakefield, has grown greatly during recent years. This year the great features in the scheme were the engagement of Mr. Henry J. Wood and his Queen's Hall band, and the inclusion of two great choral works, Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' and Dvůřák's 'Stabat Mater' in the programme. As there were nearly 700 chorallists eager to perform, two separate combined choirs were organized, and each set to learn one of the works named, and two concerts were given. Mr. George Rathbone, the local chorus-master, visited the various village choirs throughout the winter, and Mr. Wood made some occasional visits at combined rehearsals. The results of all these labours were that really excellent performances were given of both works. The 'Walpurgis Night' choir, being composed of small village choirs, had not so full and resonant a tone as the 'Stabat Mater' choir, in which choirs from large villages were combined, but both were admirably trained and knew the music thoroughly. With a fine band to play the important orchestral parts and an able conductor to weld band and choir into unity success was assured. The soloists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, the Hon. Norah Dawney, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Frederic Austin. Other items at the first concert were the part-songs 'Fly, singing bird' and 'The Snow' (Elgar), 'The hero's rest' (Die Vätergruft) (Cornelius), and four of Brahms's part-songs. The orchestra played the 'Meistersinger' overture and Beethoven's C minor symphony, and at the second concert, when the 'Stabat Mater' was given, Tschaiovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony.

All the concert choirs had to enter for the competitions according to their class. One of the tests was taken from the work studied. There were fourteen entries in the section for female-voice choirs, the test in which was 'A song of the Seasons' (Luard-Selby), the Kendal Parish Church choir (Mrs. Banks) gaining the victory. Six Church choirs sang, and there were three instrumental triparties. Eleven male-voice choirs sang 'The Vintage Song' (Mendelssohn), the prize again falling to Kendal Parish Church. Eleven mixed-voice choirs sang 'O lovely May' (Brahms) and a selection from the concert music, and again Kendal was victorious. In a madrigal class there were eight entries; the Kendal Choir was again first. Ten vocal quartets sang 'Tower tomb' from Sullivan's 'Yeomen of the Guard,' and again a Kendal party (Mr. Earl's) came first.

A folk-song competition brought forward eleven songs. In this section the assistance of Mr. Cecil Sharp was secured, and he awarded the first-prize to 'Wa'nay Cock-Feightin', song introduced by Mr. T. Collinson, of Casterton. The third day was given to the children. They competed in nine sections without displaying much tone, but the execution gave evidence of good training. Dr. McNaught adjudicated.

A cantata setting of Wordsworth's poem 'Orpheus,' composed for the occasion by Mr. George Rathbone, was very well performed at the afternoon concert under the direction of the composer. Mr. Denis O'Sullivan sang some songs in his peculiarly forceful and expressive style. It is very much to be regretted that Mr. Rathbone finds it necessary to resign his position as chorus-master to the Festival and conductor of the children's concert. His skill and fine taste have made him a valuable factor in the success of the Festival.

HUNSTANTON AND KING'S LYNN, MAY 8.

The Hunstanton district is peculiarly fortunate in having as a resident such an earnest and practical musical enthusiast as Mr. W. H. Tieslie. During the last few years the whole countryside has been stirred in musical matters by the efforts he and his coadjutors have made. Schools in which sight-singing was said to be impossible because the teachers could not teach it and the children could not attain to it, now find the subject one of the most popular in the whole curriculum. Competitions are held for school classes, but the getting-up of prepared pieces is altogether subordinated to the sight-singing element. Adult choirs have to be dealt with more tenderly, and prepared pieces are of necessity the chief features of their work. This year the scheme culminated in a fine performance of 'In exitu Israel' (Wesley) by the combined adult choirs, and of 'The Lord is my Shepherd' (Schubert) by the children's choirs. These were the two chief items of a largely-attended concert given on May 8 in the Corn Market, King's Lynn, the largest building available in the district. Nearly 800 voices took part, and there was a large audience, including many of the gentry of the neighbourhood.

PONTEFRAC, MAY 9, 10 AND 11.

The scheme here is a complete one. The children have their day, the surrounding villages are pitted only against one another, there is an 'open' day for outsiders to come in and provide a high standard of execution, and finally an effort is made to combine the executants at concerts. The Festival was originated by the social powers-that-be in the town and neighbourhood, and as its object is obviously purely to stimulate musical study it attracts all classes of the community. The illness and consequent absence from this year's Festival of Mr. Frank Hatchard, the chief and most enthusiastic promoter of the scheme, was deeply regretted. It must have been some satisfaction to that gentleman to find that the Festival was sufficiently well established to go on without his active assistance. Dr. Coward was the adjudicator, and the Rev. Daly Atkinson shared the conducting of the combined pieces. The children's day introduced much excellent singing, and served to prove the natural capacity of the children and the skill of their teachers. Solo singing was a feature of the first adult day. There were nine vocal quartet parties. Four female-voice choirs sang Hatton's 'Jack Frost,' Knottingly winning the first place. Hemsworth and Darrington each won a prize for sight-singing. Dr. Coward warmly complimented the committee and all concerned on the unusual success in this class. The concert programme included the cantata 'Ode to the North-East Wind' (Alice M. Smith), which was performed by the combined choirs and an efficient orchestra. A number of soloists appeared on the opening day, and three quartet parties sang 'Quando Corpus' from Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.' Pontefract men's choir gained a first-prize, as did the local Primitive Methodist choir. In the class for female-voice choirs the three at the top were pronounced to be equal in merit. Normanton was the only choir that offered itself in sight-reading.

KENT, MAIDSTONE, MAY 10.

This is a new Festival in its first year, and considering its extreme youth it has done very well. It was held in the Corn Exchange, Maidstone. Mr. F. Cunningham Woods, Dr. Dunstan, and Mr. George Langley were the adjudicators. There were four choirs in the mixed-voice section—the Maidstone Choral Union (Mr. F. Wilson Parish) gaining the prize. One village orchestra, four violinists, two string quartets, two children's choirs and a number of solo singers appeared.

WORCESTER, MAY 10 AND 11.

The competitive Festival held here was instituted by Lady Mary Lygon (now Lady Mary Trefusis), and was formerly held at Malvern. It still bears the name of Madresfield, where the seat of the Beauchamp family is situated. While the Festival was held at Malvern it drew more support than it has drawn from Worcester. But it is hoped that ultimately the larger town will rise to the occasion and give the scheme the full support it deserves. Great importance is given in the Madresfield scheme to the combined performance of some large works. The competitive element is subordinate and designed to an artistic end. On the first day there were five entries in the madrigal class, Mr. Harben's party gaining the first place. Seven female-voice choirs sang Dr. Percy Buck's 'Blackbird's Song.' Most of the singing in this class was first-rate; Mr. E. T. Cook's choir came out first. Three male-voice choirs sang two of Elgar's part-songs. On the 'village' day there were many entries of adult choirs. Seven female-voice choirs sang Walford Davies's 'Cradle Song,' Powick coming out first. Five male-voice choirs sang 'Down in yon summer vale' (C. Wood), and Poolbrook won the first place. Eight mixed-voice choirs competed, and Hartpur (Mr. K. A. Taylor) came first. The test-piece was, 'Lo! how a rose' (Pretorius). The adjudicators were Dr. McNaught and Dr. Percy Buck. At an evening concert, given under the direction of Mr. Granville Bantock, the combined choirs, assisted by a full orchestra, performed Sullivan's recently-published 'King Arthur' music. An eight-part choral setting of Milton's words, 'From harmony to harmony' (the motto of the Madresfield Competitions), specially composed for the Festival by Mr. Filson Young, was also a notable feature of the programme. The attendance of the public at the competitions and the concert was not large.

This Festival confines its operations to a radius of twenty miles round York. It was instituted some years ago by Miss Mary Egerton, and this lady still takes an active interest in the operations of the scheme. There were a larger number of entries than usual, owing chiefly, apparently, to the institution of a class for novices and those who have not previously won a prize. Mr. Walter Alcock, of the Chapel Royal, adjudicated in all the choral classes. Eight choirs appeared in the anthem class, Hovingham gaining the first place. The test was Macfarren's 'The Lord is my Shepherd.' Terrington was first in the female-voice class. Healaugh gained the prize in the village-choir section. In the larger-village class Harewood was first, and in a female-voice choir competition the Girls' Friendly Society particularly distinguished themselves, and won the premier position. In the Chief Church Choir competition, in which an anthem, 'I will lay me down in peace,' by T. Tertius Noble, organist of York Minster, was the test, three choirs were so equally good it was found difficult to determine their relative merits, but ultimately St. Martin's Choir was awarded the prize. In the principal female-voice choir section there was similar embarrassment, but Miss Bigge's choir was placed first. In the madrigal class, in which Morley's well-known 'Fire, fire, my heart' was the test, St. Michael-le-Belfry choir was awarded full marks.

The choirs afterwards combined to sing Gounod's 'Gallia,' performed under the baton of Miss Egerton. Mr. Herbert Withers judged the strings. There were a good many entries for the violin and pianoforte section, in which the test-piece was Grieg's C minor sonata. Miss Rose and Mrs. Kirk were placed first. The children's sight-singing was found to be fluent and otherwise satisfactory, and their performance of prepared music was often excellent. A class for playing a pianoforte accompaniment tempted ten entries. Four string quartet parties interpreted a Haydn quartet in B flat.

BERKS, BUCKS, AND OXON.

AYLESBURY, MAY 13, 14 AND 15.

These competitions are held alternately in one of the three counties named—last year at Oxford, this year at Aylesbury. The large-choir prize fell to the Aylesbury Harmonic Society. In another section St. Mary's Church Choir, Aylesbury, won the first place. The Rev. B. Everett's choir from Windsor was first in the female-voice class, and the school-choir prize went to the Oxford Training College Practising School children. The Beaconsfield Ladies' Choral gained a first in another female-voice choir class. A concert in the Town Hall, under the baton of Dr. C. H. Lloyd, wound up the proceedings. Dr. Allen was the adjudicator.

NORTH NOTTS, RETFORD, MAY 15, 16, AND 18.

This Festival is in its second year, and has succeeded in securing ample support. In the children's competition sixteen choirs entered, and the singing often reached a highly satisfactory standard. The combined classes gave a capital concert under the direction of Mr. T. Hercy Denman.

The adult instrumental competition brought forward some excellent violin, pianoforte, violoncello, flute, and clarinet playing. Twenty-three choirs sang in various classes on the second day. Rampton was first in the chief mixed-voice class as well as in the female-voice choir class. The Welbeck Abbey men's voices were first in their section. Dr. McNaught adjudicated. A concert was given with combined resources under the direction of the Rev. Daly Atkinson. On May 18 the competition was open, but it did not draw many choirs. Dr. Coward adjudicated and conducted the evening concert. The audiences were generally very large and always keenly interested in the proceedings. The excellent management of the platform by Mr. Bruce Webster during the competition and concerts deserves recognition. Mrs. Peake, wife of the Mayor of Retford, is the chief promoter of the scheme.

ESKDALE TOURNAMENT OF SONG, WHITBY, MAY 16 AND 17.

The third of the Eskdale series of competitions was this year held at Whitby. The number of entries was large, and the general results show that even in three years good and encouraging progress has been made in execution and in taste. A new feature was a children's cantata performed with credit by 100 school-boys and girls. The conspicuous successes were the pianoforte playing and the vocal quartets. Most of the choral work was good, but the voice production was not so pure and musical as it might be. Dr. Coward made an admirable adjudicator, and gave in various practical ways most excellent advice which, wherever acted upon, is bound to yield gratifying results. After the Tournament there was an excellent performance of Bennett's 'May Queen,' under the baton of Dr. Coward. These tournaments have again proved the existence of much unsuspected musical skill and ability in the wide moorland district of north-east Yorkshire.

MORECAMBE, MAY 17 TO 20.

The Morecambe Musical Festival this year has maintained its position as the leading event of its kind, not merely in the North of England but in the whole country. Neither pains, brains, nor expense are spared to make the Festival an artistic success. It is not too much to say that in the choral sections at least the standards of choral technique have been, in many districts, revolutionised by the exigencies of the music chosen, and the yearly rubbings together of many of the cleverest choral conductors, who meet in friendly rivalry on these occasions. A first-prize in an important class at Morecambe has come to be considered a blue-ribbon in the choral world. No test has ever been used twice. Since the establishment in a quite small way, fifteen years ago, 140 composers have been represented by 359 pieces. In this year's programme, a substantial book of fifty-two pages with an interesting introduction by the Rev. Canon Gorton, the President of the Festival Council, fifty-eight pieces are enumerated as competition tests, apart from the numerous works and songs performed at the concerts.

The first day was given up to the children and local Girls' Friendly Societies. Some highly-refined school choir singing was exhibited, notably by the Blackpool Revue Council School under Mr. J. R. Rigby, and the Keighley (Utley) Council School, under Mr. W. H. Whittaker. The children's choirs combined—under Dr. McNaught who, with Dr. Sinclair and Mr. C. H. Fogg, adjudicated—to give an admirable performance of Sir Frederick Bridge's amusing cantata 'The Lobster's Garden Party.' May-pole dancing was another feature of the scheme. Dr. Sinclair conducted the combined Girls' Friendly Societies Choir. On the second day local female-voice, male-voice, mixed-voice choirs and vocal quartets competed. Twenty-four choirs and five quartets sang. Sir Edward Elgar now joined the above-named adjudicators. The chief class, in which the test-pieces were

'Thyrsis, sleepest thou' (J. Bennett), 'Aspiration' (E. Elgar), 'A song for the seasons' (H. Smart), brought forward some excellent choirs. The Morecambe Green Street Wesleyan Choir, under Mr. Stoddard, made a great impression with the Elgar piece and was placed first. In the afternoon a church choir festival service was held in the St. Laurence's Church. Thirteen choirs took part. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis from C. H. Lloyd's Service in G and the anthem 'Praise God in His Holiness' (Tours) were sung. Mr. Whiteside was at the organ, Mr. Arthur Davies conducted, the Rev. H. Dams, Precentor of Carlisle Cathedral, sang the service, and the Rev. H. L. Marsh, Precentor of Manchester Cathedral, preached the sermon.

At the evening concert Miss Muriel Foster was the chief attraction. She sang no fewer than twenty songs, and as her voice was in splendid condition her performance quite fascinated the large audience assembled. Other features of the concert were the highly-artistic performance of Stainer's 'I prithee, send me back my heart,' by the Lancaster Centenary Quartet (A.T.T.B.), and some of Brahms's 'Zigeunerlieder,' by the Bolton Harmonic Prize Quartet (S.A.T.B.), who were the prize-winners in their respective sections.

The third day (Friday) was wholly devoted to rehearsals and a concert. A festival choir and orchestra of 400 performers had been organized from local choirs, so far as singers were concerned, and for some months trained by Dr. Coward, of Sheffield fame. The programme was as follows:

'King Olaf'	Elgar.
Overture—'Der Freischütz'	Weber.
Scena—Lohengrin's 'Narration'	Wagner.
MR. JOHN COATES.
Ode—'Blest pair of Sirens'	Parry.
Scena—'Hiawatha's Vision'	Coleridge-Taylor.
MR. CHARLES KNOWLES.
Solo and Chorus—'Now tramp'	Bishop.
Solo—MADAME EMILY SQUIRE.

Sir Edward Elgar conducted his own work, and Dr. Coward had charge of the other items. The chorus singing in 'King Olaf' was a triumphant exhibition of Dr. Coward's special skill as a trainer. It was not merely that the music was perfectly correctly performed, that the words, vowels, and consonants were all clearly defined, and that the rhythm and attack were as perfect as one could imagine, but over and above this there was the intensity and convincingness of the expression. As all the three soloists named above were highly competent, it may be imagined that an exceptionally fine performance was secured. But this result cannot be claimed. The band, although containing many excellent players, did not always adequately support the singers. The remainder of the programme went very smoothly. There was an audience of about 4,000 persons.

On Saturday, May 20, fifty-three choirs and three orchestral bands arrived from all parts of the country for the purpose of competition. During this remarkable day there were 2,480 competitors. Mr. Frederick Corder now joined Sir Edward Elgar, Dr. McNaught, and Dr. Sinclair in the arduous task of adjudicating. The following is a list of the test-pieces selected for the various sections:

FEMALE VOICES.
1. 'Love's influence'	Felix Woysch.
2. 'The Tambourine player'	Schumann.
MALE VOICES.
3. 'Fly to my mistress'	C. H. Lloyd.
4. 'The Sailor's Song'	Hatton.
5. 'The Song of the Spirits'	Schubert.
6. 'Boot and Saddle'	G. Bantock.
7. 'Liebe' (Love)	R. Strauss.
8. 'A Franklyn's Dogge'	A. C. MacKenzie.
MIXED VOICES.
9. 'Sweete Floweres'	T. A. Walmisley.
10. 'Shall we go dance'	C. V. Stanford.
11. 'Fusca, in thy starry eyes'	T. Tomkins.
12. 'O Death! thou art the tranquil night'	Cornelius.
(Der Tod, das ist die kühle Nacht.)
13. 'Night whispers'	Moellendorff.
14. 'Tell me, O love'	C. H. H. Parry.

The orchestras were set to play Mendelssohn's overture 'Ruy Blas' and Gade's 'Novelletten' for strings (Op. 53).

In all the choral classes much of the singing was superb. Colne Co-operative Choir (Mr. Hey), Padiham Vocal Union (Mr. E. Hitchon), and Barrow St. James' Ladies' Choir (Mrs. Bourne), gave charming performances of (1) (2) and headed, in the order named, the twelve choirs that competed. The male-voice choirs were divided into two sections, one of choirs of not more than thirty voices, and another of not more than forty voices. The smaller choirs, of which there were eleven, sang (3), (4). First, the five best were selected and then heard a second time. Habergham Glee Union (Mr. E. Hitchon), a very fine and well-led body of selected voices, was first, the Colne Orpheus (Mr. T. Wilkinson), and Kendal (Mr. W. Granger) following close behind. The large choir section, in which there were four entries, sang (5), (6), (7), (8). The contest resolved itself into a duel between the Manchester Orpheus Glee Society (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt) and the Southport Vocal Union (Mr. J. C. Clarke), two of the finest male-voice choirs in the country. Both of these choirs gave splendid performances of all four of the test-pieces, but Manchester slightly excelled. Their performance of 'A Franklyn's Dogge' convulsed the immense and highly appreciative audience assembled. It may be mentioned here that at the evening concert the four choirs, combined with a string band, gave a performance of Schubert's 'Song of the Spirits,' under the direction of Mr. Frederick Corder. The Harrogate Vocal Union (Mr. H. Ball) was awarded the special prize offered for the best performance in this highly dramatic and difficult piece.

The chief interest of this, the final day, centred, however round the contest in the mixed-voice challenge shield class. The shield was won by Blackpool (Mr. H. Whittaker) in 1902, by Hanley (Mr. J. James) in 1903, and by Nottingham (Mr. C. E. Riley) last year. As these three choirs and eleven others, all with great reputations, had entered, the prospect of hearing beautiful performances of the choicest part-music drew an audience that packed the great hall of the Winter Gardens. All four of the adjudicators sat in judgment in this class. The fourteen choirs first sang the Madrigal (11) and the extremely difficult Cornelius part-song (12) which was given as a supplement with our May issue. The four choirs that emerged most successfully from this ordeal were then put to sing 13 and 14. The selected choirs were the three former prize choirs named above, and the Morecambe Madrigal Society (Mr. A. Davies). All these choirs gave thrilling performances of the Cornelius part-song, that of Hanley very obviously impressing the audience and the adjudicators deeply. It seemed impossible to conceive a finer rendering, and the adjudicators unanimously awarded Hanley full marks. The extraordinary example of Cornelius's genius severely tested the power of the choirs to sing in tune, and still more their capacity to interpret. 'Night whispers' (13) quite as severely tested their power to sing presto rhythm with the utmost delicacy pianissimo. In this piece the Hanley Choir again gained full marks. The Morecambe Society gave an equally perfect performance of the Parry part-song (14), and were also awarded full marks. The result in the end was as follows: Hanley Cauldon Vocal, 316 marks, Blackpool Glee and Madrigal 311, Morecambe Madrigal 310, and Nottingham 293. The prize for full orchestras, the test-piece for which was the 'Ruy Blas' overture, was gained by the Colne Orchestral Society (Mr. J. L. Wildman), and that for string orchestras by the same Society.

Sir Edward Elgar in the course of a speech referred to the much regretted absence through illness of Sir Hubert Parry, who had promised to attend the Festival. He said that some much-quoted remarks he made two years ago in connection with the Morecambe Festival, to the effect that the living centre of music in this country was not in London, but 'somewhere farther North,' had been somewhat misconstrued. Honest people would understand that he meant that the spread of music among the people was stronger in the North than in the South.

The arrangements for the Festival were as usual admirably thought out. A special acknowledgment is due to Mr. C. H. Fogg and Mr. Arthur Davies, the very efficient official accompanists.

THE FIRST SYMPHONY OF BRAHMS.

(IN C MINOR, OP. 68.)

BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

III.—The third movement, in duple time—un poco allegretto e grazioso—though occupying the place of the Scherzo, is not a scherzo so much as a sort of national tune, or Volkstied, of simple sweetness and grace, and, it will be observed, in strains of five bars each—the second strain being an inversion of the first:

No. 18. Un poco allegretto e grazioso.

 'Cello. pizz.

The second portion, which follows immediately on the previous quotation, though different in character, is equally graceful:

No. 19. Clar. with Flute 8va.

p dolce.

A third melody is begun by the clarinet, and completed by the flute and oboes in octaves, with a broken accompaniment in the strings:

No. 20. Clar. Ob. with Flute 8va.

The second section of the movement, or Trio (though not so entitled) is in 6-8 time, and in the key of B, and in all respects a contrast to the preceding:

No. 21. Wind. Flute 8va.

 Strings Uniz.
 Cl. Cor. cres.

The second part of the Trio is in the same vein as the above quotation:

No. 22. Wind. Fl. 8va. f
 Strings. cres.

This is considerably longer than usual, and after it is finished the first part is not repeated entire, as is customary in minuets and scherzos, but its melodies are employed in a concluding Coda of tranquil character.

So far the first three movements of the symphony, which are understood to have been written many years before the Finale; and as a later effort, it is no disparagement to the preceding sections to say that the Finale throws them greatly into the shade. It is in every way a loftier and maturer work, more obviously dramatic in intention, and clearer in expression. In addition to many entirely new and striking features, the composer has evidently aimed at making his Finale an epitome of the whole symphony, and has introduced subjects and passages from the previous movements in a very unexpected and ingenious manner.

IV.—The Finale is in two portions—an Introduction and an Allegro. The Introduction is of the most dramatic character, and it is much to be regretted that the composer has not by some motto, or title, given us a clue to his intentions. It begins, Adagio, with three descending notes in the basses, swelling from soft to loud, and ending in a great crash of all the orchestra except the brass, which is silent for some time:

Viol. 1. 8va. Adagio.
 No. 23. p f p

We shall see presently how these four opening bass notes are used (see No. 30). The phrase for the violins—which, for the sake of clearness, we have disengaged in the quotation from the rest of the orchestra—is the beginning of the chief subject of the coming Allegro, and as such we shall meet with it again both in the Adagio and elsewhere.

With the sixth bar begins a passage of staccato phrases, alternating between the upper and lower strings—

No. 24. Strings. pizz. p string. f

string. c. cres. ff

(the quotation is a mere skeleton), increasing in tone and hurrying in pace, like some irresistible fate, till it reaches a loud and sudden climax. But here it is arrested by the former majestic phrase (see No. 23), commanding and restraining.

Here again the violins are quoted without the rest of the band. It is not, however, to be restrained, but again makes its way, and proceeds in the following suggestive style—leading into two bars in which the flute, clarinet, and bassoon have a melody like that of the last bar and a-half of No. 16, from the slow movement, but so altered by its treatment, and by the dramatic accompaniment of the strings, as to be virtually a new and splendid subject.

The magnificent picture thus brought before us continues for some time, alternately swelling and dying away, and carrying the hearer with it. Hitherto the trumpets and horns have only been heard sparingly, and the trombones not at all. The time has now come for introducing those grand, mystical instruments. The key changes to C major, and the speed slightly quickens to più andante. The strings are muted, and move in rapid tremolo of semiquavers; the three trombones form a substratum of solemn harmony, in which the four first notes of the phrase quoted in No. 25 will be recognized, while the horns utter a melody of the most passionate kind, like a voice from beyond the tomb:

After the horns have done with the melody it is taken up by the flute, with responsive phrases in bassoon and horn. The strings still continue the ethereal tremolo, and the effect is something supernatural—the breaking of the morning of life, the first dawn of passion in the heart. Then the trombones, again breaking silence, and taking the bassoons and double-bassoons to their aid, give out a new phrase of five bars without any accompaniment whatever:

After this the violins recommence their tremolo and the horn its passionate utterance; and with this, prolonged through ten bars, the Introduction comes to an end, and the Allegro begins.

The subject of the Allegro—non troppo, ma con brio—is one of those happy inspirations which but rarely occur even to the most favoured musicians. It is so rhythmical and so naturally melodious, and the change from the mystery and passion of the minor keys of the Adagio to the natural freshness of C major is so delightful that, like the subject of the Finale of the Choral Symphony, the ear receives and retains it at once:

No. 29. Allegro—non troppo, ma con brio.

It is given out by the strings, with the addition, first of the horn, and then of the bassoons; and is then repeated by the wind, with a pizzicato accompaniment from the strings. The rhythmical form is then relinquished, and a good deal of development takes place, including amongst other points a reminiscence of the horn subject (No. 27), treated in imitation between the flute and horn, with arpeggio accompaniment from the violins. This ushers in the second subject of the Allegro on a ground bass:

a gay strain, in which the first four crotchets are prettily repeated in quavers, and where the four bass notes, which open the introductory Adagio (No. 23), are used with happy effect as a substratum. This melody has a sort of second part—confided, like so many of the melodies of this symphony, to the oboe, and accompanied beautifully by a syncopated D in the violas. A further melody is given out by the violins:

No. 31. Oboe, dolce.

No. 32. Violins.

The continuation of this—is possibly intended as a reminiscence of the second theme in the Allegretto (No. 19), and is associated with a triplet figure that is copiously used :

The opening subject of the Allegro (No. 29) is then reintroduced in its original key, but with more accompaniment than before, and is played completely through, as if to usher in the repetition of all the preceding portion. Such, however, is not the composer's design. Instead of it we have a quantity of new material. First, a repetition of the alternate pizzicato phrases between violins and basses, which proved so striking in the opening Adagio (No. 24). And this again is succeeded by many passages more or less fragmentary. Some of these have no apparent connection with anything already met with in the work—passages of imitation which have been employed by Handel and Mozart, and seem destined to be repeated by all the great masters in turn :

Others, again, are obviously gathered from the previous material of the movement, including the horn melody of the Adagio, and the subject already quoted as No. 32, settling at last into the second theme (No. 30), which now appears in the key of C, and is succeeded by considerable recapitulation of the preceding portions. We look in vain, however, for a recurrence of the principal subject in C major, so splendidly fitted for a climax to the movement. True, the first few notes reappear in the basses ; but they are in the key of E flat, and the essentially rhythmical character of this grand tune is concealed by the accompaniments of the rest of the orchestra. The Coda, più allegro, introduces a new phrase—

No. 36. Strings & Fag.
Più allegro.

as well as a possible allusion to the last bars of No. 10—in the first movement of the symphony, and an unmistakable one to the trombone passage (No. 28) in the più andante.

And thus ends a work which has long since taken its place in the golden chain of orchestral compositions of the highest class—a chain which, springing from the hand of Haydn, has been prolonged link by link, and age by age, by his great successors, and which, as long as the human soul and intellect remain what they are, will inevitably never want some worthy musician to carry it forward into the future.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths :

On April 27, at St. Leonard's-on-Sea, after a short illness, WALTER EDGAR HILL, aged thirty-three, a much-esteemed member of the firm of Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, the well-known violin experts of New Bond Street.

On May 3, at Edgbaston, ALFRED FEENV, aged seventy-one, an accomplished amateur musician, for many years on the staff of the Birmingham Daily Post. Mr. Feeny's widow was formerly known as a very popular and talented violinist under her maiden name of Miss Rosetta Piercy.

On May 4, at Blackheath, the REV. HENRY PARR, aged eighty-nine, formerly Vicar of Yoxford, Suffolk. As editor of 'Church of England Psalmody' and an authority on the subject of hymn-tunes, Mr. Parr was held in high repute, the biographical preface to his collection being of great value to students of the subject. He wrote an interesting bibliographical article entitled 'Collections of Chants,' in THE MUSICAL TIMES of June, 1879.

On May 6, at his residence, 228, Stratford Road, Birmingham, WILLIAM THOMAS BELCHER, Mus.D., aged seventy-eight. A pupil of Dr. Corfe and W. T. Best, Dr. Belcher held several organ appointments in his native city of Birmingham. His son, Mr. W. E. Belcher, is organist of St. Asaph Cathedral.

On May 7, at Brighouse, Yorkshire, MRS. SUNDERLAND, aged eighty-six. As 'The Yorkshire Queen of Song' this lady formerly had a great and well-deserved reputation as a remarkably fine soprano vocalist—a reputation that extended to London. For many years she had lived in retirement.

On May 9, at Jugenheim-am-der-Bergstrasse, ERNST PAUER, aged seventy-eight. Born at Vienna, on December 21, 1826, Herr Pauer resided in London for many years, where he was well known as a teacher of the pianoforte and an editor of pianoforte music. At one time he held professorships at the Royal Academy of Music, the Royal College of Music and the Guildhall School of Music, and he frequently lectured on musical subjects in various parts of the country. He was the author of 'The art of pianoforte playing,' 'Musical Forms,' 'The elements of the beautiful in music' and 'A dictionary of pianists and composers for the pianoforte,' all of which are in Novello's Primer series.

On May 15, at Leamington, ROSARIO ASPA, aged seventy-eight (a former pupil of Moscheles), a well-known pianoforte teacher, and an expert chess player.

Reviews.

Memories: An autobiography. By Walter Macfarren.
[The Walter Scott Publishing Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Walter Macfarren is so well known for his geniality, humour, and kind-heartedness that it is not surprising to find these sunny attributes shining throughout the pages of his book. Nearly four full-scores of years are covered in this autobiographic survey, and the note which runs through it all is one that gives pleasure to the reader. This life-story enables us to follow the author in the ups-and-downs of his long career—his choristership at Westminster Abbey, as a child-blained assistant at a music-shop, and his successful pupilage and professorship at the Royal Academy of Music, the latter appointment covering the long period of 'well nigh fifty-eight years.'

Anecdotes are plentifully sprinkled about the 300 pages of these 'Memories.' In regard to Mr. Gruneisen, a former musical critic of the Athenæum and Morning Post, Mr. Macfarren tells us that he 'wrote such an illegible hand that it is said (I do not vouch for the truth of this), when he departed this life, the composers of the various journals for which he wrote gave a dinner to celebrate the event!' Half-a-century ago some of the students of the Royal Academy of Music not only received their music lessons at the Institution, but were lodged and boarded within its walls. The changed order of things is recorded by our author in these words:

Let me here recount the circumstance which led to the abolition of indoor students in Tenterden Street. The British Government, fifty years ago, used to proclaim Fast-days very slight provocation,—too much or too little rain, as the case might be—and the Archbishop of Canterbury composed a prayer suitable to the occasion. On these Fast-days the boys who were housed and fed at the Academy were treated to salt fish. In the early part of this year [1853], there having been an unusual number of Fast-days, and the salt fish particularly bad and malodorous, the boys struck, and led by four of the strongest of their number, they tied the hall-porter in his chair and stormed the larder, laying siege to fragments of bacon, cold pudding, eggs, &c. Then, with cans of porter, brought from 'round the corner,' to wash these luxuries down, they made high feast. Swift retribution, however, fell upon the four leaders, who were ignominiously expelled, and Academy boarders at Tenterden Street abolished for ever.

Thus does Mr. Macfarren chat pleasantly on. His book is enriched with various portraits, facsimiles from an album, &c., among the latter being the signature of W. H. Weiss placed under the first bar of his popular song, the words of which are there written 'Under a roasted chestnut tree!' The long lists of compositions and names of pupils—many of the latter distinguished in English music—which form appendices to this autobiography testify to the author's industry during his honourable career. Two dates in the book need correction—(p. 55) Mendelssohn died on November 4 (not 7), 1847; and (p. 296) the Biographical Sketch of Mr. Macfarren appeared in 'THE MUSICAL TIMES' in 1898 (not 1896), the month being January.

Organ Music. By Various Composers.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

Organists who give organ recitals—and their name is legion—have no cause to complain of the variety of pieces that are available for their performances. Old and new, original compositions and arrangements, are procurable in abundance, with the result that programmes need not become stereotyped, as they often are, or that players need to circumvent their repertoires. In the 'Old English Organ Music' series Mr. John E. West has added seven new numbers: these include a Voluntary in A and one in C by William Russell, a former distinguished organist of the Foundling Chapel; a Voluntary in C minor by Dr. Greene; a Voluntary in C, a remarkable and particularly fine work by Samuel Wesley, and a Prelude and Fugue in A, by the same composer; an Introduction and Fugue in F by Dr. Crotch, founded on a single chant by Dr. Philip Hayes; and an Air varied by Thomas Adams. All these interesting specimens of true organ music have been skillfully and effectively edited for modern organs by Mr. West, who knows what to do and what not to do.

Those who favour arrangements may have their attention drawn to a series of transcriptions carefully made by Dr. G. J. Bennett, organist of Lincoln Cathedral. The first number consists of the Introduction and Melodrama from Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal,' and the same composer's Prelude from 'Colomba' is also laid under contribution. Mozart is represented by three minuets from his great trio of symphonies; Beethoven by the minuet from the E flat pianoforte sonata (Op. 31, No. 3); and Wagner by the Prelude to 'Lohengrin'; while three numbers are devoted to Tchaikovsky—the Andantino from the F minor symphony, the slow movement from the B flat minor pianoforte concerto, and the Coronation March. Effective laying-out and suitable registration are features to be commended, and Dr. Bennett has evidently taken great pains in making his transcriptions artistic and playable.

To return to original organ music, but modern instead of ancient creations, we have before us a set of three musicianly pieces by Mr. John E. West—entitled 'Aspiration,' 'Contemplation,' and 'Lamentation.' These strains not only reflect their several designations, but they furnish just the right kind of material for in-going and offertory voluntaries. A 'Meditation' in E flat, also by Mr. West, is a thoughtful and well-contrasted piece. Of three compositions by Dr. C. H. Lloyd the two Scherzos—in C minor and E major—fully justify their designation in Allagro and Allegretto genialities: a Postlude (in E flat), also by Dr. Lloyd and dedicated to Mr. Basil Johnson, of Rugby, is an effective contribution to modern organ music. Dainty and melodious to a degree is an Adantino in D flat by Dr. H. Davan Wetton, a little piece which is almost sure to come into favour by reason of its attractiveness.

A book of 'seven pièces for the organ' by M. Théodore Dubois, the distinguished French organist and composer, contains a mixture of both loud and soft voluntaries suitable for church use, or recitals. In addition to their melodic interest these pieces have the advantage of being easy of execution; indeed one of them, entitled 'Priere,' is for manuals only.

A History of Irish Music. By Wm. H. Grattan Flood.

[Browne & Nolan, Ltd., Belfast and Cork.]

Many people may be surprised to learn that there exist ample material and justification for a history of Irish music. There is no doubt that in the Middle Ages, and earlier, music as an art and a science was successfully cultivated in Ireland and that its devotees exercised considerable influence over the British Isles and parts of Europe. This may be conceded without endorsing all that Mr. Flood (who never forgets that he is an Irishman as well as a historian) patriotically claims on behalf of his country. We are told (p. 37) that, 'taken in general, from a technical point of view the ancient Irish can claim the credit of inventing musical form—in fact, the germ which developed into the sonata form,' that before the 9th century 'they [the Irish] had an intimate acquaintance with the diatonic scale long before it was perfected (?) by Guido of Arezzo,' that they were 'the first to employ harmony and counterpoint,' that 'they had a world-famed school of harpers,' and finally that 'they generously diffused musical knowledge all over Europe' (pp. 19, 20). Then it is stated (p. 48) that 'in the new organum of the 12th century we find in use dissonance (?) of the major and minor 3rd with the major 6th,' that Irish immigrants introduced Celtic minstrelsy and taught the Welsh people the music of ancient Erin, and that Irish missionaries introduced Irish music and inaugurated plain-chant at a number of English cathedrals. In an interesting and useful chapter on Shakespeare and Irish music the acquaintance of the great poet with many Irish songs is industriously traced, and another chapter deals with the visits of Handel and Dr. Arne to Ireland. The cultivation of the art languished in the later and gloomier periods of Irish history. The harpers began to die out, and the developments of music, taking place in other countries had little or no influence in Ireland. The 19th century brought forward John Field the pianist; then came Balfe and Wallace and others to show that Irish musical genius was by no means extinct. To-day we have Sir Charles Villiers Stanford in the front rank of living musicians, and there are many other Irishmen who have achieved fame in the art.

Although Mr. Flood's history is somewhat discursive in its literary style, and inclined to be over enthusiastic, it is a useful compilation of facts and dates.

Sonata (No. 3 in B dur), Op. 12, für Orgel. Composit von Percy C. Buck.

[Breitkopf & Härtel.]

Dr. Buck has planned his third organ sonata thus: Fantasie, Marcia Funèbre, and Toccata. The first of these movements opens with a broad and well-defined theme, one that recalls in its stately tread the last movement of Mendelssohn's sonata in the same key. To this succeeds an agitated section in the tonic minor (B flat) of restless tonality: indeed, it would serve admirably for a sight-reading test. A repetition of the opening portion concludes the Fantasie. By-the-way, in bar three from the end of this movement, should not the uppermost note (C) be a dotted minim, instead of a dotted crotchet? The Funeral March is constructed on three Hebrew melodies—'Matnath Yad,' 'Attah Adonai,' and 'El Nora'—thematic material of an unusual but distinctly melodious nature, which the composer has deftly and impressively treated. In the last movement the contrasting elements of dignified phrases and toccataish semiquaver energy are well displayed. The work, which in its interpretation will make some demands on technical skill, is one that reflects credit upon its composer.

THE HIGHER ASPECTS OF MUSICAL FORM.

At the meeting of the Musical Association held on May 9 (Dr. Charles Maclean in the chair), Mr. F. Gilbert Webb read a paper on 'The Higher Aspects of Musical Form.'

The lecturer said that it was with the diffidence born of knowledge that he ventured to take up the thorny subject of form in music, but his justification was a desire to contribute in some degree to a clearer apprehension than seemed at present to exist concerning the principles which gave form and design force and influence. Music has ever reflected the spirit of its time, and at the present period nothing was sacred to the analyst and searcher after truth, and the result was that our conceptions of material substances and our beliefs had been shaken to their foundations. Small wonder, therefore, that in the midst of this physical and mental Götterdämmerung, composers should question the truth of laws and rules hitherto accepted unhesitatingly.

Formalism might be described as form run to seed, and was as inevitable as the decay of a beautiful flower; but, while lamenting that degeneration, it should not be forgotten that the flower would have had little beauty but for the presence of symmetrical form. The germ of form was the desire for symmetry. It was observable in the rude pattern markings of the savage. Such markings might be described as form in an inert state. Active life came to it with the spirit of expression, and the moment design became the medium of thought, it acquired artistic vitality, and its subsequent ramifications were the natural product of environment; but formalism was the killing of that spirit, the retrogression to the inert state.

That in which the masterpiece differed from what might be termed estimable music was that, whereas every note of the former had been dictated, perhaps unconsciously, by an overwhelming desire to express a dominating idea, a considerable portion of the latter has been filled in by obedience to precedent and to theoretical laws.

There were two aspects of form which to-day were somewhat overlooked, i.e. the different action of form in mental conception and in assimilating the ideas of others. The composer worked from a central idea, a germ thought which he expanded; the listener had to be conducted to that germ-thought by a series of introductions. The composer stood within the edifice he had erected, but the listener was outside, and unless the builder had been clear in his designing his object would be hard to understand. In no art was the consideration of the laws by which understanding was accomplished so imperative as in music, yet modern music showed that few composers studied to make their music easily comprehended.

It should be recognised that design in music was as many-sided as form in the inanimate world, and that nature always suited her form to her requirements. Far more compositions had failed by being written in obedience to rules inapplicable to the subject-matter than by formlessness, but the composer's difficulties and responsibilities were greatly increased by his emancipation from fixed laws. He was faced by eternal principles of balance, symmetry, appropriateness, and other attributes which made for rationality and sanity, without which he could never achieve true greatness. He might select any subject for musical illustration, but unless the appropriate treatment made for the production of a work that conformed to the laws by which the mind of the listener received and assimilated impressions, he would only produce a monstrosity.

Mr. Webb's thoughtful and well-expressed paper was followed by a discussion in which Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. Yorke Trotter, Mr. T. L. Southgate, and the chairman took part.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The concert on May 11 opened with the Welsh Rhapsody by Mr. Edward German, its first performance in London. The success which the work gained when produced at the Cardiff Musical Festival last year was fully endorsed by the Philharmonic audience at the Queen's Hall, who cheered the composer again and again. Mr. German has selected five Welsh melodies for his thematic material. These really tuneful strains he has welded together and treated in a most masterly and interesting manner, with the result that there is not a dull moment from beginning to end. And is not this saying much when a modern composition is under consideration? The orchestration is as clear as the day; everything 'comes off,' and the manner in which the composer has climaxed his fantasia with 'Men of Harlech' is overwhelming in its effectiveness. We venture to predict frequent performances of this delightful work: it will brighten many a programme.

The enjoyment of the concert was further enhanced by the charming playing of M. Kaoul Pugno, a pianist who has a lovely touch and who is an artist to the tips of his fingers—would that this could be said of all pianists! In César Franck's beautiful Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra and the 'Africa' fantasia by Saint-Saëns, M. Pugno further distinguished himself in those rare qualities which so eminently characterize his interpretations. Miss Lydia Nervi was the vocalist, and the concert concluded with Tchaikovsky's Pathetic symphony, a work that was first introduced into England, under Sir Alexander Mackenzie's conductorship, by the Philharmonic Society in 1894. Dr. Cowen ably conducted a concert that formed a most pleasant music-making.

ROYAL OPERA.

The season—which opened at Covent Garden Theatre on May 1—has up to the present been memorable by two cycles of Wagner's 'Ring des Nibelungen.' In the first Mr. C. Whitehill achieved success in his impersonation of Wotan, while Frau Wittich and Herr Van Rooy have been as excellent as ever as interpreters of the Bayreuth master's music. But the outstanding feature of performances of all-round excellence was the playing of the superb orchestra under Dr. Richter's inspiring and magnificent sway. In 'Lohengrin' (on May 8), in 'Tristan' (on May 19), and 'Tannhäuser' (on May 23), Dr. Richter further proved that as a conductor of Wagnerian music he is unapproachable.

Rossini's 'Barbiere' was represented on May 3, and on the ninth of the month Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale' was revived, after having lain dormant in London for nearly a quarter of a century. 'Don Pasquale' received its first performance in England on June 29 (not 30, as stated in Grove), 1843, at Her Majesty's Theatre, for the benefit of Lablache, who with Grisi, Mario and Fornasari formed a perfect quartet of chief singers. On that occasion the curtain was not lowered until one o'clock in the morning! On May 17 Madame Melba made her réentrée in Verdi's 'Traviata,' and by her magnificent vocalization fully maintained her position as a great queen of song. Puccini's 'La Bohème,' performed on May 22, had the advantage of Madame Melba's and Signor Caruso's co-operation, the result being an unequalled success.

Except the Wagnerian operas performed under Dr. Richter's direction, Signor Mancinelli has conducted the various representations with his wonted skill and intuitiveness.

THE WALDORF THEATRE.

The new Waldorf Theatre in Aldwych, Strand, was opened on Monday evening, May 22, by an Italian operatic and dramatic company, under the management of Mr. Henry Russell. The scheme was to give performances of Italian operas, chiefly of romantic and light character, alternately with stage plays, with Signorina Duse as chief exponent, the underlying idea being the establishment in London of genuine opéra comique. The bill for the opening night consisted of a revival of Ferdinand Paer's opera 'Il Maestro di Capella,' followed by Mascagni's familiar 'I Pagliacci.' The former work was originally produced in Paris—according to Fétis—in 1824. After its first performance it was reduced to one act, in which form it enjoyed considerable popularity.

The music sounded somewhat antiquated, but it has suggestions of the grace of Mozart and is well written, the voice parts being admirably designed to give the singers opportunities of effective vocalisation. The cast consisted of Signor Pini-Corsi, who was most diverting as the composer Barnaba; Signorina Ferraris as Geltrude, the housekeeper, and Signor Massa, Barnaba's nephew, whose mission is to join in some admirable trios. The cast for 'I Pagliacci' comprised Madame de Bohuss, who proved herself a capable artist as Nedda; and Signori de Lucia, Ancona, Fornari and Massa. The Italian choristers showed great interest in their duties, and the orchestra played tastefully under the direction of Signor Arnoldo Conti.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Two remarkable works were produced on May 5 at the Royal Academy of Music, an original dramatic phantasy in two parts with musical accompaniment, entitled 'The House of Shadows,' by Miss E. L. Lomax, and a music-drama without words, entitled 'Dross,' invented by N. Carlton Hill and composed by Mr. Paul Corder.

Miss Lomax has recently become a student at Tenterden Street owing to the favourable opinions expressed on her previous compositions, which include a cantata. 'The House of Shadows' reflects the style of Maeterlinck, but it is well constructed, and is poetical in conception as well as in treatment. The heroine is one Alice, who in the first part sits in the gloaming fearing three shadows, those of evil, error, and death. To her comes a friend, Margaret, who brings her a lily, emblem of purity, to dispel the shadow of evil, and a sunflower, emblem of courage, to banish the shadow of error. For the third shadow there is no antidote, but Margaret tells Alice that this is not to be feared, for it will come as 'grey twilight, strangely cold, but restful to tired eyes.' In the second part the flowers are seen to be drooping, and the cause is made known when Alice enters and soliloquises on her past life. She has been tried and found wanting, and now she is in fear of the third shadow. Presently from the darkest corner of the room there emerges a mist which, gradually assuming a resemblance to a huge human form, slowly enfolds Alice. This was very cleverly managed and the effect was impressively 'creepy.' The music is no less imaginative than that of the libretto. If the scoring is immature, it is picturesque and shows perception of appropriateness. The parts of Alice and Margaret were cleverly played by Miss Clara Butler and Miss Zelpa Mullett.

'Dross' is altogether on a higher plane, and might well be mounted as a curtain-raiser at a West-End theatre. The story is simple but pathetic, and the music is extremely expressive, while the excellence of the workmanship, the melodic beauty of many of the themes, and the masterly orchestration invest the work with artistic value and dignity. The scene is the interior of a French peasant's cottage in winter. Its tenants, an old man and his wife, are on the verge of starvation. Presently a lady appears and offers them money if they will mend her saddle-girth and let her rest while. The visitor proves to be their long-lost daughter, whose mode of life is revealed by some papers. The mother forgives, but the father sternly bids her begone; but she returns while the old couple are asleep, and, stripping off her jewellery, she places it with her purse in the drawer of the table. Shortly afterwards the old people's scanty furniture is seized for rent. They know nothing of the wealth hidden in the table, and they leave the house sorrow-stricken and forlorn. The bailiff finds the treasure, but is murdered, however, by his men to secure it for themselves. The apparent intention of the piece is to show the curse attached to ill-gotten wealth. Mr. Paul Corder's music is remarkable for its aptness to the situations and its illustrative truth. The prayer of the mother to the Virgin Mary is most pathetic in the intensity of its anguished entreaty, and the climaxes are most effectively carried out. The music was excellently rendered by a concealed orchestra, and so deftly was its suggestiveness realized by those on the stage that words were quite unnecessary. The part of the husband was most convincingly played by N. Carlton Hill, and the wife was impersonated with notable dramatic intuition by Miss Lylie McGrath. Miss Ida Kahn also acted skilfully as the daughter, and the minor parts of the bailiff and his two men were played by Messrs. C. C. Maoni, A. Coviello, and McGrath.

THE TONIC SOL-FA COLLEGE.

The annual meeting of the Tonic Sol-fa College, presided over by Sir William J. Collins, Chairman of the Education Committee of the London County Council, was held at Queen's Hall on May 9, when an interesting demonstration of musical dictation and sight-singing from both the tonic sol-fa and staff notations was given by the pupils of Fleet Road (Hampstead) Higher Grade School, under the guidance of their choirmaster, Mr. T. H. Hodges. Various choruses and part-songs were also contributed by a choir of about 400 voices, conducted by Mr. L. C. Venables, and by the Clarnico Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. T. H. Warner. Mr. H. W. Weston also furnished a short organ recital.

Sir William Collins, in the course of an admirable address, said that the musical possibilities of the nation, which had so long lain dormant, had been quickened into vigorous life to a great extent through the influence of the tonic sol-fa system. It was marvellous to contrast the small amount of attention given to singing when the late London School Board was formed, with the enormous importance it had attained when that body was superseded by the London County Council. He was strongly of the opinion that tonic sol-fa had done much to elevate the musical taste of the community.

Dr. McClure, headmaster of Mill Hill School, paid a well-deserved compliment to the children from Fleet Road school, who, he said, had emerged triumphantly from a series of tests of no little difficulty. He remarked that during the last twenty years public opinion with regard to music had undergone an entire change for the better, as was evinced by the establishment in London of at least two permanent orchestras which were acknowledged to be among the best in the world.

Mr. J. Spencer Curwen, in proposing a vote of thanks to the chairman and his supporters, referred to the fact that it was sixty-four years ago since his father, the late Rev. John Curwen, was induced to consider the subject of singing in Sunday schools, from which was evolved the tonic sol-fa notation and system.

Mr. Walter Harrison, the Secretary of the College, furnished some striking particulars of the work of the College. It appears that about twenty-five per cent. of the certificates issued by the College now go to South Africa.

London Concerts.

DR. JOACHIM'S ANNUAL VISIT.

Once again the Joachim Quartet has paid us a visit and held large audiences enthralled by their masterly interpretations of classical works. The party consisted this year of Dr. Joachim, and Professors Carl Haltr, Emmanuel Wirth, and Robert Hausmann, and the concerts, extending from May 8 to 19, were held at Bechstein Hall. Criticism of the performances would be superfluous, but it is recorded that the most modern composer in the scheme was Brahms, the other masters represented being Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, and Schumann.

A notable event was a sonata recital given by Dr. Joachim and Mr. Leonard Borwick on May 22 at Bechstein Hall. The sonatas selected were Bach in E minor, Mozart in A minor, Brahms in F minor (Op. 120, No. 1), and Schumann in D minor (Op. 121). The happiest results accrued from the association of these two artists, and a large and attentive audience were generous in their applause.

VIOLIN RECITALS.

Herr Bronislaw Huberman is an excellent violinist who worthily has won for himself an esteemed position in London. It is eleven years since he came to England as a prodigy, and he may now be said to fulfil the promise of his early years. For his reappearance—at Queen's Hall on May 6—he engaged Mr. Henry J. Wood and his orchestra, with results that were eminently satisfactory. As the programme contained Beethoven's violin Concerto this is high praise. Herr Huberman's selection also included Tschaiikovsky's dainty but little known Scherzo 'Souvenir d'un lieu cher,' which was charmingly interpreted. Herr Huberman was assisted by Mr. Richard Singer, a good pianist, as was proved by his playing in Liszt's concerto in A minor. The violinist gave a recital at Queen's Hall on May 16, when he deepened the favourable impressions made on his previous appearance.

Miss Marie Hall was warmly greeted by a large audience at Queen's Hall on May 13, when she made her reappearance, after a lengthened absence caused by a severe illness. If her interpretation of Bach's concerto in E suggested that her conception of the music was somewhat superficial, she played with great charm and bright spirit in Beethoven's C minor sonata (Op. 30, No. 2), the pianoforte part being admirably rendered by Herr Egon Petri. Miss Hall interpreted Dvorák's 'Humoreske' and a 'Moto perpetuo' by Novacek with delightful expression and crispness. Songs contributed by Mr. William Higley added to the enjoyment of the afternoon's music.

Master Mischa Elman commenced a series of violin recitals at Queen's Hall on May 17, and by their expressiveness no less than by his wonderful technical skill held a large audience in rapt attention. His principal solos were Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole' and Wieniawski's 'Faust Fantasia,' in the interpretation of which he was sympathetically accompanied by Mr. Charles Keith.

Miss Vivien Chartres, an English girl nine years old, is a pupil of Professor Sevcik. This little damsel played with wonderful dexterity on her début at Queen's Hall on May 15, and is undoubtedly gifted musically to a very exceptional degree. This having been satisfactorily demonstrated to the public, let us hope that her parents will not subject her to the strain and excitement of such performances for some years to come. The London Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Cowen as conductor, were engaged for this concert. The child was first heard in Max Bruch's G minor concerto, in the slow movement of which she played with wonderful repose and expression for one so young.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Pianists are well-nigh numberless, and recitals daily crowd upon us; but, alas! there are few performers who leave impressions that are not quickly forgotten. One of the exceptions is Mr. Lamond, and the reason is not far to seek: he is an artist whose execution, albeit of the highest calibre, is effaced by his interpretative power. Would that pianists strove more to make their instrument speak with understanding and less to tickle the popular ear! Mr. Lamond has long been accepted by connoisseurs as an ideal exponent of Beethoven, and there was a large gathering of the master's admirers at Bechstein Hall on April 29, when the Scotch pianist played the sonatas in F minor (Op. 57) and C minor (Op. 111). The programme also included Chopin's 'Funeral March' sonata, and those who heard the interpretation of these masterpieces on this occasion must have been convinced that music can take us far into the infinity of thought.

Of very different character, but appealing to the public by reason of its emotional impetuosity, is the playing of Mr. Mark Hambourg. He, too, played one of Beethoven's sonatas at his recital on May 20, at Bechstein Hall, but rather from a Slavonic than a Teutonic point of view. Special interest was attached to this recital by the production of the result of Mr. Hambourg's offer of ten guineas for a pianoforte piece suitable for performance at his recitals, to which reference is made on page 384. The prize was awarded to Mr. Frank Bridge for a capriccio in A minor, which proved to be a short but brilliant composition. It was greatly applauded, repeated, and the composer twice called to the platform. Mr. Hambourg also included in his programme pieces by Mr. Paul Corder and Mr. Joseph Holbrooke. His practical encouragement to British composers is to be warmly commended.

A few lines of encouragement are due to Miss May Elliot who, at her pianoforte recital on May 1, at Bechstein Hall, gave proofs of having been a diligent student, and possessing musical feeling. Her touch is elastic and sympathetic, and soft passages were rippled off with captivating delicacy and clearness.

Another recital which deserves to be recorded is that of Mr. Barron Morley, an Australian pianist, who made his début in England at Æolian Hall on May 11. Mr. Morley has a powerful technique, and his playing indicated emotional force; but at present the exuberance of early manhood predominates over that subtlety and depth of expression—essential qualities in the artistic temperament—which he will doubtless assiduously cultivate. It was manifest, however, that he made a favourable impression upon his audience, and therefore he may be encouraged to go on.

VIOLA RECITAL.

As a solo instrument the viola is certainly the Cinderella of the string family, and there exists so little music written for it that exceptional interest was attached to the viola recital given by Mr. Lionel Tertis, on May 19, at Æolian Hall, for he gave first performances of no fewer than six new compositions for viola and pianoforte. The most important of these was a sonata in C minor by Mr. York Bowen, who played the pianoforte part. This work is another testimony to the great talent of Mr. Bowen. It is in three movements which are based upon significant and well-contrasted themes developed in a rational and musicianly manner. The first movement is the strongest in point of construction, but the central number is graceful and expressive, while the Finale is delightfully gay and spirited. A Canilena and an 'Arab love song,' by Mr. W. H. Bell, also proved pleasure-giving music, and a Nocturne in D flat, composed by Mr. J. B. McEwen, showed originality. The list of novelties was completed by two bright little pieces, severally entitled 'Andante espressivo' and 'Allegro scherzando,' by Mr. Harry Farieon. In all these Mr. Tertis showed not only great executive skill, but produced a variety of tone-colour which dissipated that sense of monotony not uncommonly felt when the viola is listened to for any extended period. An account of this concert would not be complete without mention of an expressive Romanza and a fascinating Allegretto for viola and organ, composed by Mr. W. Wolstenholme, who played the organ part so effectively that the Allegretto had to be repeated. Miss Gleeson-White contributed some pleasing vocal solos.

VOCAL RECITALS, ETC.

Mr. Gregory Hast sang with delightful refinement and finish at his recital on May 8 at Æolian Hall. Among a group of new songs worthy of attention were 'Nightfall,' by Mr. C. E. Haugland, 'An uncouth love song,' by Dr. H. Walford Davies, 'Beeton Hill,' by Mr. Dalhousie Young, and a 'Spring song,' by Mr. Gustav von Holst.

Mr. Reginald Davidson and Miss Ivy Angove merit a few words of commendation concerning their vocal and violin recital on May 10 at Æolian Hall. Two new songs, 'My liege lady,' by Mr. William Wallace, and 'When we two parted,' by Mr. G. Tomling, proved interesting, and Miss Angove deserves praise for bringing forward and playing a well-written violin sonata in G, by Mr. W. Wolstenholme, in which the composer brilliantly played the pianoforte part.

Mr. Dalhousie Young introduced a considerable number of new songs at his concert at Æolian Hall on May 15. The composer has not in all cases caught the true spirit of the text, but in others he has been extremely successful, particularly in his setting of Mr. A. E. Housman's poems 'The street sounds' and 'Oh, see how thick.' The vocalists were Mr. Gregory Hast and Mr. Campbell McInnes.

A very successful début in England was made on May 16 at Æolian Hall by Madame Gracia Ricardo, an American soprano, whose voice has been well trained, and who sang with charm and intelligence.

Miss Lucie Johnstone gave a successful concert at Steinway Hall on May 4, when she was assisted by Mrs. Helen Trust, Mr. James Davis, Mr. H. Lane Wilson, Miss Mabel Monteith (pianoforte), Miss Ethel Benningfield (violinello), Mr. Hulbert L. Fulkerson (stories), and the Queen Vocal Quartet (Misses Hilda Dickinson, Eileen Maguire, Edith Appleyard, and Sargood Alexander). An enjoyable feature of the evening's music was the spirited rendering of Mr. Lane Wilson's charming song-cycle 'Flora's Holiday.' Mr. F. A. Sewell played all the accompaniments with his wonted skill.

At the concert given by Miss Holland's choir at Canton Hall, Westminster, on May 18, Dr. Max Bruch's 'Das Feuerkreuz' was performed for the first time in England. Its libretto, by Herr Bultaupt, is founded on an episode from the third canto of Scott's 'Lady of the Lake.' The most effective portions are the first scene of the cantata—in which the marriage is interrupted by the bridegroom having to carry the fiery cross to the next bearer—and the 'Kriegsgesang,' in which a march theme is worked up to an imposing climax. There is also the fairly well known 'Ave Maria,' which on this occasion was admirably sung by Miss Gleeson-White. The characters of Norman and Angus were also well rendered by Mr. Hirwen Jones and the Rev. Maurice Bell. Mr. William Barton conducted, and the interpretation of the work merits praise. The programme also contained two of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's settings of Longfellow's 'Poems of Slavery' and an effective part-song entitled 'The Humming Bee,' the melody of which is a Spanish dance measure which Miss Holland heard in Madrid, and has cleverly adapted.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, May 15, 1905.

During Easter Week there were many fine musical performances, notably one, arranged by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, of Bach's 'St. John' Passion. As this work is only given once every six or eight years, there is always an audience thankful to hear it. Franz Schalk, conductor of the Society, made the preparation for the performance a labour of love, so that splendid results were achieved. The choral singing in dramatic passages was most powerful, and at certain tranquil moments most tender. The soloists were Fraulein Johanna Dietz, from Frankfurt-on-Main, Gisela Körner and Herren Senius, from St. Petersburg, and Zalsmann, from Amsterdam.

Mention must also be made of Easter performances by the Evangelical Choral Society and the Vienna Choral Union. These societies have a great advantage in that their concerts of sacred music are given in churches. But such performances are only possible in Protestant churches, because in Catholic ones they cannot be given apart from divine service. The Evangelical community here is however small, and possesses no great churches, hence the choirs are of modest proportions. The former of the two institutions named brought forward works by Palestrina, Graun, Handel, Frescobaldi, Schubert, Rheinberger, and a Psalm by Dr. Richard Stohr, a young composer who studied at the Vienna Conservatorium. The latter institution, under the direction of a young, gifted musician, Ferd. Rebay, gave a worthy performance of Haydn's 'Seven last Words.'

Towards the end of the season the Society of Composers gave a song recital, the programme of which included a number of modern lieder by Max Keger, Richard Strauss, Hans Pfitzner, and a young but excellent native composer, Herr von Wöss. As is the case generally with programmes containing novelties, so here: the new strains were found to be exciting, and on that account not always pleasing. An excellent quartet of female singers,—Mesdames Tschanipa, Koleit, Kröker, and Katzmayer—with delicate but well-trained voices, appeared at a chamber concert and gave to perfection some German compositions by Brahms and several old Volkslieder. The programme included a fine quintet for pianoforte and strings by Joseph Labor, our highly-esteemed Court organist. Herr Mühlfeld, from Meiningen, played the clarinet.

The festival celebrating the hundredth anniversary of Schiller's death, to which I recently referred, properly commenced on May 7 and continued until the 10th of the month. In connection therewith there were naturally many musical performances. The Conservatorium gave a dramatic representation of the 'Lay of the Bell,' for which portions of Max Bruch's music were used. Brahms's setting of Nanie, and Smetana's symphonic poem 'Wallenstein's Lager,' so full of temperament, were given with brilliant success under the direction of Richard von Perger. The official festival consisted of a grand concert, at which the minister of public instruction delivered the festival speech. Helene Stagemann sang several songs, settings of Schiller's poems, and Schmedes, the Court singer, Schubert's fantastic and little-known ballad 'Die Bürgschaft.' The Male Choral Society gave the 'Gruppe aus dem Tartarus,' with Brahms's orchestral accompaniment, and the Vocal Society Brahms's beautiful and tender 'Abend.' The final number of the programme was a hymn in praise of Schiller, written expressly for this festival by Saar and set to music by Josef Rester. It was also sung in the open air at the homage ceremony before Schiller's monument, given in association with Mendelssohn's brilliant 'Festgesang an die Künstler' ('To the Sons of Art').

MANDYCZEWSKI.

Mr. Allen Gill, an excellent time-keeper himself, has recently been presented with a gold watch and a handsome fitted travelling case by one of the various musical societies which he so ably conducts. The inscription on the watch reads thus: 'Presented to Allen Gill, Esq., by the members of the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society, as a mark of their esteem and appreciation of his services as conductor.'

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The chief concert of Good Friday was that given by the Midland Musical Society at the Town Hall, when Gounod's 'Redemption' was performed by that body for the twentieth time—nineteen times on consecutive Good Fridays. This must be a record. The principals on this last occasion were Miss Annie Goodwin, Miss Nellie Pritchard, Miss E. Palmer, Mr. W. E. Spencer, Mr. William Bennett, and Mr. William Evans. The choir was in good form, and the band fairly efficient. Mr. C. W. Perkins was at the organ, and Mr. A. J. Cotton conducted. The hall was crowded.

On April 22 a concert by the City Prize Band took place in the Town Hall, in aid of the instrument fund. This band has done good service in the public parks, and was deserving of support. The soloists were Miss Amy Kendal, Miss Marguerite Gell, Mr. H. J. England, and Mr. Ripley Evans. Miss Olive Rider was the accompanist, and Mr. I. Perrin conducted.—The musical matinees at the Royal Society of Artists continue their successful course, under the direction of Mr. Oscar Pollack.

On May 13 Mr. T. M. Abbott gave his third and last viola recital at the Midland Institute School of Music. The programme was highly interesting, comprising a short suite for viola alone by Friedrich Hermann, the Élégie (Op. 30) by Viëuxtemps, the barcarolle from the Viola Concerto by Emil Kreuz, the Duo in B flat by Mozart (written for his friend Michael Haydn), for violin and viola, and the Sonata for viola and pianoforte (Op. 49) by Rubinstein. In the Mozart duo Mr. Abbott took the violin part and Mr. Charles Butler that for viola. Mr. Julius Harrison (pianist) and Miss A. K. Prior (vocalist) assisted at the recital. The result should be greater attention to the viola as a solo instrument.

Under the auspices of the Society of St. Cecilia, founded a year ago for the promotion of ecclesiastical music, Mr. F. W. Beard gave a lecture on May 17, taking for his subject the 'Essentials of good vocal music.' Illustrations, given by the choir of St. Catherine's (Roman Catholic) Church, Horse Fair, included motet, 'O sacrum convivium' (Farrant), 'Adoramus te, Christe' (Mozart), 'O salutaris' (Elgar); Agnus Dei, from Mass in D, and other pieces.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Cotham Ladies' Glee Society gave a concert on April 29 at Redland Park Hall, under the direction of Mr. F. R. Rickman. In addition to part-music, which was nicely rendered, there were songs by some members of the choir. Instrumental selections were contributed by Miss Hilda Barr (violin), Miss Nellie Pavey (violoncello), and Mr. Rickman (pianoforte).

There was a large attendance at the Young Men's Christian Association Hall on May 10, when the Knowle and Totterdown Choral Society gave a selection from Haydn's 'Creation,' creditably performed under the direction of Mr. E. T. Morgan. The principal vocalists were Miss Amy Perry, Mr. F. C. Board, and Mr. R. Burchill.

On May 11 the Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society, at the Knightstone Pavilion, performed Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha.' The soloists were Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Montague Borwell. The band was largely recruited from Bristol, Mr. F. S. Gardner being the leader, and the choir numbered about 200 voices. Mr. Edward Cook (Bristol) conducted the work, which was listened to with evident gratification by a crowded audience.

St. John's Choral Society, on May 16, gave a concert in the Parish Room, Redland, and there was a large attendance. In the first part 'The Fairy Ring,' by Dr. W. H. Cummings, was performed, the soloists being Miss Katherine Gerrish, Miss Mabel Cole, Mr. H. Lewis Wensley, and Mr. A. E. Bullock. In the second part Sir Arthur Sullivan's 'King Arthur' music was agreeably interpreted. Mr. Harold Bernard was leader of the orchestra, and Mr. A. Ernest Hill conducted.

The Clevedon Philharmonic Society gave a concert at the Public Hall on May 17, under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook. They had already interpreted Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' and now gave the second and third portions of his 'Scenes.' The principal vocalists were Mrs. Charles Slade, Mr. H. Lewis Wensley, and Mr. Frank Baber. The band was led by Mr. F. S. Gardner.

On May 18, the Weston-super-Mare Instrumental Society, about sixty performers, held their annual concert in the Knightstone Pavilion. The principal work performed was Sterndale Bennett's Symphony in G minor. The vocalists were Miss Iona Robertson and Mr. Furness Williams, and Mr. E. Pavey conducted.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave the fifth and last concert for the season on April 18. Miss Agnes Nicholls, who made her first appearance at these concerts, sang Weber's 'Ocean, thou mighty monster' and the 'Liebestod' from 'Tristan.' Mr. Hamilton Harty's 'Irish' symphony, which gained the prize at the 'Feis Ceoil' of 1904, was repeated, and confirmed the very favourable impression made at its first performance here last year. Signor Esposito gave a very fine rendering of the solo part of Beethoven's E flat pianoforte concerto, which had not been heard here for many years. The programme also included the prelude to Act III, and 'Apprentices' dance' from 'Die Meistersinger' and the 'Vorspiel' from 'Tristan.' Mr. Hamilton Harty showed promise as a conductor in his own symphony, the concerto, and in the accompaniment to the Weber scena. Signor Esposito conducted the remainder of the concert.

On May 11 the annual distribution of prizes in connection with the Royal Irish Academy of Music was held in the Royal University Buildings. The orchestra, conducted by Dr. Jozé, played the overtures to 'Athalie' (Mendelssohn), and 'Raymond' (Ambroise Thomas), and Mozart's 'Turkish March.' Miss Madeleine Moore and Miss Cary were the pianists, Miss Marie Dowse and Miss Josephine Murphy the violinists, Miss Edith Vance and Mr. Solomon Rosenberg—both of whom showed exceptional talent—the violoncellists, Miss Rosa O'Farrell, Miss Nettie Edwards, Miss Lily Murray, and Mr. Eugene Leahy the vocalists.

The University of Dublin Choral Society gave on May 18 a performance of Dvorák's 'The Spectre's Bride,' with full band and the chorus of the Society. Miss Ethel Lett (amateur), one of the Associates of the Society, sang the soprano music and Mr. Dan Jones and Mr. Thomas Marchant the tenor and bass respectively. Mr. Charles Marchant conducted an admirable performance.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

The last concert of the Cheltenham Choral Society, given on April 26, was of a varied and attractive kind. The Westminster Glee Singers contributed largely to the programme, being especially successful in two new part-songs by Mr. C. Lee Williams, ex-organist of Gloucester Cathedral. Mr. Matthews, director of the Society, conducted part-songs by Elgar, Pinsuti, and Harry Matthews, which were well sung by the choir. The orchestra played acceptably selections from 'Cavalleria' and 'Midsummer Night's Dream.'

The Gloucestershire Orchestral Society, of which Dr. A. Herbert Brewer is the conductor, gave their annual concert with much success at the Shire Hall, Gloucester, on April 26. The orchestra (mainly composed of lady amateurs) played Beethoven's 'Leonora' overture, Schumann's symphony No. 2, in C, the overture from Bach's suite in D, and Massenet's charming musical scenes. Mr. W. H. Reed, professional instructor to the Society, played exquisitely the Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso for violin by Saint-Saëns, and Miss Lucie Lenoir sang in a pleasing manner. Mr. A. W. Vine, organist of Tewkesbury Abbey, was an admirable accompanist. It is difficult to overestimate the good work this Society is doing for orchestral music throughout the county.

A brief notice of the performance of Berlioz's 'Faust' by the Cheltenham Philharmonic Society on May 17 is all that is possible. Mr. Phillips conducted, as usual, an excellent band, and the choir did well. The principals were Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. H. Beaumont, Mr. E. Davies, and Mr. Charles Tree.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The voice of music has not been completely silenced during the past month. The concluding concert of our leading amateur orchestral organization, the Beethoven Society, was given on May 2 under the direction of the honorary conductor, Mr. E. Gordon Cockrell. In Beethoven's C minor symphony the orchestra failed of some of the honour they strove to confer on the great composer who honours them; but in Massenet's suite, 'Scènes Pittoresques,' they played very well. The Rev. H. L. Marsh, of Manchester Cathedral, exhibited undoubted technical ability in executing Chopin's 'Variations brillantes,' and (with orchestra) Mendelssohn's capriccio in B minor for pianoforte (Op. 22). Miss Tissie Kelly, a sweet-voiced young amateur, contributed songs.

Two public recitals have been given on the excellent organ in the Whitworth Hall of Manchester University. Dr. Kendrick Pyne was to have played at the first, on May 3, but owing to a slight indisposition his place was filled—and very capably filled—by his cathedral deputy, Mr. Isaac Davidson. Volckmar's sonata in C minor, with the fugue as the last of the three movements, was the most conspicuous item in Mr. Davidson's programme.

The Schiller Anstalt did not forget the Schiller Centenary. The literary features of the celebration, on May 13, were adorned with musical settings of Schiller's verse, including Schubert's songs, 'Die Sehnsucht,' 'Des Mädchens Klage,' and 'Die Erwartung,' sung by Miss Fillunger; and Romberg's 'Die Glocke,' the solos in which were delivered by Mr. Fowler Burton.

The Executive Committee of the Hallé Concerts have been able to congratulate the guarantors upon the financial as well as upon the artistic success of the past season. Last year there was a debit balance of £190; this year there is a credit balance of £212. The orchestra has given fifty-one performances during the season, twenty-two in Manchester, and twenty-nine in other towns. The chief features of next season's programmes are provisionally arranged. May they be interfered with by some as yet unannounced achievements of British art! A symphony by Bruckner is promised, as are also first-time performances of Bach's 'Wedding Cantata,' Purcell's anthem, 'O give thanks,' Richard Strauss's 'Symphonia Domestica,' and two scenes from Weber's 'Euryanthe.' Dr. Richter and the executive are already shaping in their minds the form in which the jubilee of the Concerts shall be celebrated in 1907.

Mr. Brand Lane reminds us, by-the-way, that the Philharmonic Society, which he established in 1880, has come to the silver wedding of its useful, harmonious life. It has a membership of 360; it rehearses every week save three in the year; and more than 6,000 young chorists have passed through its elementary section. This in itself is well, if we may accept it that the choral society provides the best nursery and feeding ground for the general spread of the unprocessed love and practice of music.

Dr. Brodsky and his colleagues devote the financial balance of the Brodsky Quartet Concerts to the purposes of the sustentation fund of our Royal College of Music, of which, of course, the genial leader is Principal. They have thus, this year, contributed the sum of £165 to the fund—which is applied to the assistance of promising students. It may surely be counted as 'Music in Manchester' that, on May 15, at the College, the 'Wedding March' was played, and that the students emphasised the twenty-fifth anniversary of Dr. and Mrs. Brodsky's wedding-day by presenting them with a silver rose bowl.

Mr. E. J. Broadfield, vice-chairman of the directors of the Gentlemen's Concerts, and a veteran friend of music in Manchester, told a pleasant tale to the subscribers at the annual meeting on May 12. Even he cannot tell us how old the Concerts are! The other day the Hallé Orchestra—which, under Dr. Richter's conductorship, supplies the band—was engaged in a repeat performance of the overture to Handel's 'Julius Caesar,' originally played at one of these concerts in 1745, fourteen years before the composer's death. Silver Weddings and Jubilees cease to count with such a remarkable—and still very comely—foster-mother of music in this city.

Most of the concerts to be recorded are those of choral societies existing outside the main centres of activity. On May 3 the Wallsend Philharmonic Society performed Stanford's 'Phauidrig Crohoore' and a miscellaneous programme, to which Miss V. Hopper and Messrs. J. M. Pearce and J. R. Young contributed vocal items, and Master J. S. Wiggins violin solos. Mr. E. J. Gibbon conducted. On May 4 the Rothbury Choral Union, under the direction of Mr. E. J. Stevens, gave Elgar's 'Banner of St. George.' The choral society centred at Ovingham-on-Tyne gave a concert on May 9, of which Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' was the principal feature. A concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust' was given by the Tynemouth Amateur Vocal Society on May 10, the soloists being Misses G. Woodall and L. Payne, and Messrs. H. Brearley, C. Tree, and J. R. Young. There was a full orchestra, and Mr. M. Fairs conducted. On the same evening Dr. Somervell's cantata 'The Power of Sound' was given by the Durham Musical Society, which exhibited freshness and clearness of tone. An interesting number was Dr. Armes's prize madrigal 'Victoria,' conducted by the composer. Miss L. Sparkes was the soloist, and Mr. W. Ellis, sub-organist of Durham Cathedral, was responsible for the training of the chorus.

A very creditable initial appearance was made on May 16 by a new organization, the Newcastle Catholic Choral Society, when Beethoven's Mass in C was satisfactorily rendered. Mr. E. J. Rogers conducted, but to Mr. A. Lohmeyer had fallen much of the training of the choir. Mr. N. H. Brown presided at the organ, and the soloists were Madame Goodall, Miss A. Hope, Messrs. R. Brody and A. H. Gee.

The chief musical event in Norwich last month was the first visit of Herr Fritz Kreisler, who appeared at the last concert of the season given by the Norwich Philharmonic Society. Herr Kreisler's chief contribution to the programme was Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and in the second part he played with rare execution and finish Dvorák's 'Humoresque,' Paganini's 'Caprice,' and variations on a theme by Corelli. The audience was most enthusiastic, and the distinguished violinist was again and again recalled to the platform. The band, consisting almost exclusively of local players, contributed the 'Oberon' and 'Meistersinger' overtures. Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' in which Dr. Bates's Choral Society took part, was also included in the programme of this very noteworthy concert.

The Saturday Popular Concerts, under the direction of Dr. Bunnett, have now finished for the season, which has been a decidedly successful one, greater variety having been introduced into the programmes and a larger attendance recorded. Mr. Arthur Bent was the solo violinist at the last concert, Mr. Weekes—the Norfolk scholar at the Royal College of Music—joining Mr. Bent in a duet for two violins and Miss Teresa Blamy making a welcome reappearance.

A most successful concert was that given at Great Yarmouth on April 27 by the Musical Society, when Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was given under the conductorship of Mr. Haydon Hare. The solo vocalists included Miss Maggie Purvis and Mr. Charles Knowles.

The arrangements for the approaching Festival are in a forward state, all the artists having been engaged and the principal works decided upon. In addition to those already announced a new secular cantata by Sir Hubert Parry will be produced at one of the evening concerts.

The Norwich Orchestral Union (conductor, Mr. Ernest Harcourt) has also finished its winter season, and at the last concert Madame Helen Trust was the principal vocalist. A new quintet for pianoforte and strings by Mr. Harcourt was heard for the first time, and met with a favourable reception.

Gaul's 'Holy City' was given at the Albert Hall on May 7 by a band and chorus of 200 performers. The soloists were Miss Crisp, Madame Dennis, Mr. Joseph Turner, and Mr. Downing.

At Derby, Harold Henry's Orchestral Society gave the last concert of their thirteenth season on May 9. The programme included German's three dances from 'As you like it' and a suite by Dvorák. Miss Lily Crawford was the vocalist and Mr. Henry the solo violinist, while Mr. Sadler undertook the dual duties of conductor and accompanist.

Miss Cantelo gave the last of her series of chamber concerts at the Mechanics' Institute on May 11, her colleagues being Dr. Brodsky, Mr. Rawdon Briggs, Mr. Carl Fuchs, and Mr. S. Spielmann. Fine performances of Beethoven's Quartet (Op. 74) and Brahms's Pianoforte Quintet were given; Miss Cantelo played solos by Chopin, and Dr. Brodsky gave a masterly interpretation of Bach's violin concerto in A minor.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A brilliant audience filled the Albert Hall on May 2, when the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society gave their eighty-third concert. In accordance with a commendable policy, two works new to Sheffield were performed, namely, Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' and Bach's 'Sleepers, wake!' In each of these grateful works the fine chorus of the Society sang with exhilarating enthusiasm, the tone-quality of all the parts being noteworthy and the technique excellent, especially in regard to clear enunciation of the words, attack, and dramatic expression. The contrast in style of the two works was admirably reflected in their treatment by the choristers. Unaccompanied part-songs—Elgar's 'O Happy Eyes' and Brahms's 'The Maiden'—were also successfully sung. The experiment of engaging a full orchestra was quite justified by the excellent playing in Beethoven's 'Prometheus' overture, the Scherzo from Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, and other works. Mr. J. W. Phillips gave a clever and much-enjoyed performance of Handel's fourth organ concerto with choral ending. The soloists were all members of the Society. Mr. J. A. Rodgers, who shares the direction of the Society with Mr. Henry J. Wood, conducted.

The excellent choral society attached to the Sheffield Pupil Teachers' Centre gave an enjoyable concert in the Albert Hall under the direction of Mr. Arnold. Part-songs for female voices by Brahms and Elgar were very charmingly sung, the tone and attainments of the choir giving high promise for the future. Considerable merit attended the performances of the Heeley Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. Arnold Bagshaw) and the Park Instrumental Society (directed by Miss Ethel Bird). A flourishing suburban body, the Millhouses Choral Society, has performed Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George,' under the direction of Mr. W. Powell.

Bournemouth again substantiates her claim as a place of light and leading in matters musical. The list of works performed by the Municipal Orchestra at the tenth series of symphony concerts—a total of sixty-one performances—reflects the greatest credit on Mr. Dan Godfrey, the conductor of those enjoyable music-makings. We are glad to find that English music is well cared for at Bournemouth, and the fact that such distinguished composers as Sir Hubert Parry and Sir Charles Stanford personally conducted their compositions during the past season is distinctly encouraging in the furtherance of native art.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

The Schiller festivities included a performance of 'Semele,' the poet's first dramatic attempt, given at the Royal Opera. The melodramas of Georg Benda, the first of which, 'Ariadne auf Naxos,' was produced in 1774, were frequently played at Stuttgart, and this 'Semele,' entitled 'Lyrische Operette von zwei Szenen,' was presumably intended to be set in a similar manner, the music to be composed by Johann Rudolt Zumsteeg, Schiller's friend and schoolfellow at the Military Academy. It may be interesting to add that Zumsteeg set many of Schiller's poems to music; also that Schubert, when he first commenced writing songs, was influenced by him. The first of the musical celebrations in honour of Schiller was the concert given by the united Berlin-Potsdam Wagner Societies, at which the 'Iphigénie' overture with Wagner's close, Liszt's symphonic poem 'Die Ideale,' and Beethoven's Choral Symphony were performed. The programme of the Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Siegfried Ochs, on May 8, included the choral portion of the Ninth Symphony, Hermann Goetz's 'Nänie,' Schubert's 'Gruppe aus dem Tartarus,' and Haydn's 'Die Teilung der Erde,' according to Eitner, a setting of Schiller's poem for brass with pianoforte accompaniment. There were also special Schiller concerts given at the Königl. Hochschule für Musik, under the direction of Dr. Max Bruch and Professor Schulze; and at the Singakademie, under Georg Schumann. On May 8, at the 'Festakt,' in front of the Schiller monument, among other works were given Mendelssohn's 'An die Künstler,' Reichardt's 'Das eleusische fest,' sung by 1,500 children's voices, and Rossini's 'William Tell' overture, performed by six military bands. At the University Festakt on May 9, Max Bruch's choral work 'Dithyrambe' was performed by the Opera chorus and band, under the direction of Dr. Muck. During the season 1905-6, the Singakademie will perform the following works: Beethoven's Mass in D; Brahms's 'Begräbnisgesang,' 'Gesang der Parzen,' 'Nänie,' and the German Requiem; Bach's 'Christmas' oratorio; Elgar's 'The Apostles' (first performance); Haydn's 'Creation'; and Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion.

PARIS.

The Sonzogno Company commenced their six weeks' season on May 2 with a performance of Francesco Cilea's 'Adriana Lecouvreur,' the opera which proved so successful when given in London last season by the Naples company. This was followed on May 4 by Umberto Giordano's 'Siberia,' produced at La Scala, December 19, 1903. The libretto is by Luigi Illica; the story of Stéphanie, who follows her lover condemned to the Siberian mines, but who in endeavouring to escape with him is shot dead by soldiers, is very sensational; the music is said to be highly dramatic. Gabriel Dupont's 'La Cabrera,' which gained the £2,000 prize in the Sonzogno competition, followed on the next evening. The title-rôle was sung by the distinguished vocalist, Signora Bellincioni, who created the part at Milan. On May 9 came Mascagni's 'L'Amico Fritz' (Milan, 1898), and on May 13 Giordano's 'Fedora,' the opera which followed his 'Andrea Chénier' (Milan, 1896). In connection with the recent revival of Gluck's 'Armide' at the Opéra, M. Alfred Bruneau, in Le Matin, noted the dates of the last performances of Gluck's great operas here. The dates are given in a German paper as follows: 'Iphigénie en Aulide,' 1824; 'Iphigénie en Tauride,' 1829; 'Armide,' 1831; 'Orphée,' 1848; and 'Alceste,' 1866. As regards 'Orphée,' however, there was the great revival at the Théâtre-Lyrique in November, 1859, in which Madame Pauline Viardot appeared with remarkable success; the '1848' must therefore be a misprint.

GRAZ.

The Tonkünstlerfest of the Allgemeiner deutscher Musikverein was announced to commence here on May 31 and to end on June 4. In connection therewith performances of Richard Strauss's 'Feuersnot' and Liszt's 'St. Elisabeth' will be given at the Vienna Opera on June 5 and 6. The rhapsody 'Dem Verklärten,' composed by Max Schillings, is included in the programme.

Miscellaneous.

The Bermondsey Settlement Choral and Orchestral Union brought their fourteenth season to a successful close on May 4, with a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha' complete. The choruses were admirably rendered, the balance of parts and quality of tone being particularly good. The solo vocalists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Sidwell Jones, and Mr. Randalow. A full professional and local orchestra, with Mr. Henry Lewis as principal violin, and Miss Miriam Timothy as harpist, gave a good account of the picturesque orchestration. The work was conducted by Mr. John E. Borland.

The South Finsbury, East Lambeth and Southwark Evening Schools Choral Union held their third annual Festival Concert in the Great Central Hall, Bermondsey, on May 20, when excerpts from Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' and a capital rendering of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' were given by a chorus and band of 500 performers. The vocal tone was very bright and strong, and it was gratifying to see with what confidence many of the choir sang without referring to their books. Mr. A. G. Gibbs, who conducted, and all concerned, must be heartily congratulated upon a highly-successful performance.

The Lewisham Choral Society held the final concert of their season on April 27 at the Court Hill Schools, Lewisham, when Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Sir Edward Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' together with a small miscellaneous programme, were given. The soloists were Miss Ethel Lister, Miss Zander, Mr. William Maxwell, and Mr. Harry Dearth. The chorus and orchestra, numbering over 120, were ably conducted by Mr. Frank Idle.

The Upper Norwood Glee and Madrigal Society gave a concert at the Royal Normal College Hall on May 9, under the direction of Mr. E. Victor Williams. The choir were heard in West's part-song 'Love and Summer,' Mackenzie's trio 'Come, sisters, come,' the part-song 'Blow, ye gentle breezes' by J. C. Marks, and Walthew's cantata 'The pied piper.' Miss Nora Meredith, Mr. Henry Plevy, Mr. A. J. Beck and Miss Kathleen Parlow (violin) were the soloists.

The Streatham Choral Society performed Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' at the final concert of the season on May 8. The choir sang with excellent attack and spirit and the orchestra was eminently satisfactory. The solo vocalists were Miss Amy Fletcher, Miss Susetta Fenn, Mr. Elihu Mitchell, and Mr. Dudley Masters. Dr. Cuthbert Harris conducted with much skill and alertness.

Purcell's opera, 'Dido and Æneas,' was performed, without scenery, on May 24 by the lady students of the Church of England High School in Graham Street, Eaton Terrace, assisted by the students of the similar institution in Baker Street, at which school the opera was repeated on May 25 and 26. The orchestra was composed of the instruments for which the work was originally scored by Purcell.

The Victoria University of Manchester announces that as an equivalent for the satisfactory playing of some musical instrument, the diploma of the Licentiatehip of the Royal Academy of Music, the Associateships of the Royal College of Music, of the Royal Manchester College of Music, or of the Royal College of Organists, will be accepted in connection with the examination for the degree of Bachelor of Music.

Mr. J. E. Adkins, organist of Preston Parish Church, has been appointed conductor of the Preston Choral Society in succession to Dr. Henry Coward.

'The Roll of the Union of Graduates in Music' for 1905 is a periodical publication of special value as a book of reference.

The Annual Festival of the Nonconformist Choir Union (the seventeenth of the series) took place at the Crystal Palace on May 20, under the experienced direction of Mr. E. Minshall. The choir of 4,000 voices effectively sang choruses, anthems, and part-songs. Under Mr. Croger's vigilant conductorship the band of the Union (seventy-four performers) played orchestral selections, and organ solos by Mr. Fountain Meen and Mr. Lloyd Hartley added to the attractiveness of the concert. Mr. Arthur Berridge's sacred cantata 'The Triumph of the Cross' was sung in the Concert Room by a select choir, under the direction of the composer, who is hon. secretary of the Union.

The second annual Conference of the Girls' School Music Union was held at the Graham Street High School, Sloane Square, on May 20, when, at the general business meeting in the morning, presided over by Dr. C. Harford Lloyd, the annual report and balance sheet were presented by Miss Cecilia Hill, the hon. secretary. A full report of the Conference will be found in The School Music Review for June.

The collection of old instruments formed by the late Mr. T. W. Taphouse will be sold by Messrs. Sotheby on June 6, and the books forming the valuable library of the well-known Oxford collector are to be similarly disposed of on June 26 and 27.

The Berlin Photographic Company, of New Bond Street, have published an excellent reproduction of the portrait of Dr. Joachim painted by Mr. John S. Sargent, R.A., that which was presented to the eminent violinist at Queen's Hall last year at the hands of the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, M.P.

As an instance of the rapid spread of music in elementary education it is interesting to learn that Messrs. Challen & Son have received an order for 102 pianofortes from the Lancashire County Council for use in their schools.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

ANTIGUA.—The St. John's Choral Society gave a concert on May 2, when the part-music included Hatton's 'Softly fall the shades of evening,' Mackenzie's 'The Singers,' Elgar's 'The Snow' and 'Weary wind of the West,' Eaton Fanning's 'Vagabonds,' and Barnby's 'The Haven.' The Rev. J. E. Weiss conducted.

ASHBURTON.—The Choral Society gave a successful concert in the Market Hall on May 3, when they performed Part I. of Haydn's 'Creation,' 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' and a miscellaneous selection. The choir specially distinguished themselves in Coleridge-Taylor's cantata. The solo vocalists were Madame Mary Poole, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. T. W. Balhachet. The orchestra played the accompaniments skilfully, and were also heard in Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' march. Mr. Harold Jones was an able conductor.

BEDFORD.—The thirty-ninth season of the Bedford Musical Society terminated with a concert on May 16, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Moszkowski's orchestral suite 'From Foreign Parts' were performed. Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Philip Newbury were the solo vocalists, and a very fine performance was obtained by the able conductor, Dr. H. A. Harding, from the forces under his command.

BELVEDERE.—The Belvedere Male-voice Choir, under the conductorship of Mr. H. Scott-Baker, gave their first concert on May 9 at the Church Schools, the principal item being Mendelssohn's 'O the sons of Art,' which was well rendered. The part-songs 'O Peaceful Night' (German), 'In Absence' (Buck), 'Hymn to Cynthia' (Tours), and 'Serenade' (Mendelssohn), were also sung with good effect. Solos were contributed by Mr. John Bardley and Mr. Charles Amos (vocal), Mr. Scott-Baker (pianoforte), and Mr. Kenneth Park (violinello).

BOGNOR.—The third concert of the Musical Society was given in the Assembly Rooms on May 3. The chief work was MacCunn's cantata 'Bonny Kilmeny,' which was well performed by the choir and orchestra. One of the successes of the evening was Dr. Fanning's part-song 'Daybreak,' the interpretation of which showed most conscientious study. The other numbers were 'Hail, bright abode,' Brahms's 'Bridegroom,' Gounod's 'Soldiers' Chorus,' and Beethoven's First Symphony. The solo vocalists were Miss Gertrude Drinkwater, Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. Charles Sullivan. Mr. W. H. Davies conducted.

CHERTSEY.—A choral and orchestral concert was given by Mr. F. Monk's Musical Union on May 2. The work of the choir and orchestra, which indicated the careful training of their conductor, included Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer,' three oratorio choruses, and other part-music, also the Introduction to Sullivan's 'Prodigal Son,' and Gounod's overture 'Mirella.' Mr. F. Monk conducted.

CHIPPENHAM.—The first concert of the Amateur Orchestra, formed last autumn, was given in the Town Hall on May 1. The programme included Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' march No. 1, the overtures 'Stradella' and 'Figaro,' Haydn's Symphony in D, Tschaiikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' suite, German's 'Nell Gwyn' dances, and Boccherini's minuet for strings. Mr. W. R. Pulein, the conductor, must be sincerely congratulated on the success of this initial music-making.

Craven Arms.—The Craven Arms and District Choral Society gave a performance of Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' on April 29. The principal vocalists were Miss Hilda Poole, Mrs. Brace, Dr. Barnett, and Mr. W. Bradford. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous. The orchestra was composed mainly of members of the Shrewsbury Orchestral Society, under the leadership of Mr. H. H. Salt. The Rev. W. M. D. La Touche conducted.

HORSHAM.—The Musical Society gave their second concert of the season on April 26, when the programme consisted of Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal' and a miscellaneous selection. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Arthur Rousbey and Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Dr. Thompson, the President of the Society, was the reciter. The second part of the concert comprised Schubert's overture to 'Rosamunde' and Elgar's 'Stars of the Summer Night.' Miss D. Lintott led an efficient orchestra, and Miss Laura Sapey accompanied and played Chopin's Scherzo in F sharp minor for pianoforte. Mr. A. P. Whitaker conducted.

HYTHE.—The Choral Society gave the second concert of the season on May 10, when Schubert's 'Song of Miriam' and Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' were performed. Miss Teresa Blamy and Mr. Byron Dewhurst were the soloists, and Dr. Froggatt conducted. Between the cantatas Miss H. Ashworth and Dr. Froggatt played Beethoven's violin sonata in A (Op. 12, No. 2).

LEAMINGTON.—The New Choral Society gave a remarkably fine performance of 'Elijah' in the Winter Hall on April 28. The choir was well balanced, displaying good tone, and singing throughout with much spirit and dramatic effect. Miss Fanny Chetham, Miss May Peters, Mr. W. Maxwell and Mr. Charles Tree were responsible for the principal solo music, the last-named artist interpreting the part of the Prophet with special success. Mr. H. M. J. Gibbon, the conductor, may be congratulated on the satisfactory result of the whole performance.

MORPETH.—The Choral Society brought the season to a close in the Masonic Hall on May 2 by a performance of Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The choir of 100 voices showed excellent qualities and reflected great credit on their conductor, Mr. Henry W. Radford. The solo vocalists were Miss Marie Fairs, Miss Lily Ward, Mr. Herbert Fenwick and Mr. John Aspinall. The second part included a gavotte for full orchestra, composed by the conductor, and Eaton Fanning's part-song 'The Vikings.'

NEWPORT (Mon.).—The Choral Society gave their second concert this season at Tredgar Hall on May 11, when the programme included Mendelssohn's '42nd Psalm,' and chorus 'Lord, Thou alone art God,' also Sullivan's 'Ogladsome light,' and 'Lead, kindly light,' by Harry Evans. Both choir and orchestra did excellent work, the result of good training by the conductor, Mr. Arthur Sims. The solo vocalists were Madame Bertha Rossow and Mr. Ben Davies, and violin solos were contributed by Miss Marion Morgan.

PULBOROUGH.—The Pulborough and District Choral Society, under the direction of the Rev. A. H. S. Patrick, gave performances of 'Elijah' in Storrington and Pulborough churches on May 1 and 2. The soloists were Mrs. Arthur Wyatt, Mrs. Gerald Wyatt, Mrs. H. St. John Clarke, and the Rev. A. A. Jackson, while Mr. Percy Whitehead presided at the organ. The second performance was followed by the presentation of a testimonial to the Rev. A. H. S. Patrick, who has been conductor of the Society for four years.

ST. ALBAN'S.—An excellent performance of Handel's 'Samson' was given by the Philharmonic Society in the Town Hall on May 10. The choir sang with care and finish, and in so doing reflected great credit on their conductor, Mr. William Burt. The soloists were Miss Alice Simons, Miss Katherine Longland, Mr. James Davis, and Mr. Samuel Heath.

SIDMOUTH.—The Choral and Orchestral Society performed Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' and Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' at the Manor Concert Hall on May 2. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Cissie Herbert, Mrs. J. A. Bellamy, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Walter Belgrove. The choir and orchestra numbered 100 performers, and Mr. J. A. Bellamy conducted.

STOURPORT.—The Stourport Church Choral Society chose Smart's 'The Bride of Dunkerron' for their concert on May 3 in the large Parish Room. Miss Estelle Lemit, Mr. Alban Cohen and Mr. Everard Healey were the solo vocalists. Mr. Arthur Hytche was leader of the band, and Mr. George Jackson was an able conductor.

UXBRIDGE.—The Uxbridge and Hillingdon Choral Society gave an excellent performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' in the Town Hall on May 11. Mr. Alexander Webster was the solo tenor. In the second part of the programme songs were contributed by Miss Bessie Cartwright and violoncello solos by Mr. Charles Warwick-Evans. The choir, which numbered about seventy voices, also sang well in Stanford's 'Diaphenia' and Wood's 'Full fathom five.' Mr. Louis Hamand conducted.

WELLINGTON, N. Z.—Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary' has been sung twice in St. Paul's pro-Cathedral this year—on Palm Sunday, and on the preceding Friday evening, the latter being the first performance of the work in the colony. Some eighteen years ago Stainer's 'Crucifixion' was started on its successful career in New Zealand in the same church, the performance on that occasion being under the direction of Mr. Robert Parker, who has now introduced what promises to be an equally popular work. The performance of 'Olivet' was in all respects admirable, and its devotional music made a great impression on all who heard it.

WINCHESTER.—The Choral Society gave an excellent performance of 'Judas Maccabaeus' on May 11. The choir and orchestra numbered ninety performers, and did their work well. The solo vocalists were Miss Stella Maris, Madame Layton, Mr. Hunnybun and Mr. Carr. Mr. E. W. Savage presided at the organ and Mr. Gamble conducted.

WORCESTER.—The Musical Society's second concert this season took place in the Public Hall on May 2. The selection of glees, madrigals, and part-songs, given by the choir with excellent effect, included 'Hail, memory' (Battye), 'Come, shepherds' (Benet), 'Matona, lovely maiden' (Orlando Lassus), 'Where art thou, beam of light' (Bishop), 'When Allen-a-Dale' (Pearsall), Rootham's prize part-song 'A shepherd in a glade,' 'Better music ne'er was known' (Parry), and two part-songs by Mendelssohn. The soloists were Miss May Eaves, Mr. F. G. Pardoe, and Mr. Graham Smart (vocalists), and Mr. J. E. R. Teague (violoncello). Mr. W. Mann Dyson, to whose excellent training the success of the part-singing was due, conducted with his usual care.

Answers to Correspondents.

DORA.—The history of the song 'The girl I left behind me' is somewhat obscure. The name of the girl was either Betsy or Sally; but as she appears to have lived in the country she was not the Sally who lived in an alley, unless she had temporarily sallied forth into the country. Neither her age nor her position in life have been discovered; but she had 'golden hair in ringlets fair,' 'eyes that shone like diamonds' and 'a slender waist.' That she was betrothed to a warrior bold may be assumed from the fact that her dearly beloved was bound for 'Brighton camp' when he left his girl behind him. That this Tommy Atkins did not say farewell to Sally at a railway station is proved by the fact that the song is assigned to about the year 1758 or 1759, when there were encampments on the Brighton Downs and Admirals Rodney and Hawke were keeping an eagle eye on the French fleet in Brest harbour. Scotland has not yet claimed either the girl or the melody; but some authorities consider it—the tune, and probably the young lady—to be of Irish origin. Can this be sustained, considering the distinctly English character of the strain? The song has long been used in the army and navy—when a man-of-war weighs anchor, or a regiment leaves the town in which it has been quartered. On those occasions the tune is played by the regimental or ship's band when many tear-shedding girls are left behind to console themselves as best they can.

DISGUSTED.—As a rule, examiners try to be as kind, sympathetic and encouraging as possible. In the case you mention perhaps this was too marked, by which the pupil was led to expect more marks than she received. No, we do not think it is a common practice for examiners to deceive a pupil, but it is quite possible to encourage too much while the examination is in progress. Why not write to the Secretary of the College? Better still—send in your pupil again, giving her a good coaching in Nil desperandum.

L. A. A.—We think it quite possible for well-qualified teachers to be of great assistance to pupils through the medium of correspondence lessons, especially in regard to theory and in the preparation for University examinations for degrees in music. At the same time, it is of immense advantage for a pupil to meet his teacher (or coach) face to face, even for a few lessons, subsequent to those given by correspondence.

F. B. H.—Supplement portraits of Mozart, Beethoven and Handel were issued with the special numbers of THE MUSICAL TIMES devoted to those masters in December, 1891, 1892, and 1893 respectively. A curious and interesting autograph portrait of Beethoven formed a special supplement to our issue of January, 1901. Apply to the publishers for copies.

W. H.—The following anthems will probably suit your requirements: 'The Lord is my Shepherd' (Smart), 'Saviour, again' and 'Sun of my soul' (Chadwick), 'O worship the Lord' (Hollins), 'O how amiable' (Fanning), 'Lord, I have loved the habitation' (Torrance), 'The Lord is my light' (Sydenham), and 'Bless the Lord, O my soul' (Halling).

STELLA.—So far as we can decipher your manuscripts we do not think that your essays in composition are quite sufficiently ripe for publication. Perhaps the copyist is at fault; at all events you had better wait a little longer before you essay to appear in print. In the meantime take some lessons in theory from a competent teacher.

L. E.—It might be somewhat difficult to discover who composed the 'Last Post,' the impressive bugle-call played at military funerals, and we do not think it has been arranged as a pianoforte solo. But you will find the music of the call on page 1 of Sir Charles Stanford's fine setting of the late W. E. Henley's poem 'Last Post,' published by Messrs. Boosey.

PRESTO.—The months of June, July and August are not very suitable for obtaining concert engagements for solo violoncello playing in Manchester. You might write to Mr. J. Aikman Forsyth, 124, Deansgate, Manchester, who would doubtless be kind enough to give you some advice.

MUSICAL AMATEUR.—If you will send us a copy of the tune to which you refer we will endeavour to trace the source of its origin. The book in which it is contained does not appear to be in the British Museum, where it certainly ought to have been deposited long ago.

CHURCH.—The Minster and Priory Church you mention have not yet been written about by 'Dotted Crotchet'; the former he has on his list, and we will endeavour to persuade him to add the other.

A. C. E. suggests to 'A constant reader' (see p. 338, of May issue) 'an interesting but somewhat rhapsodical book by Ernst von Eterlein on Beethoven's pianoforte sonatas, published by William Reeves.'

H. S.—The very short music example you have sent is hardly sufficient to give a clue to the context, and you do not give the title of the work from which the extract is taken. Write again, and we will gladly endeavour to help you.

J. A.—We regret being unable to trace the two songs by Walter Ivan Weldon entitled 'A day dream' and 'It all depends.' Perhaps some of our readers can point to their whereabouts.

U. C. H.—A biographical sketch of Miss Muriel Foster appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of March, 1904. Many thanks for your kind words of appreciation.

KINETON.—Play the passage thus:

(Haydn's Pianoforte Sonata in D, first movement, bar 34).

M. E. G.—The name of the professor under whom Signor Caruso studied singing is Signor Vergine, who, we believe, lives at Naples.

H. L.—Herrn Prof. Ottokar Ševčík, Prague, would be a sufficient address wherewith to find the eminent violin teacher.

L. R. A. M.—A natural in both cases. (The trills on B towards the end of the first half of the first movement of Haydn's pianoforte sonata in D.)

WORSHIP SONG WITH ACCOMPANYING TUNES

EDITED BY

W. GARRETT HORDER,

Editor of "The Treasury of American Sacred Song," "The Poets' Bible," &c., &c.

"It is a collection of which any editor might be proud, and Mr. Horder is to be congratulated upon having thus crowned the success of his labours in the issue of a hymnal that is distinctly practical, worshipful, and meritorious.—The Musical Times.
"It is one of the finest collections of Hymns and Tunes ever contained within a single volume. With remarkably few exceptions the tunes are in true church style, and there is an utter absence of trashy, sentimental tunes. We heartily wish 'Worship Song' all the success it deserves.—Christian World.
"There is a catholicity of spirit and an absence of narrow denominationalism in the book which go far to justify the claim that it is the hymn book of the Free Churches. After careful comparison with the books which have been issued within the last few years by the various Free Churches and the churches in Scotland, it may be confidently affirmed that for the purpose for which it was compiled there is no better book than this, even if there be any so good.—The Examiner.
"It is the simplest truth to say that for cultured catholic spirituality, worshipful sublimity, inspirational power, and literary beauty it is without a peer.—Midsex County Times.
"The work is distinctly epoch making. It is almost ideal. If ever the time comes that the Free Churches unite to have a common hymnal, then here is the book that will answer such a purpose.—The Welshman."

ISSUED BY AUTHORITY.

THIS collection contains an adequate supply of material—167 Anthems and setting of Canticles—suited to the needs of choirs and congregations where it is desirable that the music employed should be of a somewhat simple nature; but in order to meet the requirements of choirs and congregations of higher musical attainments the selection includes compositions which present somewhat greater degrees of difficulty. In the preparation of the book great care and attention have been paid to such practical matters as the clear and distinct printing of the words in close proximity to each of the voice parts, when the latter do not move together; the printing of the organ accompaniment on a separate stave whenever that seemed desirable in the interest of clearness; and generally the avoidance of such typographical defects as have been found by experience to interfere with the usefulness of previous books of a similar nature.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER

*SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS*FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY, RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, FINAL AMENS, VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER, APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters, and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d.; paper, 3d.

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 7s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs. J. W.

PRODUCED AT THE LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT,
MARCH 8, 1905.

INTRODUCTION AND ALLEGRO FOR STRINGS (QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY EDWARD ELGAR.
(Op. 47.)

Full Score and Parts (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenacity of his theme. Phrases of admirable smoothness and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naive little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has been adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. The work, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerably more charm and is not superficial.

PALL MAIL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh customs and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have reason to think that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be remembered that Elgar's dramatic sense is one of his most highly developed stages, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

KING CONOR

BALLAD

(FOUNDED ON AN OLD IRISH LEGEND)

BY

T. D. SULLIVAN

SET TO MUSIC FOR

BARITONE SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

JOSEPH H. ADAMS

(Op. 21).

PRESS NOTICES.

"We dealt with 'King Conor' long ago, and therefore need only confirm our expressed opinion of the work, which proved to be even more dramatically effective than we anticipated. Choir, band, and conductor did all they knew for the composer, with the result that a finer performance was hardly possible, and Mr. Adams, who received an ovation at the close, had every reason for gratification. Seldom, indeed, has a local composer received the honour of a first production by this great and historic Society. Now it only remains to hope that the Cantata may be heard again. Its merit would certainly justify further hearing."—Birmingham Gazette and Express.

"The impression created was entirely favourable, and the applause was only suspended for a moment as the composer was brought on the platform, to be renewed with double vigour as he bowed again and again in acknowledgment of the compliments showered upon him from all sides."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Mr. Adams's musical setting is continuous, the composer making use of representative themes, which are skillfully handled, most pronounced being the motives standing for King Conor, Wizard, and the Dance. The choral portion is never abstruse or overlaid, and is well written for the voices, whilst the orchestration shows a distinct advance in polyphony and picturesqueness from former efforts."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"A most favourable impression was created, the composer being enthusiastically applauded. There is much clever work in 'King Conor,' and Mr. Adams is sincerely to be congratulated upon his achievement."—Birmingham Evening Dispatch.

"Dramatic, scholarly, and effective."—Bristol Mercury.

"The work, a brief, spirited, and musically composition, found considerable favour at the hands of choral organizations on the outlook for half-night pieces."—Glasgow Evening Times.

"The composer has caught the spirit of the poem in a remarkable way."—Catholic News.

SONATA IN D MINOR FOR THE ORGAN

COMPOSED BY ALFRED H. ALLEN.

Price Three Shillings net.

"Organists are still under a debt to Messrs. Novello for the steady supply of music specially written for the instrument of their predilection. Foremost in the ranks of the firm's latest issue a place must be assigned to Alfred H. Allen's Sonata in D minor, which reveals close study of the best models, and, more than that, considerable originality in the composer's own ideas. We believe this is the author's first attempt in sonata form. It is only fair to say that it does him infinite credit. There is some capital fugal writing towards the end of the first movement, which gives place eventually to a well-constructed Intermezzo and Scherzo adapted for the softer registers and the display of delicate fancy in the executant. A Finale, Alla Marcia, partakes more or less of the majestic character of the opening Prelude, though the use of the instrument's weightier tones is postponed for the final climax. The dignity of this closing section is quite exceptional, and as far removed as possible from the meretricious style affected by many writers. The author has a perfect command of harmony, and understands the valuable effect of diatonic passages as opposed to chromatic. His mastery of contrapuntal devices also serves him well. Mr. Allen deserves to be congratulated on his clever work."—Daily Telegraph.

"Organists may be recommended a Sonata in D minor by Alfred H. Allen. This is an extremely well-written work by one who is evidently an expert organist. In the Prelude the composer employs the rarely-used seven-four, alternating with three-four, tempo. His counterpoint flows naturally and without effort. There is an excellent fugal section in this movement. The Intermezzo is melodious and simple in construction, an Allegretto Scherzando in the middle affording effective contrast. The Finale worthily concludes the Sonata."—Morning Post.

"A Sonata in D minor, by Alfred H. Allen, contains something more than sound workmanship, and the light Scherzo offers excellent contrast the stately opening movement and the elaborate Finale."—Athenæum.

ABIDE WITH ME AN EVENING ANTHEM FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI, UNACCOMPANIED DUET (S.A.), AND FULL CHORUS (S.A.T.B.)

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED J. GENTRY.

"The music is laid out effectively, and creates an atmosphere appropriate to the occasion for which the anthem is intended. It has also the advantage of being thoroughly vocal, and the part-writing is clear. We should imagine that the work would be popular with congregations, as with choirs, inasmuch as it adequately expresses the sentiment of the well-known poem."—Halifax Guardian, Sept. 3, 1904.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

1A. TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position) 2s. od.	1B. STUDIES (1st Position) 2s. od.
2A. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) 2s. od.	2B. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) ... 2s. 6d.
3A. DITTO (1st to 5th Position) 3s. od.	3B. DITTO (1st to 5th Position) 3s. od.
4A. DITTO (all positions) 2s. 6d.	4B. (In the Press.)
5A. DITTO	5B.
6A. DITTO	6B.
Books 1A, 2A, 3A, and 4A now ready.	Books 1B, 2B, and 3B now ready.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

BY

GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

PRICE, CLOTH, GILT, SIX SHILLINGS.

"I recognise it, without the smallest hesitation, as one of the most important and valuable among recent contributions to musical literature. . . . The best informed of professional musicians may learn a great deal about the master-works of Beethoven from Sir George Grove, whose wide reading and acute perceptiveness have enabled him to marshal an astonishing array of facts, and whose intimate acquaintance with the spirit of the master has qualified him to throw light upon pages which, to many, are still obscure. . . . I must be satisfied with the remarks already made, earnestly recommending all who recognise Beethoven's greatness as shown in his immortal symphonies to obtain Sir George Grove's volume, and walk in the luminous paths through which he is ready to conduct all who trust his guidance."—Daily Telegraph.

MR. ARTHUR WALENN

(BARITONE).

Now Booking for Next Season.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S "EVERYMAN."

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, RICHMOND, May 3. Of this Concert—
The Herald says: "Mr. Arthur Walenn's fine baritone voice was heard to much advantage in the exacting solos for Everyman."The Surrey Comet: "Mr. Arthur Walenn gave to the character of Everyman the deepest expression and impressiveness, at the same time avoiding that exaggeration which would tempt a singer of less culture."
The Richmond Times: "Of the soloists, the place of honour must certainly be given to Mr. Arthur Walenn, who, as Everyman, had so much to do. It was always difficult, requiring great variety and expression, to ward off a suspicion of dullness that might otherwise have crept in. In Mr. Walenn's hands nothing of the kind happened; he has a bass voice of very pleasing quality, well under control, and was evidently thoroughly acquainted not only with the music itself, but with the spirit of the work."

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE)

(Westminster Abbey).

Of the Royal Choral Society, Queen's Hall Symphony and Promenade Concerts, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace Concerts, Glasgow Choral Union, Belfast Philharmonic Society, &c.

Telegrams—"SOLOIST, LONDON." Phone—519 (P.O.) HAMPTSTEAD.

BOSTON. "ELIJAH."

"Mr. Montague Borwell, in the rôle of the Prophet, was worth going miles to hear. His voice is of the first quality; but not that alone, but his dramatic interpretation of the part, captivated his hearers and held them spellbound. Mr. Borwell has been heard before in Boston, and we shall hope to hear him many times again."—Boston Independent, April 22, 1905.

RAMSGATE. "ELIJAH."

"In a case such as this, one hardly likes to institute comparisons, which at times are odious, but we can say without hesitation that we have never heard better singing by a bass vocalist in any oratorio. Mr. Borwell's work was magnificent, and in no small measure was the undoubted success of the performance due to his efforts."—Thanet Advertiser, April 8, 1905.

STOKE NEWINGTON. "ELIJAH."

"Mr. Montague Borwell sang the music allotted to the Prophet with dignified power and fine phrasing. Majestic, scornful, pleading, and victorious, each musical phrase of the Ishbite's mood was rendered by him with fitting appreciation."—Stoke Newington Recorder, March 31, 1905.

OLDHILL. "MESSIAH."

"Mr. Montague Borwell, the bass, entered and obtained a splendid reception. His voice, rich rather than powerful, was admirably suited to the work he had to perform. He did well in 'But who may abide,' better in 'Thou art gone up on high,' and best of all in 'Why do the nations,' the conclusion of which was drowned in applause."—County Express, March 11, 1905.

COLERAINE. "MESSIAH."

"Mr. Montague Borwell, now quite a favourite in the North of Ireland, sang 'But who may abide,' with excellent good taste, and 'Why do the nations,' with great mastery."—Belfast Evening Telegraph, March 16, 1905.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE. "HIAWATHA."

"Mr. Montague Borwell is a baritone vocalist who, it is sincerely to be hoped, will frequently appear on the local Philharmonic platform. He possesses a magnificent voice, fine presence, and truly sympathetic method, and his treatment of the 'Vision' was a fitting crowning point to a brilliant contribution."—Weston Mercury, May 13, 1905.

GLASGOW. "DREAM OF GERONTIUS."

"The soloists of last night did much for the performance. . . . The strong, telling voice of Mr. Montague Borwell came out well against the chorus in the priestly music of the first part, and as the Angel of the Agency, he was also eminently satisfactory."—Glasgow Herald, February 8, 1905.

AND

MISS WINIFRED MARWOOD

(Mrs. Montague Borwell—SOPRANO).

Of the Royal Albert Hall, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace, and Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, &c.

BARNET. "REDEMPTION."

"Miss Winifred Marwood, to whom was assigned the taxing soprano solos, achieved a great success. The solo and chorus, 'From Thy love as a Father,' excited much enthusiasm, and an encore was demanded, but wisely declined."—Barnet Times.

SUNDERLAND. "ELIJAH."

"Miss Winifred Marwood is a talented vocalist, and her singing was one of the most pleasing features of the evening."—Sunderland Daily Echo.

DORKING. "BRIDE OF DUNKERON."

"Miss Marwood created a most favourable impression in each of her solos, and was each time loudly applauded. She has a sweet, clear-toned voice, and her enunciation is excellent."—Surrey Advertiser.

COLERAINE. "MESSIAH."

"Miss Winifred Marwood, with a soprano voice of liquid purity, had a perfect conception of her part. She sang the pastoral music with a rare charm, and the difficult solo, 'Rejoice, who seldom been sung with so much ability; the long, fluid runs were taken with the ease and grace that denote a highly cultivated organ. Her delivery of 'I know that my Redeemer liveth' was one of the most beautiful items in the Oratorio."—Coleraine Constitution, March 18, 1905.

HEDDINGHAM. "CREATION."

"Miss Marwood, the possessor of a sweet and clear soprano voice, executed her parts in charming manner; her high notes being especially admired."—Halstead Times, May 6, 1905.

"Mr. Irons is known to Church musicians for his excellent tunes to 'Jerusalem, my happy home,' and 'The sun is sinking fast,' in 'H. A. and M.' The present collection contains 39 hymns by this composer together with a few Kyries and chants. There is about his hymn tunes a quiet dignity which attracts us. The melodies are pleasing, and the harmonies effective. We could recommend the book as a useful supplement to other hymnals, where variety is desired."—The Church Times.

OLD ENGLISH
ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs. J. W.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins on September 25.

The College provides complete and systematic instruction and training in every recognized musical subject.

Students can enter for the Course or for Special subjects, and the lessons are given during the day and on certain evenings.

The Course consists of two lessons per week in the principal subject, one lesson per week in a Secondary subject, together with instruction in the Theory of Music (in the case of students of the pianoforte, singing, &c.), and attendance at the Lectures on the Art of Teaching, Musical History, &c. The curriculum is framed with due regard to the special requirements of each Student, and the Directors of Studies are in constant attendance for the purpose of advising Students in this connection. The Fee for the course per Term is Ten Pounds.

The tuition of the College will serve as a preparative for all Public Examinations in the Theory and Practice of Music, including the Examinations for University Degrees.

The College Orchestra, the Choir, and the various Ensemble Classes, including the Light Opera Class, are also open to those not attending the College for other subjects.

JUNIOR SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Pupils of either sex are admitted to this Department up to the age of fifteen, and, as in the Senior School, entry may be made for the Course or for single subjects. All Junior Pupils are under the immediate supervision of the Directors of Studies.

Classes Prospectus, including that for the Junior School, may be had from the undersigned.

GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.

All architecture is what you do to it when you look upon it;

Did you think it was in the white or grey stone? or the lines of the arches and cornices?

All music is what awakes from you, when you are reminded by the instruments:

It is not the violins and the cornets, it is not the oboe nor the beating drums . . . nor that of the men's chorus, nor that of the women's chorus,

It is nearer and farther than they.

WALT WHITMAN.

The charm of variety is only one of the charms of Gloucester Cathedral. Antiquity, architecture, history and music combine to invest this fair fane of the West with peculiar interest and significance. There may be more stately sanctuaries—those majestic sacred edifices that captivate by their external magnificence and hill-top elevation—but Gloucester has every claim to be regarded as a gem among English cathedrals. Let us endeavour, aided by pictorial representation, to substantiate that claim.

As to antiquity, need we go farther back than A.D. 681? In that year Osric, viceroy of King Ethelred of Mercia, founded an abbey at Gloucester. The breaking up of this religious-house, its rebuilding, its destruction by fire (in 1058) need not detain us; suffice it to say that the present building was begun in the year 1089. If anyone should be sceptical as to the date thereof, he has only to look at those mighty pillars of the nave, in which height, strength and majesty are perfectly harmonized. There is nothing like it, except at Tewkesbury Abbey near by, in England or abroad.

The south transept, dating from c. 1330-37, is the earliest known approach to the Perpendicular. The choir (1337-77) was originally like the nave; but in the first half of the 14th century the Norman work was venerated, so to speak, with a 'white stone veil.' The result is that the choir has the appearance of a piece of pure Perpendicular work, as the Norman substructure is for the most part concealed. That the Norman work is still there may be seen from the ambulatory view shown on the next page. The beautiful roof, the flying arches, and the sixty richly-canopied oak stalls of the 14th century are among the charms of this highly-ornamented part of the church. But what shall be said of the glorious east window—'a mighty wall of jewelled glass,' as it has been happily described? The largest window in England, and perhaps in the world, it is five feet wider than the choir walls, and contains 2,736 square feet of glass. The date of the original glass, which has been carefully preserved, is between 1347 and 1350. 'It would be impossible,' says a trusted expert, 'to meet with white glass that could be more solid and silvery in effect. The red is beautifully varied and is most luminous, even in its deepest parts, and the tone of the blue can hardly be surpassed.' To stand on the organ screen and behold this poem in glass as the moonlight steals through this splendid east window is most impressive.

Like many other cathedrals, Gloucester originally had an apsidal ending. This eastern termination ultimately gave place to the present Lady Chapel, built between 1457 and 1499. Here is another glory of which Gloucester may justly boast. The Lady Chapel, one of the largest in England, attracts and engrosses attention by its magnificence. One cannot but admire the genius of those old-time builders in the clever way whereby they grafted the Lady Chapel on to the main building. And who can look up at one of the grandest Perpendicular roofs that has ever been constructed, supported by vaulting shafts of great beauty, without being impressed with the harmonious blending of what may be termed a symphony in stone? The musician will find his way to the south chapel in order to see the window erected to the memory of Samuel Sebastian Wesley, organist of the cathedral from 1865 to 1876.

The crypt, of which the central part is probably the work of Edward the Confessor, and the Norman Chapter House take us back to old times in the nation's history, of which more anon. In the meantime let us walk along the cloisters—the most beautiful in England. Here we find fan-vaulting in excelsis and, moreover, the earliest example of this exquisite and peculiarly English form of ceiling. Whatever may have been the failings of the monk-architects of Gloucester, this magnificent appendage to the cathedral remains as a testimony to their constructive skill and artistic imagination. As will be seen from the photograph (on page 445) the cloisters are glazed; the effect of the beautiful white glass, which is not transparent, is very restful to the eyes. Other features of this fascinating portion of the cathedral buildings are the monks' lavatory, which occupies four bays of the north alley, and, in the south alley, the twenty carrels or recesses, two to each window, where the monks daily pursued their studies. The cloister garth is now the Deanery garden—a well-kept abode of peace in which Dean Spence-Jones passes many a studious hour. Dr. Brewer tells us an amusing story of some old mothers from one of the Gloucester churches who, under the guidance of their vicar, had visited the cathedral. After these good women had been told what the monks did, and shown where they prayed and performed their ablutions, one mamma remained behind and, on shaking hands with the vicar, said she could appreciate all he had said about the monks more than the other women, 'because, you see,

Sir, my old mother used to wash for the Monks !' The 'washing' to which that grateful old body referred was that of Bishop Monk, who held the See from 1830 to 1856 ! Another cloister story may find a place at this point. One day Dr. S. S. Wesley said to his choristers : 'I'll give half-a-crown to the boy who first finds A flat in the cloisters.' One of their number soon claimed the reward when he told Wesley that he had found on a tombstone 'G Sharp, sculp.' That shrewd enharmonic boy is now Mr. Barnes, librarian to the Three Choirs Festival at Gloucester, who told us the story during our recent visit.

Among the externals of the cathedral the central tower claims a prominent place. Erected 1450-57, and in height 225 feet to the top of the pinnacles, it may compare favourably with that of Canterbury, which is ten feet higher and about half-a-century later. Its graceful stateliness, viewed from any position, adds greatly to the beauty of the whole. Gloucester Cathedral is singularly favoured in the possession of some very ancient bells of rare sweetness and power. Three of the bells are pre-Reformation; two others are of the dates c. 1508 and 1626 respectively; three were cast by the Rudhalls, a family of celebrated bell-founders at Gloucester; while Great Peter, or the Clock Bell, which is of the 15th century and weighs 3 tons 5 cwt., is the oldest of its size in the country. At the time of the Dissolution it is recorded that the bell-chambers of the central tower contained 'one grete bell whereuppon the cloke strykithe, and eight other grete bells whereuppon the chyme goithe.' Upon Gloucester's nonet of bells 'the chyme goithe' day by day, and it may be heard at 1 a.m., 5 a.m., 8 a.m., 1 p.m., 5 p.m., and 8 p.m. The four tunes that are played—pricked on a self-acting barrel which changes the tune every other day at 5 a.m.—are by Stephen Jefferies (1662-1712), a former organist of the cathedral; Dr. William Hayes; Dr. John Stevens (1720?-1780), a former chorister of the cathedral; and by Malchair, a drawing-master of Oxford, who died in 1812. We give the melody of the 'Hayes' tune, the most beautiful perhaps of the four melodies :

DR. WILLIAM HAYES, 1708-1777.

The little cloisters and the six graceful arches of Early English work—the remaining portion of the monks' infirmary—add to the charm of the old-world quietude of the cathedral surroundings. To enter the Deanery, originally the abbot's lodging, is to find one's self in perhaps the oldest house in England. With pardonable pride the Dean points to the carved oak wainscoting, of the time of Laud, in his drawing-room. On the staircase is a stone lantern, three feet high and eighteen inches wide, quite a rarity. The Dean's study, formerly the abbot's chapel, is a spacious apartment of Norman work. There is an interesting reference to music-makings at the Deanery in the long ago. In the month of February, 1746, a Mr. Knowle, aged nine, was crowned in the cathedral with a plain circlet of gold. In 1327 Edward II. was cruelly murdered at Berkeley Castle, seventeen miles distant :

The night

When Severn shall re-echo with affright
The sounds of death through Berkeley's roof that ring, Shrieks of an agonizing king.

The remains of this ill-fated monarch were interred in Gloucester Cathedral, not secretly, as has been stated, but with great pomp. Elaborate indeed were the arrangements for investing the obsequies with regal importance. Among the 'charges' were payments for quantities of gold leaf for decorating with leopards the harness, four standards

'the eminent performer on the Jewish psaltery,' advertised a performance on that instrument 'in the club-room at the Deanery,' the said room being the meeting-place of the then existing Gloucester Musical Club.

Some historical notes may find a place at this point. At Christmas, in the year 1085, William the Conqueror, with his lords, held a Court in the Chapter House of Gloucester, when, after much discussion, he ordered a survey to be made of his kingdom, the result of this decree being Domesday Book. In the year 1216 Henry III., the boy king, and twenty pennants, in addition to 'more gold leaf' for the coverings of the horses. Gold leaves to the number of 800 were used for 'the covering lying upon the body of the king.' Four great lions, with mantles upon them of the arms of the king of England, were carved on four sides of the hearse, upon which stood four images of the Evangelists, eight angels with gold censers, while 'two great lions rampant' stood outside the hearse. The sum of 40s. was paid for 'a wooden image in the likeness of the king, and 7s. 3d. for a copper gilt crown for the same.' The tomb of the murdered king, which stands on the north side of the choir, is one of the glories of mediæval sculpture and decorative tabernacle work: the face of the alabaster effigy was carved from a mask taken after the king's death.

Richard II., another juvenile ruler of this realm, held his Parliament at Gloucester in 1378, as did Henry IV. in 1407. Henry VIII. dissolved the abbey when the present cathedral foundation came into existence. Of former bishops, John Hooper was burnt as 'an obstinate heretic' at Gloucester in 1555; Miles Smith was one of the translators of the Authorised Version of the Bible, and is said to have written the preface; and Bishop Ellicott, who has just resigned the See, was for eleven years chairman of the New Testament Revision Committee. The Chapter Acts record that, in the year 1626, the bishop—one Godfrey Goodman—presented to the cathedral 'a faire gylte communion pott for the use of himself and his successors, for the use of the Dean and Prebendaries and all others receiving the communion there.' Another entry must be quoted, one that is of special interest as showing the practical sympathy of the Dean and Chapter with their brethren of St. Paul's Cathedral after the great fire of London:

1680.

It is likewise ordered and agreed that the Treasurer for the time being shall yearly pay towards the Repaire of St. Pauls Church, in London, the sume of eight pounds, the first payment to begin at Michas next and soe to continue for the space of five yeares and noe longer.

The history of the various organs in the cathedral is of unusual interest. The Chapter Acts of nearly two hundred years ago give the following information concerning the solicitation of subscriptions for an organ early in the 17th century:

EXTRACT FROM GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL ACT BOOK
OF MARCH 13, 1617.

The Organs of this Church being in greate decay and in short time likely to be of noe use, we desiringe the speedy repaire of the oulde, or makinge of a new, eyther of which courses the poore state of this Church is not able to beare, encouraged therefore by the example of oure neighbour Church of Worcester, we have adventured to address oure Letters to the Gentry and others of this Countie and City of Gloucester for their aide and assistance herein. The tenor of which Letters followeth in these wordes.

After oure hartie comendacions remembred unto Yow. These are to desire your lawfull favor in a case that concerneth the good and the ornament of our poore Church at Gloucester. The Organs in that Church are very meane, and beside that very farr decayed, which is a greate blemishe to the solemnity of the Service of God in that place. The Church is many wayes impoverished and exceedingly in decaye, neyther have we meanes to amende all that is amisse. Wee are at this time repayinge the decayes of the Church, and by that chardge are utterly disabled to provide a new Organe withoute the helpe of such worthy Gentlemen and others well disposed as shall approve our indeavour herein within the Countie and the City. Wee are ledl on upon this adventure by the example of our neighbour Church of Worcester, which (though it be farr better able than ours is yett found this burthen to heave for them), and therefore tooke this course with good successe to the greate honour of the Gentrye and other inhabitants of that Shoire. The Countie of Gloucester is farr larger, and wee have noe cause to doubt but that this Countie and City, wilbe as forward and bountifull as their neighbours have bene. In this hope we have adventured our Letters, and shalbe gladd to heare they finde kinde acceptance. And for oure partes oute of the poore estate left to this Church wee shalbe willing to give Thirty pounds to the worke over and above other charges which we must necessarily be att. Thus in hope to receive a kinde and lovinge answer from Yow, wee leave yow all to Gods gracious favour and protection.

1617.

Given under our Chapter Seale

To the Right Worshepe our very worthy and lovinge ffreindes the Gentrye and others of ye Countie and City of Gloucester.

(Signed) WILLIAM LAUD. Dean.
ELIAS FFRENCH
THOMAS PRIOR.

Notwithstanding the lapse of years, this organ may have been the one which, by inference, was built by the celebrated Thomas Dallam, as the account books of 1640 contain an entry which reads:

for a messenger to Worcester severall tymes to Tomkins (?) about the agreeem't with Dallam for the new organ	00 : 05 : 00 and in 1641, under the heading In Extraordinariis, there were payments:

To Dallam's man for blowing the bellows of the new organ att the assizes and other tymes	00 : 02 : 00 for entertainment of Mr. Tomkins of Worcester when hee came to approve the new organ	02 : 05 : 00

This Mr. Tomkins, a former pupil of Byrd's, was then organist of Worcester Cathedral. There was no organ in Gloucester Cathedral at the Restoration; but it seems that one Yate, Sheriff of Gloucester in 1661, had purchased the instrument which existed at the Commonwealth, probably with a view of saving it from destruction. At all events the Dean and Chapter bought an organ of Sheriff Yate for which they paid him £80, and for 'a greene curtaine for ye organ and a curtaine rodd, as by bill,' a Mr. Thomas received the sum of '00 : 04 : 00.' This reinstated organ, however, seems to have proved inadequate or unsatisfactory, as in 1663 it was sold for £65 to Mr. Deane, organist of Bristol Cathedral.

Thomas Harris, a master of organ-building, next appears on the scene at Gloucester, when, in 1663, the Dean and Chapter agreed to pay him £400 for a new instrument. Tips were not unknown in those days, as the accounts, under the heading In Extraordinariis, record these payments:

SOME NORMAN PILLARS IN THE NAVE.

(Photograph by Mr. A. H. Pitcher, Gloucester.)

In March, 1665, the workmen were still employed in casting the pipes and carving the case; in September, Harris was paid £20 for two additional stops; in December, Mr. Deane, organist of Bristol Cathedral, and Mr. King, organist of New College, Oxford, came to Gloucester at the request of the Dean and Chapter as 'approbators' to test the quality of the new organ; and in February, 1666, the Dean and Chapter presented Harris with £10 as a proof of their approval on his having completed the work. Subjoined will be found the exact terms of the agreement between

Thomas Harris and his son Renatus and the Dean and Chapter in regard to the repairs and tuning of the organ:

Articles of Agreement made the three and twentieth day of December, 1674, Between the Deane and Chapter Glouc'r of the one part and Thomas Harris and René Harris his sonne both of the City of London organ makers of the other parte.

The said Thomas Harris and René Harris (for and in Consideracon of the yearly Rent and Covennts herein after menconed to be paid and performed) Doe for themselves severally promise Covenant and agree to and with the said Deane and Chapter that they the sd Thomas Harris and René Harris or one of them shall and will from time to time (during the pleasure of the said Deane and Chapter) Well and sufficiently keepe the organ in as good repaire as now it is especially as to the musique part of it as alsoe to keepe it from Runnings stickings and CIPHERINGS or whatever else may happen to the prejudice of the said organ (all violent mocons or accidents by ropes and prejudice by Ratts or other like vermin excepted) And further that they the said Thomas Harris and René Harris or one of them shall once in halfe a yeare or oftner as occasion shall require give Notice to the said Deane and Chapter of theire certaine aboade that soe Notice may be given to them for the mendinge the said organ when there shall be occasion And the said Thomas Harris and René Harris or one of them to come once a yeare at the least or more as occasion shall require and having Notice soe to doe from the said Deane and Chapter for the better Tuning and Keepinge the said organ in all needfull and necessary repaires and amendments (The charge of all speciall alteration of stops or other extraordinary Addicions to be from time to time paid and discharged by the said Deane and Chapter as shall by them at any time be thought fitt and convenient).

The said Deane and Chapter in Consideracon thereof Doe covenant promise and agree to and the sd Deane and Chapter shall yearely and every yeare at the feast of the Nativity of our Lord God pay or cause to be paid unto the said Thomas Harris and René Harris or one of them the yearly sume of five poundes.

The reference in the aforesaid document to 'Ratts or other like vermin' was the result of experience, as in June, 1665, the Dean and Chapter had to expend (at Mr. Jordan's) the sum of half-a-crown for 'Medecynes for the rats that troubled the organ bellase.' This recalls a similar incident which happened more than two hundred years later. At the opening of the new organ (in 1898) at Lincoln Cathedral the builder thereof, Father Willis, greeted the present writer with these words: 'What do you think? The rats have been eating the bellows of my organ in Windsor Castle!'

To return to Gloucester. The original Harris case still stands on the screen. It is a fine specimen of 17th century workmanship and artistic design, so different from the ugly modern organ-cases that are a disgrace to their architectural surroundings. Notice particularly, with the aid of Mr. Underwood's photograph on page 444, the east front, with its charming design of the overhanging choir organ — 'the very pretty choir organ,' as the late Mr. G. E. Street, R.A., described it. A special feature of the case is its ornamentation, for which the Dean and Chapter paid one Campion, a distinguished artist, the sum of £85, a large sum in those days (1664). This ornamentation consists of heraldic shields and bearings which are to be seen on the pipes and case, though time has somewhat dulled their original brilliance.

This Harris organ, with various additions and reparations, did duty for nearly two hundred years; indeed, some of the 17th century pipes are still in use. How delicious is their tone! But in 1847, Father Willis—then a young man of twenty-six and just starting in business—entirely rebuilt the organ. 'It was my stepping-stone to fame,' he told the present writer (see the biographical sketch in THE MUSICAL TIMES of May, 1898). 'The swell, down to double C, had twelve stops and a double venetian front. The pianissimo was simply astounding. I received £400 for the job, and I was presumptuous enough to marry.'

The next extract records the state in which he found the organ :

I rebuilt the organ in 1847 and made it what it is, and as this was a personally effected work, every part of the old instrument is well known to me, and therefore as far as its sound portions are concerned respected; but it had suffered up to that time severely from worms that formed colonies in various parts and which are still there in places, and which, if touched, will often crumble under the touch of the finger. It was not then the practice to paint, varnish, and polish the inside work of the organ; now it is, and with the most enduring results.

Various enlargements and improvements, carried out by Father Willis—including the transference of the keyboards from the east to the south side of the case, in order to render the instrument available for both choir and nave services—took place in 1888, during the organistship of Mr. C. Lee Williams, and in 1898, under the auspices of Dr. Brewer, the present organist.

Father Willis took the great organ compass down to CCC, and there was only one stop on the pedal during the whole time of Wesley's organistship. Through the kindness of the Chapter Clerk (Mr. Nigel D. Haines) we are enabled to give two extracts from Father Willis's letters relating to his 'first cathedral organ,' as he always called the instrument at Gloucester :

Time has shewn that it was quite wrong to extend the compass of the manuals to CCC. I did this in 1847 under the dictation of Mr. Amott, and under protest, and therefore in any alteration of the work this incumbrance should be cleared out and a pedal organ of several stops be constructed to compensate.

It may be of interest to record that Sir Gilbert Scott advocated the removal of the organ from the screen, and that it should be placed in one of the transepts, a position, in fact, which the instrument occupied in olden times. Sir Gilbert's suggestion very narrowly escaped being carried out in 1878, as the Dean and Chapter actually agreed to the principle of a divided organ, thus throwing open the nave and choir. But when the cathedral architect submitted his plan, the Dean and Chapter before deciding upon it sought the opinion of Mr. George Edmund Street, R.A., with the result that that eminent architect strongly advised the retention of the screen position, which remains to this day. In a letter to the Dean (written in June, 1878) Father Willis said: 'I may say how pleased I am that you did not listen to Sir Gilbert Scott to place the organ in the transept.'

The organ at Gloucester is of high pitch! Surely this is a blemish on the beautiful instrument that should speedily be removed. The specification is as follows:

Choristers—should they not be encouraged? And may not an attempt be made in that direction by mentioning the names of those Gloucester choristers who have become cathedral organists, or otherwise made their mark as musicians? Dr. William Hayes sang there as a boy, as did Dr. John Stephens, organist of Salisbury Cathedral in the 18th century. Capel Bond, afterwards of Coventry, and conductor of the first Birmingham Musical Festival, was also a Gloucester chorister, and so were William Mutlow and Herbert Brewer, both of whom became organists of the cathedral which had so often resounded with their youthful voices. In 1669 it appears that the organist was responsible for the religious training of the choristers, as the following extract from the Act Books testifies:

Ordered that the Master of the Choristers be very diligent in teaching the choristers to sing and give his approbation of the voice and aptness of the boy who is to be chosen chorister, and one day in every weeke catechize the choristers in the principles of Christian Religion as it is set downe in the Church catechisme the better to prepare for confirmation.

The Festival of the Three Choirs, which includes the cathedrals of Gloucester, Worcester and Hereford, originated at the beginning of the 18th century. Considerations of space will not admit of detailed reference to this important music-making held annually in the cathedrals of Gloucester, Worcester and Hereford in rotation. Suffice it to say that the Festival takes rank among the important musical events of the country, and the reader may be referred to its 'History' for much interesting and valuable information relating to the 'Meeting.'*

A full score of organists! So the records of Gloucester Cathedral testify, the roll covering a period of upwards of three centuries. A broken stone in the south transept of the cathedral gives the name of the first-known chief-musician after the Reformation. It reads thus:

Here lyeth vnder this marbil

He dyed the 6 of Janu[ary] 1[5]80

We may pass over the names of Elias Smith, Philip Hosier, and Berkeley Wrench, except to mention that during the regime of the last-named, the accounts record this payment under the heading In Extraordinariis, in the year 1639:

At the Restoration there was 'given to the Worcester organist the sum of '00 : 02 : 06,' doubtless for officiating on a special occasion. The accounts furnish pathetic information concerning Robert Webb who, at the time that Harris was building the new organ, was 'lying sick and poverty-stricken.' We are told that time after time he was visited by the Dean and the Prebendaries in residence who 'relieved him in his necessities.' The following disbursements relating to Webb and his little orphan daughter speak for themselves:

After Webb's death no organist was appointed until 1665; in the meantime the organist of Worcester Cathedral rendered aid on important occasions. Thomas Lowe, who succeeded Webb, came from Salisbury, the Dean and Chapter paying £10 towards his removal. With Daniel Rosingrave, who began to reign in 1679, we first meet with those amusing records of 'monition' and 'admonition' which the Dean and Chapter very properly considered necessary when dealing with refractory organists. Thus on April 10, 1679:

This day Mr. Washburn, sub-deane of this church, gave Mr. Rosingrave, organist, his first Admonition for beating and wounding of John Payn, one of the singing men of this church.

to depart this Church, for that he, the said Stephen Jefferies did upon Thursday last in the morning (being the Thanksgiving day) immediately after the sermon ended and Ye Blessing given, play ouer upon the Organ a Comon Ballad in the hearing of fiftene hundred or two thousand people, to the great scandall of Religion, prophanation of the Church, and greivous offence of all good Christians. And ffarther, because though Dr. Gregory, the senior Prebendary of this Church, did immediately express his great detestation of the same to Mr. Deighton, the Chanter of this Church, and Mr. John Tyler the senior singingman of the Quire, informing

But Mr. Stephen Jefferies, organist from 1682 to 1710 and composer of one of the melodies played by the cathedral chimes, was a shocking offender against proprieties. On January 31, 1685, he received his first 'monition' for 'manifest neglect and unreasonable absence from the Church without leave desired or obtained.' His second 'monition' was for a terrible offence, and is set forth in the Act Books in these words:

8 February, 1687.

Mr. Subdeane pronounced against Mr. Stephen Jefferies, Organist of this Church, his second monition them of the unspeakable scandall that universally was taken at it, and that they immediately acquainted ye said Stephen Jefferies therewith, yet he, the said Stephen Jefferies, in direct despite to Religion, and affront to ye said Dr. Gregory, did after evening prayer, assoone as the last Amen was ended, in the presence and hearing of all the Congregation, fall vpon the same straine, and on the organ plaid ouer the same comon ballad again: insomuch that the young gentlewomen invited one another to dance, the strangers cryed it were better yt the organs were pulled downe then that they should be so used and all sorts declared that ye Dean and Chapr could never remoue the scandall if they did not immediately turne away so insolent & prophane a person out of the church.

Mere 'monitions' do not seem to have curbed the eccentricities of Mr. Stephen Jefferies, therefore the Dean and Chapter tried the effect of 'Admonitions'! The Act Book, under date December 5, 1699, thus records the 'first admonition' of the said Mr. Jefferies, whereby he was ordered to depart this Church for his frequent absences, especially on Sunday mornings; but more particularly for his not educating the choristers in the Grounds of musick which may prove very prejudicall for the future if not speedily remedied.

Sir John Hawkins, in his 'History of Music,' relates the following Jefferies anecdotes:

To cure him of a habit of staying late at the tavern, his wife dressed up a fellow in a winding-sheet, with

In succession to Stephen Jefferies were William Hine, Barnabus Gunn (Handel subscribed to his 'Two cantatas and six songs'), and Martin Smith, the father of the celebrated John Stafford Smith. Early in the organistship of William Mutlow (who reigned from 1782 to 1832)* the intoning of the service was suppressed for a few months. The following extracts from the Cathedral Act Books record this incident and its why and wherefore:

Nov. 30, 1782.

Ordered that in future all the Morning and Evening Prayers and the whole Litany and Communion Service be read in this Cathedral Church in the same manner as in Parish Churches, and not chaunted, except the Psalms Hymns and Anthems, which shall continue to be chaunted and sung with the Organ as heretofore. And directions to meet him [Jefferies] with a lanthorn and candle in the cloisters through which he was to pass on his way home; but that on attempting to terrify him, Jefferies expressed his wonder only by saying: 'I thought all you spirits had been a-bed before this time'!

To quote again from Hawkins:

A singer with a good voice from a distant church had been requested and undertook to sing a solo anthem in Gloucester Cathedral, and for that purpose took his station at the elbow of the organist in the organ-loft. Jefferies, who found him trip in the performance, instead of palliating his mistake and setting him right, immediately rose from his seat and, leaning over the gallery, called out aloud to the choir and the whole congregation: 'He can't sing it!' whilst the Officiating Clergy are retiring from the Communion Table a short Voluntary shall be played, or a Psalm, or portion of a Psalm sung, accompanied with the Organ at the discretion of the Dean or Resident Prebendary for the time being.

The re-instatement of the 'former mode of Recitative or Chaunting' is thus recorded—note the reference to the 'Italian Ecclesiasticks':

June 3, 1783.

WHEREAS the Dean and Chapter had ordered some months ago that the Exhortation, Confession, Absolution, Prayers, Collects, Responses, Creeds and Litany should be read in a solemn and devout manner according to the nature of the case and the reason of the thing, and in conformity to the usage of all Parochial Churches throughout the Realm, also of all his Majesty's Chapels Royal and even of Cathedrals themselves both at the Communion Service and at early Prayers, and in consequence thereof had abolished the mode of chaunting (a mode of recitative in Divine Service first introduced by Italian Ecclesiastics into England the better to conceal their foreign accent and pronunciation from the observation of the People and in order to colour their usurpations of the richer benefices in Cathedrals granted to them by the Pope under the pretence of their great adroitness in plano cantu also to devise some excuse for using Prayers in an unknown tongue). But whereas divers persons through an attachment to old customs appear to be much prejudiced against this alteration or rather this restoration of Divine Service to its primitive Simplicity and Propriety, The Dean and Chapter influenced by the superior motives of Charity and Condescension towards weak Brethren (which require the Sacrifice of private opinion regarding the Forms of Public Worship where the Essentials of Religion are not at stake), and being also supported by the authority of the Lord Bishop their Visitor, actuated by the same good Motives, do now revoke their late Order for Parochial Prayers and hereby establish the former mode of Recitative or Chaunting.

* Some biographical particulars of William Mutlow, with the facsimile of a comical caricature of him drawn by Malibran, appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of September, 1901.

The Bishop's Approbation of the above reads :

I very much approve of the above contents ; but think that all reasonable persons must be contented if the Cathedral Service were restored on Sundays and Great Festivals, and that the present mode of Parochial Prayers be continued on the Week Days. And I do not approve the way of Chaunting the Litany in the middle of the Choir.

(Signed) S. GLOUCESTER.

To Mutlow succeeded John Amott. At the death of the latter (in 1865) Gloucester welcomed its most distinguished organist in the person of Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley : this was his last appointment. A detailed account of his remarkable career appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of May, June, and July, 1900, to which the reader is referred. Wesley drew his last breath on April 19, 1876, in his drawing-room which looked towards the cathedral, and into which his camp bedstead had been brought. (A photograph of this room is given on page 447.)

Excellent results followed the appointment of Dr. Charles Harford Lloyd, now Precentor of Eton and a composer of repute known and sung of all choirs. He held the office from 1876 to 1882, and was followed by Mr. C. Lee Williams, a highly-gifted musician favourably known by various compositions, especially a beautiful little anthem (unaccompanied), 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace.' By-the-way, Mr. Lee Williams has recently given some proof of his literary skill in the issue of a pamphlet entitled 'Among the Isles of Greece : notes on a brief cruise,' wherein he pleasantly describes a holiday visit to that classic region.

Dr. Alfred Herbert Brewer, the present organist, was born at Gloucester, June 21, 1865, and held a choristership in the cathedral from 1877 to 1880. He began his musical studies under Dr. Harford Lloyd, subsequently obtaining the first organ scholarship at the Royal College of Music (April, 1883), where he studied under Sir Walter Parratt and other professors. His church organistships have been St. Catherine's and

St. Mary-de-Crypt, both in Gloucester (1881), St. Giles's, Oxford (1882), and St. Michael's, Coventry (1886-92). He was organ scholar of Exeter College, Oxford, from 1883 to 1885, and then, for a brief period, organist of Bristol Cathedral. After holding the post of music-master at Tonbridge School from 1892 to 1897, he became organist and master of the choristers of Gloucester Cathedral, a position he holds with distinction. He is a member of the Council of the Royal College of Organists, and visiting examiner to the Birmingham Midland Institute School of Music. He obtained the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists in 1897 and took the degree of Bachelor of Music at Dublin University in the same year; the Archbishop of Canterbury has recently conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa.

Dr. Brewer has always shown commendable activity in furthering the interests of the art of music in his native city. He made his mark as conductor of the Three Choirs Festivals held at Gloucester in 1898, 1901, and 1904. Further proof of his conducting skill and organizing energy is furnished by the flourishing state of the following societies meeting under his enthusiastic sway—the Gloucestershire Orchestral Society (one of the largest amateur orchestral societies in the kingdom), the Gloucester Choral Society, and the Gloucester Orpheus Society. The same industry and artistic earnestness which characterise Dr. Brewer's practical musicianship are no less evident in his creative work. He has composed a setting of Psalm 98, a 'Dedication Ode,' 'The Holy Innocents,' and 'Emmaus' (sacred cantatas), and 'Love's Philosophy' (male voices)—all of which have been performed at the Three Choirs Festivals. His latest work, 'A Song of Eden' (Milton's words), is to be sung at the approaching meeting at Worcester. In addition to the foregoing, his compositions include an Idyl for orchestra, various Services (including an orchestral setting in the key of C), anthems, responses for treble voices, hymn-tunes, and organ music, songs, part-songs, pieces for pianoforte and violin, &c., and an operetta 'Rosamund.'

For valued help rendered in the preparation of this article the thanks of the writer are specially tendered to Mr. Nigel D. Haines, Chapter Clerk; to Mr. T. W. G. Cooke, Sub-sacrist; and to Dr. A. Herbert Brewer; also to Mr. S. W. Underwood, Mr. Arthur H. Pitcher, and Messrs. Minchin & Gibbs, all of Gloucester, for the use of their excellent photographs.

DOTTED CROCHET.

CHARLES STEGGALL.

The death, on June 7, of Dr. Charles Steggall is recorded in these pages with sincere regret—a regret deepened by the esteem of a former pupil for an upright man and an excellent musician. When, a few years ago, Dr. Steggall was asked to 'sit' for a MUSICAL TIMES biographical portrait, he, with his characteristic modesty, preferred that anything that might be said about him should take the form of an obituary notice: but at that very time he wrote down some autobiographical notes, placed them in an envelope, and addressed them to the present writer. These notes, in the neatest of handwriting, and found among his papers after his death, have been forwarded to us by Dr. Steggall's son, Mr. Reginald Steggall, for the purposes of this article. We need hardly enlarge upon their pathetic interest, but will endeavour to set forth some of the incidents of a long and honourable career.

Charles Steggall was born in London, June 3, 1826. A passion for music, especially church music, took possession of his nature in his earliest years. In obedience, however, to the wish of his father—who owned an important business in the West-end of London—that he should 'come into the business,' Master Charles, at the end of his school days, entered the paternal counting-house. 'But my thoughts,' he records, 'were always on music, and after a year or two my father saw it was unwise to oppose my inclinations, and he consented to my leaving the office.' From official information kindly furnished by the Secretary specially for this article, we find that Dr. Steggall entered the Royal Academy of Music as a student on June 21, 1847, not in 1848, as has been stated over and over again in books of reference and obituary notices. His (apparently) only professor at Tenterden Street was Sterndale Bennett—a host in himself—who gave him lessons in pianoforte, harmony, and composition. A warm and intimate friendship sprang up between master and pupil, which became closer and closer until it was severed by death.

While still in his teens he obtained his first organ appointment—such as it was—at Christ Chapel (now Emmanuel Church), Maida Vale, then a proprietary sanctuary. To use his own words: 'Christ Chapel then had one of the largest congregations in London, every one of the 2,500 seats being occupied. My father had sittings there in my early childhood, and I have vivid recollections of the first incumbent, Sanderson Robins, and his successors Daniel Moore and George Fisk, whose sermons in those days were the great attraction. Music was nowhere—only the Glorias after the Psalms and hymn-tunes.' A more congenial sphere of work opened up on his being appointed the first organist of Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, consecrated on July 17, 1855. 'At Christ Chapel,' he records, 'the organ, placed in an upper gallery, consisted of great and tenor C swell with two octaves of pedals, but no pedal pipes! At Christ Church the beautifully-toned organ [by Harris], from Winchester Cathedral—converted by Willis from a G to a C organ—consisted of three complete manuals with the 24-ft. pedal stops cut down to 16-ft., thus making an unusually big scale. Here also was a large congregation—among the seat-holders were my friends Cipriani Potter, then Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, and Sterndale Bennett, and moreover music was a feature.' 'I can never forget the delight I experienced in my work here,' he continues, 'the lovely tone of the organ, a good choir, and the canticles sung to Services.' During three years of the Christ Church period Steggall was a pluralist, as he held the post of organist and choirmaster of Clapham Grammar School, where Sir George Grove had been educated. In 1864 he was appointed, by the Benchers, organist and director of the choir to the Honourable Societies of Lincoln's Inn. This office Dr. Steggall held till his death; but for many years his son, Mr. Reginald Steggall, ably discharged the duties of the office, and we are glad to learn that the Benchers have appointed him to succeed his father.

Departing from chronological sequence—disturbed by setting forth the whole of the organistships—we may return to the Academy days. Always industrious, the young student gave proof of his creative gifts at the concerts given by the Academy. We find a part-song, an overture, 'Die Elfen'—which evinced 'an acquaintance with the art of writing for the orchestra by no means common at his age,' so the Musical World recorded—a Kyrie Eleison and Gloria, 'an effort of remarkable talent and still greater promise,' and a Festival setting of the 33rd Psalm ('Rejoice in the Lord') for voices and orchestra. The last-named work was published in 1854 by subscription, the list of subscribers including whose name is down for '1 copy.'

A string quartet, performed at one of the concerts of the Society of British Musicians, testifies to the composition activities and broadened interests of those early days.

The year of the Great Exhibition (1851) marked a great event in the life of Charles Steggall. Until he entered the Royal Academy of Music he had not studied harmony, but so rapidly and thoroughly had he mastered the ins and outs of theoretical knowledge that in four years he succeeded in accumulating the degrees of Bachelor and Doctor of Music at the University of Cambridge. His exercise—a setting for soli, chorus and orchestra of Psalm 105, the choruses being in eight real parts—was performed in Trinity College Chapel on November 4, 1851, the fourth anniversary of Mendelssohn's death. Professor Walmisley conducted the performance, the composer accompanied his work on the organ, 'Sterndale Bennett gave up a busy day's work to be present, like the dear, interested friend he was' (to quote from the autobiographical notes), 'and my dear father was very happy that day.' The Cambridge Journal thus records the event:

On Tuesday week an exercise for the degree of Doctor of Music was performed in Trinity College Chapel. The composer was Mr. Steggall, of London, a pupil of Sterndale Bennett's, and his work was far above the average of such academical exercises, and did great credit to his own genius and the instructions of his master. It commenced with a chorus in eight parts, followed by a duet for two soprani, recit. and air tenore, double chorus, chorale, double quartett for eight voices, another duet for two soprani, aria basso, double chorus and fugue. The duetts for the soprani exhibited a happy vein of melody, and the quartett for eight voices and the final chorus and fugue displayed a learned acquaintance with the art of counterpoint. Altogether, Dr. Steggall may be congratulated on a work which gives him rank among English composers. His music was ably performed by the Cambridge choirs, assisted by some talented youths from the choirs of St. Paul's Cathedral and the Temple Church; Professor Walmisley conducting, and the composer presiding at the organ. The tenor and bass solos were admirably executed by Messrs. Redfearn and Gray, of London. Among the audience was Mr. Sterndale Bennett himself, and he must have been gratified at the evident pleasure which his pupil's compositions gave to a large and attentive assemblage of musical amateurs. The exercise was considered by many competent judges to be the best that had been performed here for many years.

One of the 'talented youths' above referred to was a chubby-faced, curly-headed chorister from St. Paul's Cathedral. 'What a sweet child it is, and what a pretty pipe it's got,' remarked Walmisley to Steggall. The present writer vividly recalls with what pleasure the Doctor would relate the incident of that 'pretty little pipe's' achievements—including a long-sustained high B flat, and how his face would beam as, gently rubbing his hands, he would finish his story thus: 'and that boy was—John Stainer!' Previous to his departure to St. Michael's College, Tenbury, Stainer received from Dr. Steggall a course of lessons in counterpoint.

In regard to his half-century's work as principal professor of the organ at the Royal Academy of Music, Dr. Steggall may tell the story in his own words: 'At the time I entered the Academy the organ was not a recognised subject at Tenterden Street, but after teaching for a year or two as a sub-professor I was appointed professor of the organ in 1851. Except that Dr. S. S. Wesley had for a very short time a few pupils, to whom he gave lessons at St. Mark's Church, Kennington, I was teacher of the organ for upwards of fifty years—1851 to 1903, and until about 1877-8, the only professor of the instrument. For the greater part of that time there was no competing institution where the organ was taught, and my classes being very large and continually changing it may be fairly assumed that I have trained more organists than any other man in the country. From 1862 to 1876 I received my organ classes at my own house, having had an organ built chiefly for this purpose; previously I met them at Christ Chapel and Christ Church. I myself was my own pupil, for I had no other teacher. During the time that I had a G organ at church, I practised Bach, Mendelssohn, &c., at home on C pedals attached to a piano-forte.'

Among Dr. Steggall's many pupils the following names may be mentioned: Sir Joseph Barnby, Dr. G. J. Bennett, Mr. F. A. W. Docker, Mr. E. H. Lemare, and Mr. H. R. Rose. The present writer recalls those pleasant mornings spent at Dr. Steggall's house at Notting Hill, when each student had the opportunity of profiting by hearing lessons given to others in addition to receiving valuable instruction himself; moreover, the Doctor would show us books in his library, give us hints from his own experience, relate anecdotes, &c.—all this being of the greatest advantage and practical benefit to those who were privileged to come under his tuition influence. Exact and painstaking to a degree, Dr. Steggall had a clever knack of overcoming difficulties. His small hand doubtless necessitated his employment of those 'little tricks,' to use the late Edward Dannreuther's term, in his organ-playing which he passed on to others. One such was in the last movement of Mendelssohn's first Organ Sonata. At bar 62 the arpeggio in the left-hand part is awkward to play comfortably—especially if the instrument be one of heavy touch: but the Doctor used to say, 'never mind the first note (C), the pedal will play that; just put your little finger on E, and then you will have no difficulty.'

In the fifties and sixties Dr. Steggall employed much of his spare time in giving musical lectures in London and the country, beginning at Crosby Hall, where evening classes for young men were held. A charming incident in his lecturing experiences must be told in his own words:

'On the occasion of my going to Royston (July 15, 1856) to give a lecture in the Institute of that town, Sterndale Bennett accompanied me and assisted in the illustrations by playing No. 5 of "Handel's Suites de Pièces," which includes "The Harmonious Blacksmith." We were the guests of my friend Mr. John Warren, the founder of the Institute. In the morning, before descending to breakfast, I went into Bennett's room and he received me by saying: "Steggall, it is very singular, but I dreamed in the night that I heard 'The Harmonious Blacksmith,' but don't mention this downstairs." I went down to the dining-room first and my friend at once asked me if the Professor had heard the serenade of the local choir in the small hours of the morning. It appeared they had sung a vocal arrangement of the air entitled "The harmonious Blackbird"! Another interesting incident on the same occasion may be recorded. Among the pictures in Bennett's bedroom was a sampler worked by my friend's mother representing Christ and the Woman of Samaria. He stood admiring it for some time, and not long after he was working on the same subject. I have every reason to believe it was that old sampler at Royston which inspired him to write the oratorio which is now known far and wide.

As honorary secretary to the Bach Society during the whole period of its existence—1849 to 1870—Dr. Steggall rendered splendid and ungrudging service in the propagation of the great Cantor's music in England. He edited the six Motets by Bach, and was Sterndale Bennett's unwearied and invaluable colleague in preparing the first performance in this country of the 'St. Matthew' Passion. This event took place at the Hanover Square Rooms on April 6, 1854. Bennett conducted, a chorister boy named John Stainer and a young tenor named William H. Cummings sang in the chorus on that occasion, and 'Daddy' E. J. Hopkins was at the organ. As the achievements of the Bach Society are set forth in a series of articles on 'Bach's Music in England' which appeared in this Journal between September and December, 1896, there is no need to dwell further on this point; but we venture to reprint a pleasant recollection of those Bach Society early days which Sir John Stainer specially contributed to the above-mentioned articles:

I was born in 1840, so I was only nine years old when the Bach Society was founded. I was one among the very first of those who regularly attended rehearsals, to which I was escorted by an elder sister. The rehearsals were held at the Store Street Rooms, and sometimes at the Royal Academy of Music in Tenterden Street. But I have a most vivid recollection of a series of rehearsals held in Gray and Davison's organ factory. At these Dr. Steggall accompanied us splendidly on the organ. I admired his playing very much, and I remember being for the first time introduced to him at one of those early rehearsals. Also I remember that he laughed heartily when I asked him whether he had pedalled all the running bass part of the chorus, 'Have lightnings and thunders.' The Misses Johnston attended regularly (there were, I think, two sisters), and the Passions Musik was in process of translation by them, fresh sheets of lithographed music being produced at each rehearsal.

A well-known public institution with which Dr. Steggall had much to do was the Royal College of Organists. Founded by the late Richard Limpus, then organist of St. Michael's Church, Cornhill, an early (if not actually the first) meeting to start the College was held at Mullens's Hotel, Ironmonger Lane, on November 23, 1863, with Joseph Surman in the chair. Other meetings followed, including an important foregathering of organists at Exeter Hall on March 12, 1864, when the first Council was elected. As a member of the Council and in virtue of his qualifications, Dr. Steggall gave the inaugural lecture at Freemasons' Tavern on October 18, 1864; and with John Hullah and Edward J. Hopkins he conducted the first examination (July 5, 1866), when five of the seven candidates failed!

To return to the Royal Academy of Music. He was elected a member of the Committee of Management in March, 1870, and in 1884 on the Board of Directors. From November, 1887 to April, 1888, he, with M. Sainton and Mr. Walter Macfarren, acted as Principal during the vacancy in that office. On April 27 the first organ (by Bryceson) built in the Academy was opened, all the performers being his pupils. On January 29, 1903, he severed his connection with the 'old place' in Tenterden Street, having been actively connected with the Academy as student, professor, and a member of the governing body for the long period of fifty-six years. His other official appointments were an examiner for the Cambridge Mus. D. degree (1881-2), and, in succession to the late Dr. W. H. Monk, editor of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' (1889).

As a composer Dr. Steggall is best known by his church music. Of his ten published anthems, 'God came from Teman' and 'Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth' have obtained wide popularity. It may interest organists and members of church choirs to know that he wrote the latter anthem on the day of the Duke of Wellington's funeral, November 18, 1852, when 'the doors were shut in the streets.' Of his many hymn-tunes—and they are excellent in every way—the best known is that associated with the hymn beginning 'Jerusalem on high' and named 'Christ Church,' after the sanctuary at Lancaster Gate of which he was the first organist. This dignified and melodious tune first appeared in 'Hymns for the Church of England, with Proper Tunes' (1865), the music of which he edited. The present writer was much amused when, on one of those lesson-days at Notting Hill, the Doctor mentioned that during his holiday at some seaside place he had heard the organist of the church harmonize the unison line of the tune. 'He called upon me,' said Dr. Steggall, 'but,' he slyly added, 'I did not return the call!' Mention must be made of the excellent 'Instruction Book for the Organ' which he compiled, a little treatise which has met with the commendation of so eminent a teacher as Sir Walter Parratt. Among his organ compositions there are 'Six short and easy pieces,' which merit attention as soft voluntaries, and a Postlude in C minor which introduces the tune 'Christ Church.' His organ arrangements of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' choruses, Bennett's pianoforte compositions, &c., are marked with the sterling qualities of fidelity to the originals and freedom from over-elaboration. And then there are his eight Services, including two for voices and orchestra. Carols and chants complete the list of compositions, all of which are devotional and replete with earnest musicianship.

The remains of Dr. Steggall were interred, on June 13, in Kensal Green Cemetery, where so many distinguished musicians have found their last resting-place. English church music was worthily represented by Sir George Martin, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral; and as the sun's rays streamed down upon the little company gathered around the graveside, each and all must have felt that the sunshine typified the character and career of their departed friend, and that the darkness of death seemed to be dispelled in the refulgent radiance of a perfect summer day.

HANDEL MYTHS.

By DR. W. H. CUMMINGS.

The 'Oxford History of Music,' vol. v., written by Mr. W. H. Hadow, deals with the 'Viennese Period,' and on p. 43 we find the following note: 'Mr. [Dr.] W. H. Stone has recalled the fact that the obbligato to "The Trumpet shall sound" in the Messiah was originally written for a small alto trombone. See Grove iv., p. 176. Trombones were never used in opera until Gluck's Orfeo.' On turning to the reference we find that the passage written by Stone does not say originally written, but reads thus: 'It is probably less known that the familiar air of the Messiah, "The Trumpet shall sound," was formerly played on a small alto Trombone.' Even this modified and vague statement is somewhat surprising. When and where was it so done? I can find no evidence of it, and the thing seems impossible. There is abundant testimony to the fact that Handel composed his obbligati trumpet parts for a well-known, expert performer on that instrument.

The trumpet was held in great estimation in this country long before the arrival of Handel; moreover, a very high standard of performance had been attained in the time of Purcell, who composed largely for the instrument, and wrote various obbligati to his songs, which by their difficulty of ornamentation and compass could only be played by a thoroughly skilled performer. In Purcell's time the Shore family were renowned as musicians and trumpeters. Matthias Shore was Sergeant Trumpeter to the King, with a stipend of £100 per annum and other perquisites. He died in 1700, and was succeeded in his high office by his son William, who died in 1707. The post was then given to John Shore, the brother of William, who was not only a fine trumpet-player, but also the inventor of the tuning-fork. His sister had been a pupil of Purcell's; she married Colley Cibber, and became a stage singer. When she appeared in 'Don Quixote,' her brother played the trumpet obbligato part to Purcell's song 'Genius of England.'

John Shore survived until 1752. As Sergeant he had under him sixteen State trumpeters, amongst whom was Valentine Snow, a son of Moses Snow, Mus. Bac. of Cambridge, a gentleman of the Chapels Royal and a Lay Vicar of Westminster Abbey. In 1753 Valentine Snow was appointed Sergeant Trumpeter in place of John Shore. By this time his reputation as a musician and executant stood very high, and it was for him that Handel composed the various obbligati we find in his oratorios and operas: i.e., the 'Messiah,' 'Samson,' 'Judas Maccabæus,' 'Dettingen Te Deum,' 'Atalanta &c.' Dr. Burney, in his 'History of Music,' specially notes that 'in the overture to "Atalanta" the obbligato trumpet part was intended to display the tone and abilities of Snow, who had returned to Handel's orchestra.' Valentine Snow died in 1770, and the following humorous epitaph appeared:

Thaw every breast, melt every eye with woe,
Here's dissolution by the hand of death;
To dirt, to water's turn'd the fairest Snow,
O! the King's trumpeter has lost his breath.

A curious advertisement of the year 1730, induces a belief that the trumpet players were farmed out by John Shore, and that Handel, in common with others, had to apply to him for skilled performers; by-the-way, Handel required three trumpeters in the opera 'Atalanta,' the music being written in three parts:

Whereas divers people go about from time to time to the houses of persons of Quality and others of Rank and distinction, where, upon any wedding, birthday or other occasion as such people shall think fit, they sound their trumpets: and to screen themselves in such impertinence, and also to induce and prompt any persons of rank to give 'em generous present or reward, they very falsely and scandalously say they are the King's trumpets; therefore this is to give notice that any person or persons who shall detect such pretended Trumpet or trumpets and discover him or them to JOHN SHORE Esq in Hambleton Street near Hyde Park Corner, Sergeant Trumpet to his Majesty. So that such pretended trumpet or trumpets be brought to justice, the said person or persons shall immediately receive as a reward the sum of four guineas for their trouble.

The London Gazette, June 30, 1730.

The above distinctly proves that Handel's trumpet parts were written to be played on trumpets and not on trombones.

The concert of the Magpie Madrigal Society, given at the Royal Horticultural Hall, Westminster, on May 31, deserves special mention and commendation on two grounds—the excellence of the part-singing under Mr. Lionel Benson's careful conductorship, and the attention given to English music in the programme. It may not be without interest to give the titles of the native products performed on the above occasion; those marked * were composed for the Magpie Madrigal Society:

- | | |
|---|------------------|
| Madrigal (5 parts), 'I feign not friendship where I hate' | Orlando Gibbons. |
| Part-song (8 parts), 'In praise of song' | Hubert Parry. |

Occasional Notes.

Love and order are the keynotes of life; health, beauty, and goodness the refrain; the accidentals completing the harmony.

In this centennial year of Nelson's demise it is not inappropriate to refer to the familiar song 'The death of Nelson.' Composed by John Braham, the eminent tenor singer, it originally formed part of a three-act comic opera entitled 'The Americans,' first performed at the Lyceum Theatre on April 27, 1811. The scene was laid in the environs of Philadelphia. Wilmot, a naval officer (impersonated by Braham), is in love with a rich Quakeress, and so on. The opera—the libretto written by Samuel John Arnold, a son of Dr. Arnold, a former organist of Westminster Abbey—was not a success, as, according to Genest, it ran for fourteen nights only. At the end of the first performance Charles Mathews, who was in the cast, 'came forward after the curtain dropped to announce the repetition; but the disapprobation appeared so general, that he immediately withdrew,' so The Times records.

The music of the opera 'The Americans'—the words were never printed—was the joint production of M. P. King and John Braham. It included Braham's famous song 'The death of Nelson.' The Times further said:

The music of the piece is good. Mr. Braham the Composer being better acquainted than any man with what Mr. Braham the singer can accomplish.

The chef-d'œuvre of the evening was a song on the Death of Nelson, which presented us with a splendid counterpart to Braham's Death of Abercromby. The burthen:

England expects every man
This day to do his duty.—

which was varied in tense in the other verses, would have ensured success and popularity to a much worse composition.

Much of the subsequent success of the song was due to the fine interpretation given to it by John Braham, the singer-composer, who, however, in writing down this naval strain, must have had in his mind the opening phrase of Méhul's 'Chant du départ' (1794):

Tempo di marcia.

For his famous song Braham not only helped himself (consciously or unconsciously) to music then in existence, but he appropriated some words. At the death, in 1765, of the famous Duke of Cumberland—a prince-warrior nicknamed 'The Butcher'—Thomas Norris wrote a glee in commemoration of that melancholy event. This glee, contained in Warren's 'Collection,' is entitled 'O'er William's tomb,' and its words read:

O'er William's tomb, with silent grief oppress
Britannia mourns her Hero now at rest;
Not tears alone, but praises too she gives
Due to the guardian of our laws and lives.
Nor shall that laurel ever fade with years
Whose leaves are water'd by a nation's tears.

A comparison of the above poetry with that of the 'Death of Nelson' will show that Braham coolly annexed the first two and last two lines of Norris's glee. A copyist's full-score of 'The Americans' is in the library of the Royal College of Music. The 'Death of Nelson' is there given in the key of D, not in A, as it is generally printed. The instruments appear in the score in the following order, starting at the top: trombe, corni, oboi, fagotti, flauti, violini, 1st and 2nd violas, voice (Wilmot), bassi, timpani and tromboni.

Another panegyrical ditty is entitled:

THE DEATH OF WEBER.

The words by J. R. Planché, Esq.

The music composed and selected from the Favorite airs in the opera

DER FREISCHÜTZ

By JOHN BRAHAM.

This bathetic Brahamian balderdash begins:

Weep for the word that is spoken
Mourn for the knell that is knoll'd,
The master chord is broken,
And the master hand is cold.

The music with which the above doggerel is allied is a very hashed-up version of the C minor portion of the overture ('Der Freyschütz'), but turned into an Adagio! Then follows a portion of the 'Softly sighs' scena to words beginning 'Romance hath lost her minstrel.' To this succeeds the following gem of adaptation:

After eight bars of an adagio 'dirge' we are favoured with a bit of the bridal chorus, the semiquavers being dotted :

Andante grazioso.

Oh, all... who knew him lov'd him well, For with his might-y mind, He bore him-self so meek-ly, His heart it was so kind...

The poetry continues thus :

His wildly warbling melodies
The storms that round them roll
Are types of the simplicity
And grandeur of his soul.

The melody of 'Through the forest' is next drawn upon ; and then, after a drum roll—doubtless typifying 'the knell that knoll'd'—the opening section is repeated. The concluding bars (of symphony) are these :

con espressione.

ff FINE. (Very fine!)

Poor Weber !

Among other centenary commemorations occurring this year is that of the death (May 28, 1805, at Madrid) of a composer whose name is familiar, but whose music, with a few exceptions, has fallen into oblivion : Luigi Boccherini, born at Lucca in 1743. He was a prolific writer ; his quartets for strings number 113, thereby in that department beating his great contemporary Haydn. He was born at Lucca, where a tablet has just been affixed to the house in which he drew his first breath. There is charm and skill in his music, yet not of sufficient strength to withstand the test of time.

On the subject of 'The words of Mendelssohn's Elijah,' Mr. W. Hughes, of Palace Road, Tulse Hill, writes as follows :

In his 'History of Mendelssohn's Elijah' Mr. F. G. Edwards tells us that 'the English translation was the subject of a long and elaborate correspondence between the composer and his translator in London. Both were unsparing in the labour they bestowed upon the translation. . . . Mendelssohn went through the English version bar by bar, note by note, syllable by syllable, with an attention to detail which might be termed microscopic.'

It is strange therefore that two curious lapses of grammar should have escaped the observation of Bartholomew, the translator ; though perhaps Mendelssohn, as a foreigner, might very well have failed to notice them. In the recitative 'Ve people rend your hearts' occurs the phrase 'I therefore say to ye,' which of course should be 'to you.' And in the recitative 'Now Cherith's brook,' we find 'get thee to Zarephath, thither abide.' As 'thither' is equivalent to 'to that place' and not 'at that place,' we can only surmise that Bartholomew's first draft was 'thither depart,' and was altered by Mendelssohn to 'abide,' failing to see that the alteration was inconsistent with the word 'thither.'

Would there be any impropriety in correcting these manifest errors in future editions? About the first there is no difficulty. In the second case, however, it is not so easy to suggest a completely satisfactory emendation of the words to suit the music ; perhaps we might write 'and there abide,' altering the C to a semiquaver, and making the E a quaver.

[The questions raised by our correspondent are interesting and worthy of consideration. We have referred to Bartholomew's autograph copy of the word-book of 'Elijah,' a manuscript which contains some annotations in Mendelssohn's own hand, with the result that in both the above instances the words stand as in the printed edition. In former times less attention was paid to the words of oratorios, &c., than at present. As a matter of fact, two of the scriptural references in 'Elijah' were wrongly given—'Ecclesiastes' for 'Ecclesiasticus'—for a period of fifty years, and no one seems to have noticed it, though many thousands of copies of the music and word-books must have been printed ! In spite of all the care Bartholomew and Mendelssohn bestowed upon the English version of the oratorio, there are places here and there where improvements could be effected—indeed, some changes in that direction have been made in the latest edition of the work issued by Messrs. Novello.—ED. M. T.]

M. Julien Tiersot, in a series of articles entitled 'Berlioziana' which are appearing in Le Ménestrel, gives an interesting account of the trouble which 'Benvenuto Cellini' gave to its composer, and of the many cuts and changes which he made in it. In speaking of the sextet, he refers to the entrée of a new personage, who in the score and play-bills is named the Cardinal. 'But the manuscript documents,' remarks M. Tiersot, 'prepared for the production of the work, i.e., the scores and parts, all designate him by this other word, in many cases scratched through, yet always legible—the Pope.'

The 'first issue' of the programme of the Sheffield Musical Festival has just been published. At this important music-making, to be held on October 4, 5 and 6, the following choral works are announced to be performed ; those marked * for the first time :

Messiah, Mass in B minor (Bach), Requiem (Mozart), Paradise and the Peri (Schumann), Faust (Berlioz), Nanie (Brahms), * 'Fly, envious time' (Nicholas Gatty), * Ode to the north-east wind (Frederic Cliffe), * Two eight-part choruses (Weingartner.)

Herr Felix Weingartner will conduct the Festival, and Dr. Henry Coward retains his honoured post as chorus-master.

Mr. Sousa has admitted English music into his repertoire by the performance, at the New York Hippodrome, of Mr. Edward German's 'Welsh Rhapsody,' as 'especially arranged from the original orchestral score for Sousa's band by Dan Godfrey, Jr.' The stirring strain ('March of the Men of Harlech') which concludes this effective composition would naturally appeal to the rhythmic enthusiasm of the redoubtable conductor.

The Worshipful Company of Musicians announce the offer of The Cobbett Prize of £50 and prizes of lesser value for the composition of a short piece of music for stringed instruments. The old English fantasy may be suggested as a typical form which presents possibilities of modern development.

The mechanical uses to which music has been put are as curious as they are varied. Not long ago we referred to a musical bed which, in addition to its tunefulness, had the great advantage of always being well-aired; and now there has come under our notice a musical turnspit. This culinary adjunct, which belonged to an opulent lord of Treviso, is said to 'turn no less than 130 roasts at once and play twenty-four tunes at once, and the tunes correspond to the edible that is being cooked.' At Christmastide, therefore, we may assume that the Turkish music from Beethoven's 'Ruins of Athens' would be in great demand, and anyone hearing 'Hunting the hare' would naturally assume that 'puss' was being basted. When the 'sirlain' faced the music (or rather the fire), what could be more appropriate than 'The roast beef of old England'? A roasting-spit such as we have described must have been also of an economical turn, because after so many strains, strainers for the gravy would be comparatively s(o)uperfluous.

Church and Organ Music.

DR. GAUNTLETT: HIS CENTENARY.

One hundred years ago—on July 9, 1805, to give the exact date—Henry John Gauntlett was born at Wellington, Shropshire, where his father, the Rev. Henry Gauntlett, held a curacy. In 1815 the latter became vicar of Olney, Buckinghamshire, of which church Master Henry became the boy-organist. The vicar decided that his musical son should be educated for the law, and with that object articulated him to a London solicitor. He practised until about 1844, when he exchanged the legal profession for that of music. In addition to the Olney appointment Gauntlett held in succession organistships at the following churches: St. Olave, Southwark; Union Chapel, Islington; All Saints, Kensington Park; and St. Bartholomew-the-Less, Smithfield.

Between sixty and seventy years ago Gauntlett did splendid pioneer work by the introduction of the C compass of the organ into England, and, in spite of much opposition, with success. In 1852 he patented an electrical-action apparatus as applied to organs, and it is said that he proposed the erection of four organs in different parts of the Crystal Palace, the quartet of giant instruments to be played simultaneously by one performer through the mechanical agency of electricity. But the scheme—typically Berlioz in its conception—never came to anything. In 1842 (or the following year) the Archbishop of Canterbury conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa, an honour which no Archbishop had bestowed for two hundred years previously—so it is said. At the production of 'Elijah' (Birmingham, August 26, 1846), Mendelssohn selected Dr. Gauntlett to play the organ part in his oratorio on that memorable occasion.

A frequent lecturer and vigorous writer on music and, moreover, one who was by no means afraid of expressing his opinions, Dr. Gauntlett contributed largely to musical periodical literature, some of his latest articles appearing in Concordia in 1875, the year before his death. Much of his musical-literary work is quite good.

It is, however, in connection with church music, more especially hymn-tunes, that Dr. Gauntlett's name is best known in the present day. Before making further reference thereto we may call attention to an entertaining and little-known pamphlet he issued, a copy of which is before us. Its title reads:

NOTES, QUERIES, AND EXERCISES in the Science and Practice of Music; intended as aids to the clergy, churchwardens, and others, in the examination of candidates for the appointment of an organist in parish and other churches by HENRY JOHN GAUNTLETT

London. 1859. Price One Shilling.

This publication seems to have been the outcome of a series of questions (no fewer than sixty-three!), which he had drawn up and printed, to be answered by candidates for the appointment of organist of Sydenham Episcopal Chapel in the year 1859. Some of the seventy-one questions in the enlarged pamphlet read like conundrums. Here are a few specimens of these ridiculous riddles:

How many minutes are required for the chanting of the Te Deum?

Which is the most difficult verse in the Psalter to chant properly?

What time is required for singing four verses of a long-measure hymn to a cheerful tune, with three short symphonies?

What are the geometrical extremes of the centre C in the key of C?

In the key of C, what are the ordinary removes, and what are their twins?

As we cannot hear a bar of music, any more than we can smell or eat it, what is the law of thought which governs the fact, of which it is the symbol or sign?

A chord is not the cause of a chord. What is the cause of a chord?

One may accordingly venture to ask: Did these questions answer their purpose? Dr. Gauntlett was a most industrious and prolific editor of hymnals and similar publications. In 1847 he issued 'The Bible

Psalter, pointed, with a chant at the head of every Psalm.' He also edited 'The Church Hymn and Tune Book' (with the Rev. W. J. Blew), 'The Comprehensive Tune Book,' 'The Hallelujah' (with the Rev. J. J. Waite), 'The Congregational Psalmist' (with the Rev. Dr. Henry Allon), 'The Encyclopædia of the Anglican Chant,' 'Tunes New and Old' (with Mr. John Dobson), &c. It is said that he wrote 10,000 hymn-tunes! Be that as it may, no one can deny that some of them are in every way excellent. In proof thereof we need only refer to 'Houghton,' 'University College,' 'St. Albanus' (originally a 7.8.7.8. tune, without the 'Hallelujah!'), 'St. George,' 'St. Fulbert,' and 'St. Alphege' as specimens of Gauntlett at his best. 'Irby' ('Once in royal David's city') is an ideal tune for children, especially when it appears, as it always should, in its original form—a unison melody with simple chordal accompaniment. 'St. Alphege,' one of his best known tunes, first appeared in 'The Church Hymn and Tune Book' more than half-a-century ago in the following form and heading:

ST. ALPHEGE'S TUNE.
P.M. 7.6.7.6. Iambics.

By inference the tune was originally written for the words with which it is associated in the above hymnal:

The King of Glory sing we
The new-voiced hymns intone;
For Christ by yon new pathway
Ascends the Father's throne.
Alleluia!

In the preface to 'The Church Hymn and Tune Book' (wherein 'St. Alphege' first appeared) Gauntlett says:

The whole of the music has been composed and compiled in the same spirit as that which guided the promoters of vernacular hymnody in the early part of the sixteenth century.

'St. Alphege' started on a career of popularity upon its dual appearance in the first music edition of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' (1861), in which hymnal it was assigned to hymns of such widely different sentiment as 'The voice that breath'd o'er Eden' and 'Brief life is here our portion.' This species of hymn and tune matrimony drew forth a gibe from the late Mr. Spurgeon as to the immaculateness of the fixed-tune system, whereby the perfect association of words and music is supposed to be secured. And thereby hangs a tale. At a certain wedding, after the organist had played over the tune 'St. Alphege,' the choristers began to sing 'Brief life is here our portion.' Could the dear little fellows have mistaken a wedding for a funeral? No: the blushing young bridegroom was an octogenarian!

Dr. Gauntlett died at Kensington on February 21, 1876, and his remains were interred at Kensal Green Cemetery. Until the present writer drew the attention of the cemetery authorities to the matter about ten years ago, this grave remained unnamed.

We may conclude these centenary notes—which by no means pretend to be exhaustive, biographically or otherwise—by printing a letter which Dr. Gauntlett wrote to the late Sir George Grove, an interesting communication which we believe has not hitherto been published:

16, St. Mary Abbott's Terrace, Kensington,

Dear Mr. Grove, Nov. 30, 1874.

Have you any note or record of the time when Mendelssohn first began to study the organ? No one was more surprised than Moscheles at Mendelssohn's playing in Christchurch in 1837—he evidently was quite unaware of his mastery over the instrument, for he took me on one side and asked me about it. 'Where did he practise?' 'Could it be gained without practice on the organ?' 'Was it too late for him (Moscheles) to begin?' 'Would I teach him?' It was plain the playing of that morning was an unexpected thing to the pianist.

From one of Mendelssohn's letters we may gather what he knew of Bach's organ music at that date, and his resolve to set to work and get him up. And from his remarks upon some hear-say of Schneider's playing at Dresden, we learn his notion of pedal playing was very limited, and that then he had not seen the 'not well known' organ music of Bach, which Marx, either then or soon after, sent to the press.

I believe when with the Horsleys' at this end of the town he had access to a small organ at St. Matthew's—a 'crippled' organ as he called the G pedals and keyboard—upon which he might certainly gain some sort of facility. Pointing to me one day he said, 'But for him there would be no organs to play on,' and hard fight it was, for I had Wesley, Turle, Goss, and the whole guild of organists to battle with, and as you may remember the £10,000 laid out on the Liverpool organ was spent on the wrong key-board, Master Wesley carrying it against me. I believe it cost £1,500 to put that organ right.

Believe me, yours faithfully,
Geo. Grove, Esq. H. J. GAUNTLETT.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS AND CHANTS.

A correspondent, after reading the notes on 'The great composers and chants' in last month's issue (page 385), has taken to heart the last paragraph by sending us the subjoined specimen of Wagner chanted. It is from 'Tannhäuser,' and the strain is that sung by Walther in Act 2, beginning 'Willst du Erquickung aus dem Bronnen haben' (page 136 of Novello's octavo edition):

(Melody only.) Chant adapted from WAGNER'S 'Tannhäuser.'

Mr. John S. Bumpus also writes concerning 'The great composers and chants':

James Turle derived his Beethoven single chant in E flat from the opening bars of the adagio of the 4th symphony (in B flat); but he might have made a closer adaptation if he had followed the melody as written by Beethoven, instead of interchanging the fifth and sixth notes of the strain. The Spohr-Turle double chant in F is taken from 'Lord God of heaven and earth' in 'The Last Judgment,' transposed from G flat to F. Dr. Zachariah Buck, of Norwich, made a double chant from Mendelssohn's 'He watching over Israel,' and there is one in Warren's 'Chanter's Hand Guide,' adapted from 'O rest in the Lord.' Buck's arrangement will be found in 'The Chant Book Companion to the Book of Common Prayer.' In the same collection there is a double chant arranged from Mendelssohn's beautiful 'Lied ohne Worte' in E (Book II., No. 3), transposed for the purpose to G, the melody being followed without any alteration. Turle's double chants in C minor and F minor, founded on themes in Purcell's anthems 'O give thanks' and 'My Beloved spake,' as well as that in D from a subject in the same composer's Te Deum, and that in A minor from a chorale by J. S. Bach, are to be found in most collections.

Goss arranged a double chant in F sharp minor, from a subject by Jeremiah Clark, the origin of which is not at present traceable. The Rev. R. L. Caley, Precentor of Bristol, 1838-61, adapted a double chant in B flat from a melody by Beethoven, and another melody in F from the same composer was similarly treated by T. Evance Jones, organist of Canterbury Cathedral, 1831-73. The second double chant sung at St. Paul's on the twenty-ninth morning of the month, though assigned in the printed collection in use there to the Rev. James Lupton, is in reality a clever arrangement by that well-remembered old minor canon of St. Paul's, of the middle movement of Boyce's anthem 'By the waters of Babylon.' In the same collection the first double chant used on the fourteenth morning, though attributed to George Cooper, is, I believe, founded on a theme from Spohr. But instances might be multiplied—these are only a few.

A MEMORIAL TO MENDELSSOHN AND EDWARD BUXTON.

In the chancel of Cranford Parish Church, Middlesex, a stained-glass window has been placed to the memory of Mendelssohn and of Edward Buxton, a former proprietor of the business of Messrs. Ewer & Co., and therefore one of the composer's English publishers. The service of dedication took place in the charmingly situated church—standing in the midst of Lord Fitzhardinge's park—on the afternoon of Trinity Sunday (June 18), the ceremony attracting a large congregation. Mr. Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' and Smart's Te Deum in F formed the chief features of the musical service, and an address appropriate to the occasion was delivered by the Rector of Cranford, the Rev. J. F. V. Lee. The window, which is the gift of Mrs. Carson, Mr. Buxton's granddaughter, and a resident of the village, is one of three lights, the figures representing Miriam, David, and St. Cecilia. The brass-plate inscription beneath the window—believed to be the only memorial of the kind to Mendelssohn in England—reads:

To the Glory of God and in memory of Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy
and Edward Buxton, his Friend, by whose Granddaughter this window is erected.
Trinity Sunday, 1905.

The thirty-first Anniversary Festival of the London Gregorian Choral Association was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on June 15, with its customary impressiveness. Dr. Warwick Jordan presided at the organ, and his anthem 'O be joyful in the Lord' was sung. The Psalms, Magnificat, and Nunc dimittis were sung to Gregorian tones, and the hymn-tunes included two settings by Sir John Stainer and Mr. Arthur Henry Brown.

At the Dedication Festival held at Boston Church on June 20 the music included Dr. Botting's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in B flat and Sullivan's Thanksgiving Te Deum, sung by a choir of 100 voices to the accompaniment of the organ and a quartet of brass instruments. Mr. A. W. Parsons, organist of Sleaford Parish Church, presided at the organ, and Mr. G. H. Gregory, organist and choirmaster of the Church, conducted.

Messrs. P. Conacher & Co., of Huddersfield, have erected the organ in the new church of All Saints, Burton-on-Trent. The instrument is furnished with tubular pneumatic action throughout, and the builders have used both key and pedal pistons, as well as their pedal controller action which provides an appropriate pedal organ with any combination of manual stops. The specification of the organ is as follows:

A cathedral organist writes as follows:

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to suggest to my brother cathedral organists the desirability of our meeting together for an annual conference, at which we might with advantage to ourselves and Church music in general discuss those questions which from time to time must present themselves to us individually? These meetings might be held in London, or might be arranged, year by year, in the principal cathedral cities. Perhaps Sir George Martin and Sir Frederick Bridge would take the initial step in this direction?

MAGISTER CHORALIS.

TWO SPECIAL SERVICES AT GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.

The annual Festival of the Gloucester Diocesan Choral Union was successfully held on June 7, under the conductorship of Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, when the united choirs numbered 750 voices. The music included a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in G—an easy setting for parish choirs—by Dr. Brewer, and an effective anthem, 'There is none that can resist Thy voice,' by Mr. Ivor Atkins, organist of Worcester Cathedral. Both these works were composed expressly for the occasion. Goss's anthem, 'O praise the Lord!' was also sung, and Mr. S. W. Underwood rendered good service at the organ.

The enthronement of the new Bishop (Dr. Gibson, recently Vicar of Leeds) took place on June 15, with an impressive ceremony. The anthem was 'How lovely is Thy dwelling-place' (Brahms) and Dr. Brewer's Te Deum in E flat was also sung. The augmented choir consisted of the cathedral chorists and lay clerks, the cathedral voluntary choir, and the Festival class, who sang with much effectiveness under Dr. Brewer's baton. After the enthronement the Bishop expressed his complete satisfaction with the musical arrangements and the manner in which they had been carried out.

Mr. Stephen Plummer has been presented by the congregation of Holy Trinity Church, Tunbridge Wells, with a cheque, and the choir have given him a handsome Aneroid barometer upon his retirement from the office of organist which he has held for eleven years.

The annual festival service of the Chelmsford Association of Church Choirs was held at the Parish Church, Chelmsford, on June 15, when fourteen choirs, numbering over 300 voices, were present. The processional hymns were sung to tunes by Dr. C. Wood and Mr. F. R. Frye, two others being by Dr. A. H. Mann and Mr. Luard-Selby. The service was Arnold in A and the anthem Mr. Alfred Hollins's 'O worship the Lord.' Dr. G. F. Huntley was the organist, and Mr. F. R. Frye, choir-master to the Association, conducted.

The organ in Colston Hall, Bristol, originally built by Father Willis and recently enlarged by Messrs. Norman & Beard, was re-opened by recitals given on June 1, 2 and 3, by Mr. George Riseley, Dr. Kendrick Pyne, and Mr. E. H. Lemare.

At St. Anne's Church, Soho, on Ascension Day (June 1), Bach's Church Cantatas 'God goeth up' and 'Now hath salvation' were sung to the accompaniment of full orchestra and organ, under the direction of the organist.

LONDON EVENING SCHOOLS AND MUSIC INSTRUCTION.

In 1902-3, music, mostly in the form of singing classes, was taught to 6,515 pupils in 235 metropolitan evening schools. The next year's statistics are not available, but they will probably show an increase. It must not be supposed that these schools are for children: they are open to both sexes of all ages, and are largely attended by adults. The code for this type of school is laid down by the Government Board of Education, and deals mainly with technical points; it merely suggests that music suited to the constitution of this or that class should also be studied. But owing to the individuals forming the classes being miscellaneous gathered together, it is rare that a teacher has to deal with anything like a well-balanced choir. This difficulty, which threatened to paralyse effort, led in London to the formation of district Choral Unions. These Unions, as such, are unofficial bodies formed voluntarily by the music instructors in the various districts. They are managed by an executive committee selected by the general body of teachers, and about sixty per cent. of the classes are in some way attached to them. The objects of the Unions are stated to be:

- (i.) To supply a definite and common aim as far as possible to the vocal music instruction in a district.
- (ii.) To improve the musical taste of pupils by substituting standard works and good choruses for the miscellaneous and musically inferior material previously in use.
- (iii.) To give opportunities for criticism and comparison by bringing together the various classes for district and massed rehearsals.
- (iv.) To arrange and carry out, if thought advisable, a public performance of the works prepared.

The spirit and energy with which these ideas have been carried into practical effect may be gathered from the following programmes which the Unions performed this spring:

- West Lambeth Choral Union—April 7, Battersea Town Hall. 'Hymn of Praise' (Mendelssohn); Miscellaneous.
- Tower Hamlets Choral Union—May 9, People's Palace. 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' (Coleridge-Taylor); 'Hymn of Praise.'
- Marylebone Choral Union—May 12, Northern Polytechnic. 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast'; 'Hymn of Praise.'
- Finsbury and Hackney Choral Union—May 13, Alexandra Palace. 'Banner of St. George' (Elgar); Stanford's 'Revenge'; Miscellaneous.
- Chelsea Choral Union—May 18, Queen's Hall. 'The Wedding Feast'; 'Hymn of Praise.'
- East Lambeth Choral Union—May 20, Great Central Hall, Tower Bridge Road. 'Banner of St. George' (Elgar); Miscellaneous.
- Greenwich Choral Union—May 27, Goldsmiths' Institute. 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' (Coleridge-Taylor); Miscellaneous.

All these works were creditably given with full orchestral accompaniment.

Some opposition to the idea and work of the Unions has been encountered on the ground that the music chosen was too difficult and unsuited to the constitution of the classes generally, and that the practice of it necessitated the abandonment of the study of voice training and sight-singing, &c. This charge has been investigated by the Education Committee of the London County Council, and the result of their inquiry is embodied in a report which is to be submitted to the whole Council.

On the whole the report is highly favourable to the continuation of the Unions, and it includes some excellent recommendations for their future organization and for a more systematic treatment in the instruction to be given in the separate classes. The Committee also make some suggestions for violin teaching in graded classes. The report is given in full in the July issue of The School Music Review.

BEETHOVEN'S VIOLIN CONCERTO.

(OP. 61.)

BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

Allegro ma non troppo.Larghetto.Rondo. (Allegro.)

This splendid work was composed in the year 1806, probably in the latter part of it, the earlier months having been occupied with the three quartets dedicated to Count Rasoumowsky and the Fourth Symphony. It was written for Clement, a well-known violinist of the day, at that time director and principal violin at the Vienna Theatre, and was first played by him at his concert on December 23, 1806. The autograph is one of the treasures of the Imperial Library at Vienna. It is an oblong manuscript, and contains, along the top of the first page, the following punning inscription, in Beethoven's own curious French-Italian :

e direttore al teatro a Vienna. Dal L. v. Bthvn 1806.

Whether we may take the terms of the title of Beethoven's arrangement of this work for the pianoforte (of which more hereafter), viz., 'Concerto pour le Pianoforte . . . arrangé d'après son 1^{er} Concerto de Violin . . . par Louis van Beethoven,' &c., as the token of his intention to compose a second or not, it is certain that no second complete one exists, the so-called 'Kreutzer Sonata' (Op. 47), though expressly stated by its author to be 'scritta in uno stilo molto concertante quasi come d'un Concerto,* and fully worthy of the name in other respects, being excluded from the category by the fact that it was written for violin and pianoforte instead of for violin and orchestra. His only other published compositions for violin and orchestra—published, that is to say, with his own concurrence and consent—are two Romances, the one (Op. 40) in G, the other and more important (Op. 50) in F. These three works all date from the years 1803 or 1804, and are therefore earlier in date than the concerto. And so also—doubtless earlier still—is the fragment of a violin concerto in C major, the autograph of which is preserved in the Library of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde at Vienna, which was played at the commemoration of Beethoven at Vienna in 1870, and has since been completed and published.

The first movement of the Violin Concerto is, as usual, its most important portion, and is written on the general plan of the first movement of a symphony, with full development and more than usual length. It has no solo prelude or introduction, as the pianoforte concerto in E flat has, to bring the solo instrument early and prominently forward, but commences according to the regular prescribed form by an orchestral tutti. And yet while thus conforming to custom Beethoven shows how eminently original he was. Nothing can exceed the novelty and characteristic effect of the opening—no initial chord or gigantic unison, nothing but four soft beats of the drum on the keynote. For an instant one listens almost in doubt whether the music has really begun. Until Beethoven's time the drum had with very rare exceptions been used as a mere means of producing noise and increasing the din of the fortes; but Beethoven, with that wise feeling of affection which he has for the humblest member of the orchestra, and which has made him (in this concerto and elsewhere) give independent passages to the horn or the bassoon which have immortalised those instruments, has here raised the drum to the rank of a solo instrument. And not only that, but these four notes of the drum, like the first rays which herald the rising sun, give a colour and individuality to the whole of this great and radiant movement. These four notes are heard all through it; their broad, noble rhythm pervades the whole, now in the fiddles, now in the horn, now in the trumpet, now in the full orchestra—always characteristic, always impressive, always the pivot upon which some unexpected enrapturing change takes place or some new appearance of the theme, or upon which the solo instrument is to turn.

John Sebastian Bach, who seems to have foreseen everything in music, has actually anticipated the mode of opening this concerto in his 'Christmas Oratorio,' which commences with the subject of the movement in the drum solo :

but, with the opening, all parallel to Beethoven's concerto ends. On the other hand, it is hardly possible that Beethoven could have known this work of the earlier master's.

Within the limitations of space it is impossible to enumerate a tenth of the beauties of the wonderful movement which springs from those four unpretending taps of the most unpromising member of the orchestra ; to quote a few bars of the leading ideas must therefore suffice.

The principal theme is given out by the oboes, clarinets, and bassoons and accompanied by the drum :

No. 2. Oboes & clars.
Allegro ma non troppo.

Drum. Fag. Drum.

cres. sf p

Drum.

p Viol. f Strings. &c.

The D sharps which follow in the violins (at *) are an admirable example of Beethoven's sudden way of introducing an entirely new element into his composition, and starting, so to speak, a new train of thought, at once the same with, yet different from, the old one—an art which no one ever possessed, and perhaps no one ever will possess as he did.

The form in which this fine subject first appears in the composer's sketch-book is thus given in Nottebohm's 'Zweite Beethoveniana' (1887), p. 533 :

No. 3.

&c.

* In one of Beethoven's note-books in the Royal Library at Berlin this title is found with the word 'brillante' substituted for 'concertante.'

and, as in other cases, it is difficult to believe that so enduring and agreeable a passage can have been founded on one so meagre and commonplace, and so devoid of all the qualities which distinguish the other. But to return.

The passage which connects the theme quoted as No. 2 with the 'second subject' of the movement is no mere mass of sound, as was often the case in the earlier orchestral writers, but is as organic and definite as any other part of the concerto. It begins with a scale passage in the clarinets and bassoons:

No. 4.
Clar. & Fag. 8ve below.

and it ends with a quaint semiquaver figure of which one learns to know much more before the termination of the movement:

No. 5. Viol. 1^a. (solli)

These four A's lead at once into the brilliant, vigorous, aspiring theme of the second subject. Like the first, this is given out by the wind instruments, and, as we see, is heralded and accompanied by the inevitable four notes. Like the first, also, it furnishes an example of Beethoven's favourite habit of forming his melodies out of the consecutive notes of the diatonic scale, a habit to which I have often ventured to call attention—

No. 6.

No sooner is this theme given out in D major, than Beethoven characteristically repeats it in minor, accompanying it all through with the four notes (this time in the horns), and also by a passage in triplets and in 'contrary motion' in the violas and violoncellos—a passage of which great use is afterwards made by the solo violin:

These subjects, and others springing out of or dependent on them, are worked and developed according to the regular forms of the art; and with so much variety and individuality in the accompaniments that one is almost tempted to think that the work is not only a concerto for the violin, but a concertante also for bassoon, clarinet, &c. A passage of this nature is worth quoting:

No. 7a. Solo violin.

The bassoons continue thus for twenty-three bars, and are succeeded by the horns; and at length we reach a passage which will be recognised from the following quotation—one of those delicious 'episodes' which Beethoven, if he did not invent, introduced as no one before him had done. Here all the tenderness and grace of his nature are manifested for a few moments that we may know what there was lying hid behind that robust and masculine exterior. The spirit of the master seems to disengage itself from material

NOVELLO'S ANTHEM BOOK

A COLLECTION OF POPULAR ANTHEMS

FOR FESTIVAL AND GENERAL USE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

Each book of this series contains twelve anthems: some for Festival occasions—e.g., Christmas, Easter, Harvest—and others which may be used at any time. Great care has been taken in making the selections, in order that suitable variety may be secured and practical needs supplied.

It is therefore anticipated that in churches where an elaborate musical service is not possible, this publication will find acceptance. In such cases the advantage of having, in one book, twelve standard anthems which more than cover the requirements of the Church's year is obvious.

&c.

The soft pervading accompaniment of the strings; the repeated notes of the horns, bassoons and trumpets, hushed to their lowest, and sounding in their monotonous iteration like the knell of all earthly troubles and annoyances; the tender, refined, yearning expression of the solo violin, as it climbs

Through all the silent spaces of the worlds, Beyond all thought, into the heaven of heavens—make this one of the most affecting passages in all music. It is in some measure an anticipation of a passage in the Larghetto (which is noticed farther on), where the horns play a somewhat similar rôle, and the solo violin has an equally expressive part, not altogether unlike the leading phrases in this. (See No. 11.)

II.—The Larghetto is a movement of wonderful, calm beauty. The principal theme is a simple strain of eight bars with two more to close it, as if by a happy afterthought. How the phrase of the last bars may haunt the memory is evident from their unconscious repetition by Mendelssohn, in the air 'But the Lord is mindful of His own,' in 'St. Paul':

Here, as in the slow movement of the E flat pianoforte concerto, the violins of the band are 'muted'; and as there, so here, after having heard the theme played through, it is difficult to understand how anything else can be worthy to come after it. Beethoven knows this well, and in consideration to this feeling repeats the theme no less than four consecutive times. It is first given out by the strings as quoted, then by the first clarinet solo, then by the bassoon solo, and then by the full band. On the second and third occasion it is accompanied by the solo violin in figures of the most astonishingly graceful forms, increasing in elaboration each time. Shortly afterwards the solo violin gives out a fresh melody, accompanied in long chords by the strings of the band only :

The effect of this is too charming. The lovely melody, with its beseeching, yearning tone, the soft, sustained accompaniment of the strings, and the mellow, tranquil, reiterated call of the horns, seem to suggest the 'calm and deep peace' of a lovely autumn day, in a still land like that of the Lotos-eaters of the poet.

III.—The Rondo is a descent from these heights of ideal calm to a region nearer the common earth. But if hardly equal in elevation to the earlier portions, it is throughout brilliant and spirited, and brings this great composition to a most effective termination. Here again a certain parallel is observable between this and the E flat pianoforte concerto.

There is no pause after the Larghetto; but a sudden modulation in the strings, fortissimo, rudely dispels the dream in which the preceding movement has lapt us, and leads into the opening subject of the Finale (Rondo), one of the most vigorous and original that even Beethoven ever conceived, attacked by the solo violin, without accompaniment, save a note or two from the basses :

No. 12.

This is repeated by the solo violin two octaves higher, and then the whole orchestra have it with a new termination :

No. 13.

A second theme of similar character is also given out by the solo violin, accompanied first by the horns and then by the oboes and clarinets :

Another melody, the 'second subject' proper, is in G minor :

No. 15.

with a second strain quite in keeping :

No. 16.

The pause for the cadenza occurs after the working out of the themes, and is succeeded by a long, soft, subtle passage, full of humour, modulating into A flat, and coming back most ingeniously into the key of D.

This movement furnishes, amongst other beauties, a good example of the care with which Beethoven provides for his dear children of the orchestra. In the Larghetto the horns were his chief favourites ; here, perhaps, it is the bassoon which is taken into especial confidence. It has a long solo after the entry of the second theme (No. 15).

Before quitting the subject, a few moments should be given to the fact already mentioned that Beethoven arranged the solo part of the work so that it might be played as a concerto for the pianoforte. That he did this with predilection is evident from one or two circumstances. It was one of four pieces which alone of all his works (as we know from the testimony of his pupil Ries) he arranged with his own hand ; all the rest were left to his scholars and friends, and merely revised by him, but this and three others he did completely himself. He took great pains so to modify the violin passages of the original as to make them suitable to the pianoforte.* Not content with this, he composed a long and very interesting cadence for the pianoforte to the first movement, and a shorter one to the Rondo. These are published in the complete edition of Breitkopf & Härtel. The first of them is in four movements—an Allegro, then a short March, più Vivace, and last, Meno allegro, ending in a Presto. In the March and the Presto the drum reappears, and accompanies the pianoforte with its phrase of four notes. The pianoforte concerto was published in August, 1808, but the violin concerto remained in MS. until the following March. The latter is dedicated to Beethoven's old and dear friend Stephan von Breuning, and the former to his wife.

The four notes which haunted Beethoven so persistently, and with such fine effect, through his first movement, are said to have been suggested to him by his hearing, while lying awake at night, a person who was shut out of a neighbouring house, and who kept on knocking for admission, four strokes at a time. Beethoven's mind was full of his concerto, and the reiteration of the four strokes fell in with his thoughts, and produced what we have before us to-day. To some this story may appear apocryphal, absurd, below the dignity of the subject. But surely without reason. Its very triviality is in favour of its genuineness. Such anecdotes are not only quite in consonance with the characteristics of creative genius, but are also in accordance with known facts. To an ordinary man the four knocks which excited the 'shaping spirit' of Beethoven's imagination and on which he built so splendid a fabric, would have been simply four knocks, to be dismissed with an exclamation, and forgotten as soon as heard ; but they 'flashed upon the inward ear' of the great composer, and aroused trains of thought and association in his mind the possession of which is, ipso facto, the possession of genius. These four knocks were to Beethoven what the hulk of the old Ténéraire was to Turner, or the 'Daffodils' to Wordsworth—commonplace objects in themselves, but transmuted by the fire of genius into imperishable monuments. A remarkable instance of the same transmuting power is seen in the two chief subjects of the Finale of Beethoven's last quartet (in F, Op. 135). He has headed it with the words : 'Muss es sein?' Must it be so? 'Es muss sein!' It must!—and to these he has put notes, which notes become the subjects of the Finale. The words were originally part of a conversation with his cook. But no sooner does the great composer take the phrases into his mind and begin to ponder them than this trivial question and answer assume a new import. They rise from the particular to the universal, from earth to heaven, and in his vast imagination it becomes the question of questions—nothing less than the unanswerable problem of fate : 'To be or not to be.' Thus the musician may say with no less force than the painter or the poet—

To me the meanest flower that blows can give Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.

* See the details in Nottobohm's 'Zweite Beethoveniana,' p. 586.

The original manuscript of the Violin Concerto, which has already been mentioned as being in the Imperial Library (K. K. Hofbibliothek) at Vienna, presents some points of remarkable interest. It contains a larger amount of correction and alteration than is usually displayed even by Beethoven's manuscripts, chiefly in the part of the solo violin. The order of the instruments in the score, counting downwards, is as follows: violins; violas; flute; oboes; clarinets; bassoons; horns; drums; solo violin; violoncellos; basses; trumpets. Thus the solo violin stands fourth from the bottom. But in addition to this there is a stave below the whole, and occasionally one above it, and not unfrequently even a fourth, containing successive variations of the solo part, which there is the best authority for stating are always improvements. On the authority of so unimpeachable a witness as the late C. F. Pohl, of Vienna, these are all in Beethoven's own hand, and not in Clement's as stated by Otto Jahn, though it is possible that some of them were suggested by Clement. The majority, however, are not technical ameliorations so much as improvements in the music, and as such bear the impress of the mind of the master himself. They display a curious medley of ink, blacklead pencil, and red chalk; and show, if anything were wanted to show, how constantly this great genius returned to his works, how unwearied he was in touching, and retouching, and polishing, and bestowing all his thought and all his might on what his hand found to do, until he had got out of his mind all the beauty and all the effect, and all the fitness for the hearer that it was possible to get out of it.

[The date of the first performance in England of Beethoven's Violin Concerto is not known. It did not make its appearance in any programme of the Philharmonic Society (founded in 1813) until April 9, 1832, when it was played by a Mr. Eliason. Considering that the work was published in 1809, it is difficult to imagine that twenty-three years elapsed before this violin masterpiece obtained its first hearing in this country; but it may be so. Since 1832 the concerto has been played at the Philharmonic concerts thirty-three times, Dr. Joachim having been the soloist on ten of these occasions. The concerto was not very cordially received by the critics on its first performance at the Philharmonic. The Athenæum referred to it as 'this wild, imaginative effusion of Beethoven,' while the Harmonicon said: 'Beethoven has put forth no strength in his violin concerto; it is a fiddling affair, and might have been written by any third or fourth rate composer. We cannot say that the performance of this concealed any of its weakness, or rendered it at all more palatable.'—Ed. M.T.]

The success and the smooth working of the University Conservatorium of Music in Melbourne has at last, in this fifth year of office, enabled Professor Franklin Peterson to inaugurate a scheme of public concerts of which the first was given on March 13 under the most favourable auspices and with conspicuous success before a large audience in the Town Hall. The list of subscribers, a large and influential one, is headed by their Excellencies the Governor-General, Lady Northcote, and the Governor of Victoria, as well as Lady Talbot, the Prime Minister of Australia, the Premier of Victoria, the Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor of the University, and others. The scheme of local examinations inaugurated and organised by Professor Peterson has grown in three years from 481 entries in the first year to close upon a thousand this year, and still shows unmistakable signs of further healthy and powerful development. The students in the Conservatorium number 100, who are doing excellent work under Professor Peterson's guidance.

The Year. Words by Robert Herrick. Music by Herbert W. Wareing.
Waken, lords and ladies gay. Words by Sir Walter Scott. Music by E. Ouseley Gilbert.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

Few composers have the courage of their opinions more than Mr. Granville Bantock and, although at times his music may raise the eyebrows of the academically-minded, it rarely fails in originality. The part-songs now under notice, however, are more likely to win a smile than a frown even from the most austere musician, for the words have been set with keen appreciation of their inner meaning, and the harmonic scheme, although often bold, is always expressive, heightening the significance of the music. 'Evening has lost her throne' is a poetical description of the approach of night, and the music is in complete sympathy with the lines, the concluding bars being particularly happy. When this part-song is performed it could not be more appropriately followed than by 'Awake, awake!' It will be necessary in this, however, for the vocalists to be wide awake when they attack the spirited opening, and to duly follow the subsequent changes of tempo which accentuate the various sentiments of the lines. The basses also will have to be on the alert to come in, after a pause of two bars, on an A natural with a chord of G flat major buzzing in their ears; but they will enjoy themselves in the final bars in their slide down to the low E flat. 'O what a lovely magic hath been here' might well express the sentiments of the listeners after a performance of the part-songs.

Mr. John E. West has gone to long-ago centuries for his text, that of 'Amintor's well-a-day' being from Lawes's 'Third Book of Ayres,' dating from 1653, and the lines of 'As Amoret with Phillis sat' being by Sir Charles Sedley (1639-1701). These dates give the key to the music, for Mr. West is too good a musician to 'put old wine into new garments,' to quote the latest version by a celebrated composer of the familiar adage. In the first song Amintor is so disconsolate at the fickleness of his Chloris that the grass will not grow where he lays his head, and his moan, 'Well-a-day,' is duly prominent in Mr. West's pages; but the melancholy is of a gentle and enjoyable kind, and the music contains effective contrasts. The setting of 'As Amoret with Phillis sat' is of the same order as the foregoing, albeit somewhat simpler. The anxiety of the poet that Phillis should not listen too long to Amoret is reflected in the music, as is also the maiden's reply that the warning is too late.

Dr. Davan Wetton always writes well for choirs, and this is exemplified in 'All for my true love.' As one meets with the willow tree in the first line, a tragedy is inevitable; but the music is too genuinely pathetic for weak sentimentality to intrude, notwithstanding that the lady dies, 'all for my true love.'

Dr. Eaton Fanning is also a musician who writes with keen appreciation of choral effects, strengthened by long experience, and the setting in eight parts of 'How sweet the moonlight sleeps' is one of his happiest efforts in a placid style. Need anything more be said?

Robert Herrick's graceful lines of gentle reproach to a coy maid have been allied to expressive music by Dr. Wareing, whose part-writing flows with a facility like unto the poet's tears.

Scott's lines, 'Waken, lords and ladies gay,' have stirred many composers to take up their pens, but Mr. Gilbert's music so brightly echoes the romantic spirit of the poem that this part-song should have a cordial and widespread welcome.

Joseph Joachim. By J. A. Fuller Maitland.

[John Lane.]

'It is perhaps right that panegyric should be the prevailing note of contemporary biography,' writes the author of this book in the opening words of his preface, and he goes on to say 'it is at all events much easier to discount praise than blame.' All this is perfectly true, and the 'prevailing note' that runs through these sixty-three pages vibrates with no uncertain sound. The contents of the book show that Mr. Fuller Maitland has elected to write more especially upon the violin playing, teaching and influence of Dr. Joachim than in setting forth biographical details, as only about a third of the book is devoted to his career. Those who wish for an exhaustive biography of Dr. Joachim may be referred to Professor Moser's volume, of which an English translation has been issued; but no one will take up Mr. Fuller Maitland's account of the life and works of the great violinist without deriving pleasure and profit from the perusal of his well-written and interesting monograph on a very remarkable man and earnest minded artist. This interesting contribution to the 'Living Masters of Music' series is prefaced by a reproduction of Mr. Sargent's portrait of Dr. Joachim, and five other portraits (one taken with Brahms) add to the attractiveness of the volume.

Variations on an Original Theme. By Edward Elgar.
Arranged for pianoforte duet by John E. West.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

Pianoforte arrangements of orchestral works serve many useful and, be it added, pleasurable purposes, not the least of which is the gaining an intimate acquaintance with the music that vastly increases the enjoyment of the listener in the concert-room. Sir Edward Elgar's 'Variations on an Original Theme,' commonly known as the 'Enigma' variations—because the theme itself is at present an unknown quantity, not having as yet been revealed by the composer—are probably more often played than any other orchestral composition of recent times, and consequently an arrangement for the household instrument is very welcome. Mr. West's task was by no means an easy one, for the music is essentially orchestral in spirit, and its complexities are many; but difficulties shared are difficulties lightened, and by deft distribution of the parts Mr. West has succeeded in presenting a thoroughly playable version while preserving the salient characteristics of the original. Pianists of average ability will indeed find few executive difficulties, but the variety of rhythm and the occasional entrance of the parts on half and quarter beats demand alertness; in fact we foresee that the practise of this duet will give rise to a more than usual amount of 'counting the time.' Every possible help, however, is given to the executants. In all places where doubt might arise leads are given, and the notes are so accurately placed in their relative position in each bar as to form a great help to the eye. The variations will be found to form an improving and interesting study as well as a series of short pieces full of significance, freshness, and delightful effect.

The Concert-goer. A handbook of the orchestra and orchestral music. By William H. Daly.

[Edinburgh: Paterson & Sons.]

Mr. Daly has compiled a very useful little volume of the note-book order, one, as he says, that is 'intended primarily for amateurs, as an easy and popular guide to the comprehension of the structure of orchestral art-forms, and also as an aid in reading orchestral scores.' An immense amount of information is given in these hundred pages; moreover it is clearly and pleasantly set forth, as, for example, when referring to the double bassoon the author speaks of 'its sepulchral' roar in Brahms's (not 'Brahm's' as on p. 23) 'Variations on a Theme by Haydn.' Again, in the chapter on 'The Conductor,' he says: 'A good conductor must possess, above all things, the qualities of leadership and insight—the dash and wariness of a skilled cavalry leader, combined with the sympathetic imagination of a poet,' and so on. Mr. Daly's book is illustrated with the portraits of seven distinguished conductors of the present day, and three facsimile pages from Weber's 'Der Freischütz' and 'Oberon' overtures. His pages will doubtless find many readers whether they be concert-goers or stay-at-homers.

Obituary.

The following deaths are recorded with regret:

On April 20, at 126, South Twenty-Third Street, Philadelphia, U.S.A., MINTON PYNE, Fellow of the American Guild of Organists. A son of the late James Kendrick Pyne, organist of Bath Abbey, and a pupil of Dr. S. S. Wesley, Mr. Minton Pyne was formerly assistant to his brother, Dr. Kendrick Pyne, organist of Manchester Cathedral. Since 1881 he had lived in America, where his organ recitals had gained him a high reputation.

On April 26, at Cape Town, aged forty-two, AMBROSE H. COMFORT, a former pupil of Mr. Oscar Beringer and Professor Prout, and previous to his leaving England for Grahamstown well-known in Bristol and Weston-super-Mare. As a pianist and teacher of the pianoforte Mr. Comfort enjoyed great popularity. His remains were carried to the grave by eight musicians and followed by many sorrowing pupils and friends, whilst tokens of respect were sent from far and near. So highly was he respected that the musicians of Cape Town contemplate erecting a monument over his grave as a tribute to his memory.

On May 6, at Leyburn, Yorkshire, the Hon. A. LUCIEN ORDE-POWLETT, to which reference is made on the opposite page under 'Northallerton.'

On May 24, suddenly, at 31, Beulah Road, Tunbridge Wells, aged sixty-five, Madame FLORENCE LANCIA (Laura Florence Ladbroke Clarke), formerly well-known as a distinguished operatic and concert vocalist.

On June 3, at 28, Elsworth Road, South Hampstead, aged sixty, NARCISO RAMON DOMINGO VERT, the much esteemed and well-known concert agent.

On June 22, at Morecambe, aged fifty-three, R. G. W. HOWSON, a zealous amateur who was intimately associated with the Morecambe Festival from its foundation in 1891 until the present year. His fine taste and judgment in the selection of music, his exceptional skill as a choir trainer, as exhibited in the highly-refined performances of the Morecambe Madrigal Society, and the business capacity and tact he brought to bear on the affairs of the Festival very largely contributed to the high position the scheme has attained. The memory of his personality will ever be cherished by a wide circle of friends.

Many of our readers may be interested to know that the famous statue of Handel, by Roubiliac, the property of Mr. Alfred Littleton, is now to be seen at No. 1, Berners Street.

Musical Competition Festivals.

TONBRIDGE (KENT), MAY 2 AND 3.

The Tonbridge Musical Festival comprised competitions for church choirs, choral societies, and children's choirs, and a performance of Schubert's 'Song of Miriam' by the five choirs obtaining the highest number of marks in the senior section, for which Dr. Coward was adjudicator. In the children's competitions, judged by Dr. Madeley Richardson, the prize for children under sixteen years of age, for the best rendering of 'O lovely peace,' unaccompanied, and a two-part sight-test was awarded to Kemsing School Choir, conducted by Mrs. Jordan. In classes for children under eleven and eight respectively, the winners were Hildenborough School (Mr. M. C. Morris), who also secured the Challenge Shield for proficiency in the examinations instituted by the Festival Committee. The Festival, now in its fourth year as regards the adult section, was an unqualified success, and is undoubtedly doing much to stimulate the musical culture of the district. A dozen or more villages and small towns sent in choirs of mixed voices, female voices, and male voices. The Tonbridge Wesleyans (Mr. Kimmins), the St. Lawrence Choir (Mr. Luttman), Seal, Watlington, Kemsing, Sevenoaks, all gained honours. There was a crowded attendance at the concert. Besides the 'Song of Miriam' there were many other interesting and popular items. The Tonbridge Orchestral Society played Beethoven's 'Coriolanus' overture. The prizes were distributed by H.S.H. Princess Victor of Hohenlohe Langenberg. The Festival arrangements were in the hands of the Secretaries, Miss Ruth Wilkinson and Miss Diana Cator, whose unwearied labours contributed mainly to the success achieved.

MID-SOMERSET (FROME), MAY 2, 3 AND 4.

The fourth annual Festival for this district was this year held for the second time at Frome. On the first day nine junior choirs competed, besides a number of pianists and violinists and musical theory students. Two choirs came for the action song ('Musical Competitions,' by Everard Feilding), the Girls' British School, Frome, under Mr. Osborne, gaining the prize. Seven choirs sang the old English song 'Come, lasses and lads,' the Frome British School again securing the first place. In another section, in which there were seven entries, the Blue School, Wells, was first, the test-piece being the canon 'O ever against eating cares' (Hayes). Four classes competed in unison sight-singing, Holy Trinity Girls' gained the prize for tonic sol-fa reading, and Wells Central Boys' School the only entry for the staff-notation, a second prize for their staff-reading. Pianoforte solos and duets and musical theory for adults were subjects also dealt with on this day. The day's proceedings ended with a concert at which the combined children's choirs sang Handel's 'O lovely peace,' and the various prize-winners performed the test-pieces. On the second day three sets of players competed for violin and pianoforte-duet playing, and there were eleven candidates in the senior pianoforte class, the test-piece being Schubert's Impromptu in A flat. There were very few entries in the small village vocal sections for part-song, quartet or madrigal singing. On the last day seven mixed-voice choirs for part-songs and five choirs for madrigals, five female-voice choirs, and three male-voice choirs competed. Mr. Allen's Ladies' Choir, Frome, Oakhill Choir, Frome Choir, and Portishead Male Choir were among the winners.

The combined adult choirs, aided by a band, gave a concert to wind up the proceedings. Mr. Percy Grainger conducted some of his choral arrangements of folk-songs and played pianoforte solos, and the prize-choirs sang their test-pieces. Miss Lucy Broadwood and Mr. Walter Alcock adjudicated.

The very active and inspiring secretary of the scheme is Mrs. Mansel.

FARNHAM (SURREY), MAY 13 AND 24.

The fifth annual musical festival in this pleasant town was on the whole an encouraging success. On the first day six school choirs competed in various sections. Frensham and Farnham West Street Council School gained prizes for prepared pieces, and Shaftesbury gained the highest position for sight-singing. At a concert given by the combined choirs the most interesting feature was an excellent arrangement, by Mr. Morton Latham, of the choral 'Now thank we all our God,' for treble unison chorus and small orchestra, in the form of a Bach cantata. The effect was very impressive.

On the second day ten female-voice choirs (in two classes), five male-voice choirs, eight mixed-voice village choirs, and two choral societies competed. Kingsley, Crookham, Compton and Puttenham (combined), the Alton Choral Society and the Farnham Musical Society all took first prizes in various sections. Elgar's 'Weary wind of the West' was one of the principal test-pieces. The choirs combined, under Mr. Morton Latham, to perform 'Blest pair of Sirens' (Parry) and 'A Stronghold sure' (Bach), with full orchestral accompaniment. The band also played Bach's Orchestral Suite in D, Mr. Walter Morrow played the high trumpet part on his specially made instrument. It will be seen from this programme that Mr. Latham, who was secretary of the Bach Choir from 1886 to 1900, still worships at the master's shrine. Miss Fordati is the secretary of the Festival. Dr. McNaught adjudicated.

NORTHALLERTON.

THE SWALEDALE TOURNAMENT OF SONG, MAY 25 AND 26.

The deeply-lamented death on May 6 of the Hon. A. Lucien Orde-Powlett, who was one of the chief promoters of this Festival, saddened all concerned with the event. Mr. Orde-Powlett, who resided for many years in the Swaledale district, was an excellent amateur musician and a great force in the promotion of popular musical education. His last request to his brother, Lord Bolton, was that he should be buried as near to his organ as possible. It may be a warning to others to know that Mr. Orde-Powlett died from pneumonia, induced, it is believed, by his resting in wet clothes between his playing the organ at two churches. A committee has been formed to found a memorial to perpetuate his memory.

It was determined that as all arrangements had been made it was best to hold the Festival, which was the sixth of the series. The entries showed a satisfactory increase upon those of previous years, and the standard of execution was often high. On the first day there was much pianoforte and violin playing, and the village chapel or church choirs competed in three sections, and besides these were choirs of men's voices, female voices and mixed voices of the choral society type. Brewer's 'It was a lover and his lass' was the test in the chief class. The Richmond Choral Society (Mr. Hughes) was the prize-winner, but Northallerton (Mr. A. B. Crow) was only one mark behind. There were many other classes for viola, string quartet, small bands, male-voice quartet, solo singing, and for hymn-tune and chant composition. The audiences were large and deeply interested. The second day was devoted to the juniors, who came forward in overwhelming numbers to compete in pianoforte, violin, unison and two-part choral, action songs, and sight-singing. The results are given in the School Music Review. There was no combined concert. One had been arranged, but as Mr. Orde-Powlett was to have prepared and conducted it the idea was abandoned. Dr. McNaught adjudicated. The secretaries, the Misses C. and M. Yeoman and Mrs. Ringrose, have every reason to be satisfied with the results of their devoted labours.

THE FEIS CEOL, DUBLIN, MAY 22 TO 27.

The Ninth Annual Feis Ceoil was held in Dublin on May 22 (Monday) and five following days. On the first evening a concert-lecture was delivered by Mrs. Milligan Fox, hon. secretary of the Folk-Song Society, on 'The Evolution of the Irish Folk-Song,' illustrated by examples collected and arranged by the lecturer, and sung by former prize-winners of the Feis Ceoil.

On Tuesday evening a concert was given at which Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Melfort Dalton, Miss Agnes Zimmermann (solo pianist), Mr. Arthur Payne (solo violinist), and the Orpheus Choral Society (Dr. J. C. Culwick) took part. The Orpheus Choral Society were heard to great advantage in a selection of classical works as well as in some Irish airs arranged as part-songs.

On May 24 and 25 the chief choral competitions were held, and in addition, on May 25, there was an orchestral performance under the baton of Mr. S. Myerscough, Principal of the Leinster School of Music. It was hoped there would have been a competition for a prize of £40 for full orchestra, but as there was only one entry no prize was awarded. On May 26 and 27 the prize-winners' concerts were held, in addition to Commercial and Trades Choirs competitions.

On each day of the Festival competitions were held in various branches, the judges being: singing, Mr. D. Ffrangcon-Davies; pianoforte, Miss Agnes Zimmermann; strings and ensemble playing, Mr. Arthur Payne; organ and choral performances, Mr. H. A. Fricker.

The following were the first and second prize-winners in the choral competitions:

DIVISION I.—MIXED CHOIRS.

'Maiden City' Mixed Choir (Londonderry). (Dr. D. C. Jones.)
The Dublin Glee Singers. (Mr. Joseph Seymour.)

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

'Maiden City' Male Choir (Londonderry). (Dr. D. C. Jones.)
Varian's Choral Society. (Mr. Robert O'Dwyer.)

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

The Dublin Glee Singers Ladies' Choir. (Mr. Joseph Seymour.)
Mrs. Stewart's Ladies' Choir (Londonderry). (Mrs. A. McC. Stewart.)

DIVISION II.—MIXED CHOIRS.

The Amphion Choir. (Dr. George B. White.)
Brian Boru Gaelic League Choir. (Mr. Wm. McGouran.)

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

The Amphion Choir. (Dr. George B. White.)

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Cookstown Ladies' Choir. (Mr. A. M. Gifford.)
Leinster School of Music Choir. (Mr. S. S. Myerscough.)

DIVISION III.—COMMERCIAL CHOIRS.

MIXED VOICES.

I. S. Varian and Co.'s Choral Society. (Mr. Robert O'Dwyer.)

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Messrs. W. and R. Jacob's Choir A. } (Mr. Thomas Weaving.)

" " " " " " " " }

DIVISION IV.—TRADES CHOIRS.

MIXED VOICES.

United Society of Brushmakers' Choir. (Mr. Robert O'Dwyer.)

MALE VOICES.

Herald Typographical Society's Choir. (Mr. Joseph Sleith.)

LYTHAM (LANCASHIRE COAST), JUNE 1, 2 AND 3.

Lytham is an attractively-situated seaside resort; clean, spruce, and free from cheap-tripper attractions. Although the little town is within a tram-ride of big Blackpool, with all its unusually favourable facilities for large gatherings, the leading inhabitants believe that they deserve to have a musical Festival all of their own, and this notwithstanding the fact that they have no large room in which to accommodate many patrons. The present was the fifth Festival held in the town, and it was remarkably successful, not only in drawing competitors, but in interesting the residents. On the first day about fifty soloists competed in various classes, and three small chapel choirs also appeared, the Adelaide Street Wesleyan, Blackpool (Mr. Clifford Higgin) taking the prize. The second day was given up mainly to the children. Twenty-four pianists, seven violinists, twenty solo singers, and children in various sections from six schools appeared. The Revue, Blackpool, Council School (Mr. J. R. Rigby) gained the Challenge Shield. The choirs combined, under Mr. H. Whittaker, to give a capital performance of the cantata 'The Lobster's Garden Party' (Shapcott Wensley and Bridge). The men's-voice choirs from the district came and gave pleasant variety to the proceedings. The Preston Lyric (Mr. Joseph Smith) secured the first place by one mark. On the third day the competition was open to any district. There was some highly refined quartet singing, the Padiham Apollo male-voice quartet especially distinguishing itself. The test-pieces were 'Come, gentle zephyr' (Horsley), and 'Sweet, if you love me' (Cuthbert Harris). Four mixed-voice choirs competed, the Claremont Congregational, one of Mr. Whittaker's Blackpool choirs, gaining the first position. The men's-voice choir section attracted some first-rate choirs, including the celebrated Manchester Orpheus (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt) and the Habergam Glee Union (Mr. G. Hitchon), the first place falling to the first-named. The trophy in this section, a silver challenge scroll, was presented by the ladies of Lytham. Dr. McNaught and Mr. C. H. Fogg adjudicated. Mr. Vivian Jackson and Mr. T. S. Warburton, both of Blackpool, were the official accompanists.

PURBECK FESTIVAL (WAREHAM, DORSET),

JUNE 14 AND 15.

This is a young Festival in its second year, and is due to the enterprise of the Rev. S. C. Spencer Smith (Vicar of Kingston). The children's sections brought forward eleven choirs. Wareham (Mr. Snelling) was eminently successful in sight-singing, and also gained another first. Swanage and Sandford were also prize winners. On the second day four ladies' choirs, four madrigal choirs, three men's-voice choirs, and three choral societies competed. Tyneham, Swanage, Wareham, and Broadstone were first-prize winners. Dr. Somervell was the adjudicator.

On Whit Monday, June 12, at Llanwrst, the Southport Vocal Union (Mr. T. C. Clarke) gained the first prize. Dr. Coward and Mr. Emlyn Davies adjudicated. On the same day this society also won the first prize at Prestatyn. Mr. E. D. Lloyd adjudicated.

In the account of the York Competition, given on page 395 of our June issue, it should have been stated that the female-voice choir prize was won by the St. Martin's Ladies under Mr. Eli Smith. Miss Bigge's choir was second.

At the Berks, Bucks, and Oxon. Festival held at Aylesbury (reported on the same page), the judges, in addition to Dr. Allen, were Dr. Fanning, Dr. Varley Roberts, Mr. Henry Bird, Dr. Ernest Walker, Mr. Percy Sharnan, Mr. Plunket Greene, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, and Mr. T. F. Dunhill. One of the most important features of the Festival was the school-choir competitions, in which between eight and nine hundred children took part.

TWO GERMAN MUSICAL FESTIVALS AT EISENACH AND BONN.

Numerous Festivals attract the attention of the musical public at the beginning of the summer season, and this year there were two specially connected with the great German masters—Bach and Beethoven. At Eisenach, in the Thuringian forest, where stands J. S. Bach's birth-house, a Festival was held on May 26 and 27, and from May 28 to June 1 at Bonn on the Rhine, the latter being the Festival of the 'Beethoven House' Society, whose mission it is to preserve the house in which the master was born.

It is only a short time ago that the New Bach Society suggested the purchase of the still standing Bach birth-house at Eisenach and the preserving of it from decay. In order to furnish means for so doing, the celebrated Singakademie at Berlin, the oldest choral society of mixed voices in Germany,—that with which Mendelssohn in 1829 aroused from its long slumber of one hundred years the 'St. Matthew' Passion to a new and glorious life—promised for once to sing out of Berlin, and to take part at Eisenach in the performances of the two great Passions of 'St. Matthew' and 'St. John,' given in the Georgkirche, in front of which stands the noble bronze monument to Bach. The orchestra was that of the Berlin Philharmonic Society, together with its conductor Georg Schumann. As the choir of the church was too small for the unusually large number of performers, a concert platform was erected over the space before and covering the altar, and it sloped gradually towards the nave so that all the performers could be both seen and heard. The 'St. John' Passion was performed on the evening of May 26. Among the soloists, Frau Grumbacher de Jong (soprano), Herr von Milde (Christ), and Herr George Walter (The Evangelist) deserve special mention. On the following day came the 'St. Matthew' Passion, with Frau Geyer-Dierich, Frau Geller Walter, and MM. Walter and van Eweyk as the principal soloists. But the smaller parts were very well sung by Frau Walter-Choinnans and MM. Dierich, Sistermans, Günther, Lederer, and Liepe. The two Passions thus given in immediate succession deepened in an extraordinary manner the wonderful impression which they created.

On the morning between these two church performances a secular concert was given consisting principally of Bach's instrumental works. Joachim and Halir played the concerto for two violins; Schumann, Schnabel, and Reinhold the uncommonly fresh C major concerto for three claviars; while Herr Grumbacher de Jong sang an aria from a church cantata, the solo violin obligato of which was played by Dr. Joachim. The matinee opened with one of the 'Brandenburg' concertos and ended with the Overture in D, in which occurs the celebrated Aria. The splendid programme of this Festival, the noble situation and surroundings of the town, and the brilliant weather, contributed to the highest enjoyment of all those who took part in it.

The Bonn Festival which immediately followed, and at which only chamber music was performed, was of a different and more intimate kind. Its most striking features were the performances of the Joachim Quartet and of Ernst von Dohnányi. The rendering of Beethoven's last sonata for violin and pianoforte, by Joachim and Dohnányi, was an opportunity, rare indeed, of hearing two artists of such individuality and of natures so harmonizing one with the other. Among the performances of the Joachim Quartet, that of the F minor quartet stood highest. In addition to these artists there were Busoni and two French societies—the Société des Instruments Anciens, and the Société des Instruments à Vent. Of these the first—consisting of harpsichord, viola da gamba, viola d'amore, double bass and quinton—with Casadesus as leader, performed old, especially French, music of various kinds of the 18th century, all in a most refined style. Nearly all of it however was in one or other dance form, and the sameness of tone colour, also the limited capability of expression of the old instruments, at length caused monotony. The members of the Société des Instruments à Vent play well; they are accustomed to practise together, and consequently they work together for unity of purpose. With Dohnányi they played the two incomparably beautiful quintets for pianoforte and wind instruments by Mozart and Beethoven, and with Busoni, Saint-Saëns's quartet for the same combination of instruments. They were also associated with Dr. Joachim in Beethoven's septet, of which they gave a delightful rendering. The Société des Instruments à Vent were heard to great advantage in an octet by Haydn, and one by Gouvy in E flat. Both works were interpreted with marked refinement, and although the music in itself was not of great import, they created a good impression.

ALLGEMEINE DEUTSCHE MUSIKVEREIN TONKÜNSTLERFEST AT GRAZ.

For the first time in its existence the Allgemeine Deutsche Musikverein has held its annual Tonkünstlerfest in Austrian territory, the event taking place at Graz, the capital of Steyermark, and at Vienna, from May 31 to June 6. Consequently Austrian composers figured largely in the programmes, and one of Austria's finest conductors, Ferdinand Löwe, directed the performances.

The most important event of the Festival was the work of one of Austria's sons, the late Anton Bruckner, whose powerful Eighth Symphony threw everything else into the shade. Next, the variations by Max Reger and songs by Hugo Wolf made the deepest impression. Max Reger, though little known until two years ago, is now steadily coming to the front among present-day German musicians, was represented by his variations on a theme by Bach for pianoforte solo (Op. 81), and variations on a theme by Beethoven for two pianofortes (Op. 86). Both these compositions are extraordinarily rich in invention, and terminate with mighty fugues which, with their imposing climaxes, almost take one's breath away. Hugo Wolf was well represented by several of his beautiful songs, the performance of which again showed this great master of song-writing to be a genius in the art of expressing the poet's thought. The songs for solo voice and orchestra by Gustav Mahler showed good intention rather than natural gift of melody. The composer, one of the great masters of the orchestra, has clothed old German Volkslieder and poems by Rückert in a brilliant garb, but he is happier in his witty and humorous moments than when endeavouring to portray deep feeling.

Far greater gifts were revealed in the old Soldatenlieder by Theodor Streicher (for male-voice chorus and wind orchestra); unfortunately they were so short that the majority of the audience did not have time to realise how truly the composer had depicted the spirit of past centuries in his music. Guido Peters had little that was original to say in two movements of a Symphony in E minor, nor was a fantasy for organ by Roderich v. Mojsisovics of sufficient interest to remain in one's memory. Little more can be said for a symphonic poem, in the form of a Prelude and Triple Fugue, entitled 'Der Mensch,' by Paul Ertel. But one could not fail to admire its excellent contrapuntal workmanship.

One of the pleasantest memories of the Festival was the performance of a serenade for string quartet composed by E. Jacques-Dalcroze, which, although not remarkable for invention, abounds in unusually fascinating rhythms. Contrasted with the wealth of fantasy to be found in his other works, the string quartet of Hans Pfitzner fell flat in spite of many beauties and undoubted evidences of originality. Now and again, even in this quartet, a more convincing strength was revealed than in the string quintet (for two violins, viola, violetta, and violoncello) by Felix Draeseke. Much as Draeseke's thematic material may be admired, his music does not sufficiently reflect his own personality, and therefore he fails to interest one deeply.

A symphonic episode 'Odysseus' Heimkehr' was of special interest owing to the youth of the composer, Ernst Boehe. His work, if not yet marked by any great individuality, was brilliant in thematic material and skilful handling of the orchestra. Excellent if not very deep music was provided in a choral work, 'Dem Verklärten,' by Max Schillings, written to commemorate the 100th anniversary of Schiller's death, and a harmlessly pleasant ballad for bass solo and orchestra, 'Fingerhütchen' by Julius Weismann. More familiar compositions that were performed included Strauss's 'Heldenleben,' Liszt's Symphonic Poem 'Die Ideale,' and Wagner's 'Kaisermarsch.'

The Festival began and ended with dramatic performances. The Stadttheater in Graz gave a representation of Kienzl's opera 'Don Quixote,' while 'Die Feuersnot' by Richard Strauss, 'Die Rose vom Liebesgarten' by Hans Pfitzner, and Liszt's 'St. Elisabeth' were given in Vienna.

ROYAL OPERA COVENT GARDEN.

The performances of Wagner's works by the German company under Dr. Richter's direction, which have formed so conspicuous a feature of the season, terminated on June 14. The esteemed musician conducted on twenty evenings, viz., eight of the 'Ring,' 'Lohengrin' four, 'Tannhäuser' and 'Die Meistersinger' three each, and 'Tristan' twice. Of the new German vocalists the most successful were Frau Wittich, Frau Flescher-Edel and Herr C. Whitehill.

The Italian and French operas that have been performed since our last notice comprised Verdi's 'Aida,' 'Rigoletto,' 'Un Ballo in Maschera' and 'La Traviata,' Signor Puccini's 'La Bohème,' Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale,' Meyerbeer's 'Les Huguenots,' Bizet's 'Carmen,' and Gounod's 'Faust' and 'Roméo et Juliette.' The programme for the State performance on June 8 in honour of the King of Spain consisted of the garden scene from 'Roméo et Juliette,' the third act of 'La Bohème,' and the fourth act of 'Les Huguenots.' The most promising 'first appearance' was made by Miss Donalda, a Canadian soprano, who sings with great charm and musical intelligence and has a prepossessing appearance. Amongst favoured artists are Mesdames Melba and Selma Kurz, Désirée, Kirkby Lunn, Knupfer-Egri, and Raunay, and Signori Caruso and Scotti, and MM. Herold, Dalmore, Journet, Maurel, and Cotreuil. Of four new tenors, Signor Gamba, and Herren Groebke, Menzinsky and Burrian, the most likely to be engaged here again is the last-named. Signor Mancinelli and M. André Messenger have shared the responsible position of conductor, and have secured excellent ensembles.

Gluck's 'Orphée' (sung in the French language) was revived on June 22, after having lain dormant for seven years, at Covent Garden. Madame Kirkby Lunn, Madame Jeanne Raunay, and Miss E. Parkina formed the cast, and M. Messenger conducted.

ITALIAN OPERA AT THE WALDORF THEATRE.

PRODUCTION OF 'FIORELLA.'

Mr. Henry Russell's season of Italian opera at the Waldorf Theatre has been made interesting by excellence of ensemble and by the revival of Mascagni's 'L'Amico Fritz,' on May 30, and the production, on June 7, of a one-act opera entitled 'Fiorella,' written by M. Sardou and Signor G. B. Ghensi and composed by Mr. Amherst Webber. The story, laid in Venice in the 16th century, is old-fashioned in style, but possesses humour, albeit sometimes of an unconscious kind, and the music, if lacking in originality, is bright, pleasing and musicianly. The part of the heroine (Fiorella), which has the distinction of being laid out for a contralto, was cleverly played by Madame de Cisneros; the inevitable lover was impersonated by Signor Pezzutti, a fearsome but courteous brigand by Signor Angelini-Fornari, and the highly-necessary waiting-maid to carry the lovers' missives, and the no less needful odourate parent were admirably embodied respectively by Signorina Ferraris and Signor Pini-Corsi.

Remarkably vivacious performances have recently been given of 'Il Barbiere di Siviglia,' with Miss Alice Nielsen as Rosina and a company, including Signori De Lucia, Ancona, Pini-Corsi, and Arimondi; and Signor Cileà's 'Adriana Lecouvreur,' first performed in London last autumn at Covent Garden, was presented on June 20 with Mesdames Corsini, de Cisneros, and Signori Pezzutti, Fornari, and Arimondi. It should also be mentioned that Madame Emma Nevada made her reappearance, after many years' absence, as Violetta in Verdi's 'La Traviata' on June 16, and that delightfully finished performances have been given of Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale,' with Miss Nielsen as the artful widow, and Signori Bonci, Pini-Corsi, and Angelini-Fornari.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Midsummer-day was celebrated by the authorities of the Crystal Palace in the organization of a concert on Handel Festival scale and purporting to represent the more popular side of British musical art. The London contingent of the Handel Festival Choir and Orchestra, numbering 3,500 performers, gave sonorous effect to Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens' and also rendered with much spirit the rhythmical strains of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast.' The orchestral items included Mackenzie's 'Benedictus' (arranged for orchestra and organ), two of Cowen's 'Old English Dances' and the 'Tarantelle' from German's 'Gipsy Suite.' Sir Edward Elgar was represented by two of his 'Sea Pictures,' and Sir Charles Stanford by three of his 'Sea Songs,' with male-voice chorus. Songs by Sullivan and Goring Thomas were also included in the programme. A distinguished cast of vocalists took part, including Mesdames Agnes Nicholls, Ada Crossley, and Clara Butt; Messrs. Ben Davies, Kennerley Rumford, and Andrew Black. Dr. F. H. Cowen is to be congratulated on the performance, which was throughout excellent.

TONIC SOL-FA ASSOCIATION.

CRYSTAL PALACE FESTIVAL.

This Association held its twenty-first annual Festival at the Crystal Palace on June 17. A choral competition, which attracted only two choirs, was held in the morning, resulting in a victory for the Keighley Institute Choir, conducted by Mr. W. S. Wilkinson. The next event was a concert given by 6,000 children, under the experienced direction of Mr. Filmer Rook. The programme was not the best for the purpose we have heard at these gatherings, but it served to demonstrate the excellent quality of the voices and the soundness of training the children had received from their numerous teachers. At an evening concert 2,000 adult singers and a large orchestral band performed a varied programme. The chief attraction was the first performance in London of the cantata 'King Conor,' for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, by Mr. Joseph H. Adams. The poem is a versified account of an old Irish legend. It is not one of those poems that seem to yearn for musical setting, but it has inspired Mr. Adams to write some highly acceptable music, modern in idiom, but never extravagantly so. The solo was sung by Mr. Dan Price with great effect, and the chorus was efficient. The orchestral parts were carefully played, but as usual, owing to the vastness of the auditorium, many effects were lost. Mr. Adams conducted his own work, and Mr. L. C. Venables, with his customary firmness and ability, conducted the miscellaneous part of the programme. A charming part-song 'The message,' by A. J. Caldicott, was sung with great daintiness, and justly earned an encore. Mr. C. Hugh Rowcliffe was the organist at the children's concert, and Mr. Henry W. Weston accompanied at the adult concert.

MR. HILLIER'S MUSICAL FESTIVAL AT QUEEN'S HALL.

The six days' Festival organised by Mr. Louis Hillier, which took place last month (June 1-3 and 6-8), was an event of no little interest. Each programme contained a novelty—in the last there were even two—and for the most part they were welcome. The first of these novelties was a symphonic poem entitled 'La Mer,' by the Belgian composer M. Paul Gilson, of which the music is clever, well-scored, and picturesque. Then there were two works by rising French composers. M. H. Rabaud, a pupil of Massenet, whose opera 'La Fille de Roland' was recently produced with success in Paris, was represented by a 'Divertissement on Russian Airs,' in which characteristic thematic material is developed in a light yet skilful manner. The other composer was M. Pierné, César Franck's successor as organist at St. Clothilde, Paris. His Concertstück, for harp and orchestra, proved very attractive; the commonplace is avoided, and yet without any feeling of effort. It is a work which appeals to performers on the harp, for the solo part is most grateful. In M. Charpentier's suite, 'Impressions d'Italie,' given for the first time in its entirety, the music is of the programme order—fresh, pleasing, and delightfully scored, and the various sections well contrasted.

There is a growing appreciation in this country of César Franck's art-work, and Mr. Hillier was able to present a composition of his which, somewhat strangely, seems to have escaped the notice of London concert-givers. This was 'Psyche,' originally a symphonic poem with chorus, but which was arranged in the form of an orchestral suite by the composer himself. It is one of César Franck's most romantic works; the subject matter is engaging and its development very clear, while the effect of the whole is greatly enhanced by most delicate orchestration.

The final concert brought forth a Symphony in F by M. Théo Ysaye, the composer being a brother of the distinguished violinist, Eugène Ysaye. Its thematic material seemed to lack sufficient power and life to kindle interest in workmanship to which the composer had evidently given much earnest thought; but definite judgment cannot really be passed on a work of large dimensions after one hearing. Two more French composers were represented: Dr. Saint-Saëns by his Symphony in C minor with organ (No. 3), a work written expressly for the London

Philharmonic Society, and produced in 1886, and M. P. Dukas by his scherzo 'L'Apprenti Sorcier.'

Mr. Josef Holbrooke, the only British composer included in the scheme, conducted his variations on 'The Girl I left behind me,' written expressly for the occasion. They are exceedingly clever, perhaps too much so, for the effect produced did not seem equal to the labour which must have been bestowed on the music. Hasty judgment would be unwise; the players did their best, but the conductor was new to them, so that possibly Mr. Holbrooke's intentions were not fully realised.

The vocalists who took part in the Festival were Madame Hélène Feltesse and M. Ernest van Dyck, and the principal solo instrumentalists MM. Jean Gerardy, César Thomson, and M. Arthur De Greef. Mention must also be made of Mdlle. M. Stroobants for her excellent rendering of the solo-harp part in Piarre's work. The Ostend Kursaal Orchestra created a very favourable impression, while M. Léon Rinskooff proved himself an experienced and capable conductor.

London Concerts.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

A quasi-novelty formed the central feature of the concert on June 8 in the performance of M. Paul Juon's symphony in A, which Mr. Wood introduced into England at a promenade concert last autumn. The work is clever, well orchestrated and extremely brilliant, but whether it will become a symphonic classic is doubtful: its best movement is the Adagio, in which the composer sounds the note of true feeling. Miss Fanny Davies played the solo part of Schumann's pianoforte concerto, M. Casals, performed Bach's suite for violoncello solo in D (a composition which seemed somewhat out of place at an orchestral concert), and Mr. John Coates sang Wagner's 'Preislied.' The remainder of the programme included Debussy's prelude 'L'après-midi d'un faune' and Beethoven's 'Namensfeier' overture.

The seventh and last concert of the season (the 93rd) took place at Queen's Hall on June 22, when the chief centre of attraction was Master Franz von Vecsey, who gave a wonderful reading of Beethoven's violin concerto, of which his playing of the slow movement was really beautiful. Dr. Cowen's symphony in F, first performed at Cambridge in 1887 and revised by the composer for this concert, was revived, its thoroughly Cowenesque Allegretto movement giving great pleasure. Miss Perceval Allen, the possessor of a clear and musical soprano voice, achieved an undoubted success in her singing of Max Bruch's 'Ave Maria' from the cantata 'Das Feuerkreuz.' The remainder of the programme consisted of Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture—introduced into England by the Philharmonic Society in 1833—and two Bohemian dances cleverly and effectively orchestrated by Mr. Alberto Randegger, Junr. Not a little of the success of the season's concerts has been due to the excellent playing of the orchestra and to Dr. Cowen's skilful conductorship.

SOME OLD-WORLD MUSIC.

Particular interest attached to a concert given in Bechstein Hall on June 5, by reason of the unconventionality of the programme. Haydn was represented by his 'Paukenwirbel' symphony in E flat and Mozart by his delightful pianoforte concerto in C minor, written in 1786, the solo part of which was admirably interpreted by Miss Fanny Davies. Two overtures, though old yet practically new to Londoners, proved to be further attractive features of the evening's music. That by Paisiello to his opera 'Nina, o la pazza per amore' (1789) is an exceedingly bright and interesting composition, the other by Méhul, to his 'Stratonice,' a one-act Comédie Héroïque (Paris, 1792), was not quite so interesting. Mr. Cyril Scott's 'Helen of Kirkconnell' was sung by Mr. Frederic Austin to orchestral accompaniment, for the first time in London. A small contingent of the Queen's Hall Orchestra played the various selections with their reputed excellence, but some of the wind instruments were at times too assertive and strenuous for the ideal interpretation of this old-world music; allowance, however, must be made for the resonance of the hall. One felt as though the flutes, trumpets, &c., should now and then have been muted—and even the strings and pianoforte—in order to get quite the right atmosphere for the music. Mr. Thomas Beecham ably conducted, though a little more give and take, and perhaps a little less speed, in the Haydn symphony might have been an advantage; still he gave proof of being a good conductor. It is possible that a series of similar concerts may be given next season.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Words of encouragement rather than criticism are due to the students who took part in the concert on June 2 at Queen's Hall. Pianists were represented by Dorothy Grinstead, Marjorie Wigley, and Sydney Rosenbloom, the last-named a majorie wisely gifted with great natural ability. Gladys Clark's rendering of Sarasate's 'Zigeunerweisen' showed that she possesses considerable technical skill, and two movements from Brahms's sextet in B flat were rendered in an admirable manner. Of the vocalists, Beatrice Pope, who has a soprano voice of pure and fresh quality, was specially successful, and mention is due of Emile d'Oisy, a sweet-voiced tenor. A feature of the afternoon was the clever reciting by Vera Cockburn, whose delivery of three poems was interspersed with well-written and melodious interludes reflecting the character and spirit of the text, composed for strings, organ and pianoforte by Mr. Hubert Bath.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Of the good work being done by the professors of the Guildhall School of Music, under the experienced direction of Dr. W. H. Cummings, abundant proof was forthcoming at the orchestral concert given by the students on June 14, in the fine hall of the City of London School. Programmes for such occasions are more difficult to make up than is commonly supposed, for many things have to be considered, not the least of which are the abilities of the young people, and what is best for them to know intimately. The concert under notice was an excellent example of good programme-making. The evening's music, which began with the first movement of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and ended with Félicien David's 'Lalla Rookh' overture, included Mozart's characteristic concerto in E flat for two pianofortes and a cleverly written MS. entr'acte by W. E. Lawrence. The soloists in the concerto were Minnie S. Crouch and Gertrude K. Harding. The vocalists were Bertha Lansell and Nellie Watson. The Principal, Dr. Cummings, conducted with his usual care.

THE HANDEL SOCIETY.

The Handel Society is to be commended for reviving Max Bruch's 'Scenes from the Odyssey,' and its performance of the work at Queen's Hall on May 30 was very creditable. The cantata, produced in 1872 at Bremen, was performed three years later by the St. Cecilia Society at Manchester, and introduced to a London audience by the Bach Choir in 1883. Max Bruch himself thought so well of the Banquet Scene that he selected it for the concert in 1893 at Cambridge when, with Boito, Saint-Saëns, and Tschaiikovsky, the University conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Music. If the choral-singing lacked intensity of expression, the common fault of London choirs, it was intelligent, and some very effective points were made. Mr. Thomas Meux made the most of his opportunities as Odysseus, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor conducted.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Particular interest attached to the concert given by the London Symphony Orchestra at Queen's Hall on June 6 owing to Herr Arthur Nikisch's conducting of Tschaiikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony, in which some magnificent effects were produced, and Beethoven's 'Leonora,' No. 2, overture. The procedure of playing the conclusion of the 'Leonora,' No. 3, overture as an ending to No. 2 is to be condemned. It is of course more effective, but the respective distinctiveness of the works is thereby destroyed. The performance itself, however, was very fine. The soloist was Miss Maud MacCarthy, who cleverly played the solo in Tschaiikovsky's violin concerto in D minor.

VOCAL RECITALS.

Miss Henriette Van de Hoven, a Boer lady who has recently studied in Paris, made her first appearance in England at a concert given by herself at Queen's Hall on June 9. She subsequently gave a vocal recital at Æolian Hall on June 19, and on both occasions showed that she is the possessor of a soprano voice of exceptionally pure and ringing quality, with much natural musical perception.

Mr. Francis Rogers and Mr. Bruno Huhn gave a recital at Æolian Hall on June 15 which proved to be very enjoyable. Mr. Rogers has a remarkably musical-toned baritone voice, and his singing was distinguished by artistic perception and control of a high order. Mr. Huhn played his accompaniments most sympathetically, and a feature of the programme was a group of songs from his pen, settings of Moira O'Neill's 'Songs from the Glens of Antrim.' Of these, 'A Song of Glenann' captivated by its light-hearted gaiety, 'Back to Ireland' by its vigour and manly spirit, and 'Denny's Daughter' by its simple pathos. Mention is also due of a delicate Japanese lyric, entitled 'Come home, beloved,' by Isidore Luckstone, and of a virile setting by Sidney Homer of Browning's 'Prospect.'

Miss Dorothy Wiley, a Yorkshire lady, gave on June 15 her second annual concert at Bechstein Hall and, as on the previous occasion, charmed her audience by the vivacity and intelligence of her singing. The several pianoforte solos contributed by Mr. Harold Samuel included the first performance of a brilliantly-written 'Capriccio' by Mr. Frank Bridge.

Miss Marie Busch, assisted by Miss Elsie Hall (pianoforte), gave a vocal recital at Steinway Hall on June 16, when she sang with taste and refinement an interesting selection of songs, and joined Miss Ethel Henry-Bird in some unaccompanied duets by F. von Holstein. Miss Hall's vivacious interpretation of Schumann's 'Carnival' (Op. 9) was a pleasurable feature of the afternoon, and Mr. Henry Bird was, as usual, an irreproachable accompanist.

Mr. Louis van Hes—who, we are assured, is an Englishman in spite of his name—gave a concert at Steinway Hall on June 20, at which he showed musical perception and a well-trained light tenor voice.

On the same evening at Æolian Hall an excellent concert was given by Miss Perceval Allen and Mr. Archdeacon, both of whom sang admirably.

Mr. Herbert Witherspoon, an American bass, made his appearance in London at a recital given by him at Bechstein Hall on June 23, and created a most favourable impression by reason of the remarkably resonant quality of his voice and the dramatic character of his singing.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Prominent amongst many clever pianists who recently have sought public favour is Miss Ruth Lynda Déyo, an American lady who produced a very favourable impression by her playing on her first appearance in England at Bechstein Hall on June 6. A specially attractive feature in Miss Déyo's interpretations was their sympathy with the spirit of the music. The programme began with a group of three pieces respectively by Rameau, Bach, and Scarlatti, the character of each being accentuated by subtle change of style, and the versatility of the young artist became more marked in her subsequent performances of Schumann's 'Etudes Symphoniques' and some pieces by Chopin and Dr. MacDowell. Miss Déyo also played a scherzo in B minor of her own, a melodious, well-written and effective piece.

Miss Lonie Basche, who gave a recital at Bechstein Hall on June 20, showed herself to be an accomplished pianist.

Madame Olga Sameroff gave her second pianoforte recital, at Steinway Hall on June 20, when she deepened the favourable impressions she had previously made.

Mdlle. Wierzbicka, another new-comer, is a Pole and a lady much esteemed by her countrymen. Assisted by Mdlle. Constance Neumann, the possessor of a light soprano voice, the Polish artist gave a recital at Steinway Hall on June 21, when she introduced a sonata for pianoforte solo by Guillaume Lekeu, a Belgian composer who lived from 1870 to 1894, and was a pupil of César Franck and Vincent d'Indy. The work is sombre in character and deficient in variety and contrast, but it has some impressive and poetic passages and these were admirably rendered by Mdlle. Wierzbicka, who in a group of pieces by Chopin further showed her possession of refined taste and an admirable technique.

VIOLIN RECITALS.

Messrs. Marcel Chailley and Armand Ferté gave their second chamber concert at the Salle Erard on June 6, when most satisfactory readings were given of Beethoven's sonata in E flat (Op. 12, No. 3) and César Franck's sonata for violin and pianoforte. Miss de Angelis sang.

Record is due of the artistic violin-playing of M. Léon Sametini at his orchestral concert, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, at Queen's Hall on June 7. His interpretation of Brahms's concerto in D, if somewhat lacking in breadth, was delightfully refined and finished.

The prodigy violinist Franz von Vecsey reappeared at Queen's Hall on June 17 after his recent tour in America. Assisted by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Charles Williams, the boy was heard in Beethoven's concerto. His execution was marvellous for a boy of twelve years of age, not only in the concerto, but also in Tartini's 'Trillo del Diavolo.'

Mischa Elman has been giving a series of recitals at Queen's Hall, at which his extraordinary musical precocity has become increasingly apparent, culminating in his playing Bach's Chaconne on June 19. That the depth of the work was fully sounded cannot be said, but the interpretation was remarkable for dramatic fire and its triumph over executive difficulties.

A few words of encouragement are due to Miss Alice Grassie, a young violinist who made her début on June 20 at the Salle Erard. The young artist was somewhat overweighed in Bach's concerto in E, but she gave an excellent account of an interesting sonata in E—or rather suite—in five movements by F. Maria Veracini, the famous operatic composer and violinist of the eighteenth century.

Mr. Henry Such, at his violin recital at Queen's Hall on June 20, introduced two new pieces by Miss Ethel Barns—a 'Chant Elégiaque' and a 'Moto Perpetuo,' effective if not distinctive compositions.—On the same day Fräulein Olitykd gave a concert at Bechstein Hall, at which Herr Alfred Wittenberg, an accomplished and gifted violinist, made his first appearance in London.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Music is in abeyance here just now, so far as the concert-room is concerned, but we have had some novelties at the theatres. On June 5, Mr. Hedmond's company introduced a new and genuine comic opera at the Grand Theatre, 'The Queen's Jester,' libretto and music by the Australian composer, George Howard Clutsum. The music is distinctly good, and in the main is well scored; the book wants a little compression, but has a tangible plot. The principal parts were taken by Mr. Hedmond and Miss Lizzie Burgess. On June 12, at the Prince of Wales Theatre, a comedy opera, 'The Gipsy Girl,' was produced for the first time on any stage. This also was the work of a single individual, Claude Arundale. Both were received with much favour.

On June 13, at Bingley Hall, where an exhibition of local industries was in progress, a brass band contest was held. Ten bands competed, and some very good playing was heard, though the music was confined to selections from Donizetti. Mr. H. Muddiman was judge, and the first prize was awarded the Birmingham City Band (conducted by Mr. J. Ord Hume); second prize, Northfield (Mr. B. L. Fewster); third, Willenhall (Mr. J. Roberts); fourth, Crown Tube Works (Mr. C. Smith); and fifth, Dudley (Mr. W. Hyde). There was a very large attendance, and the greatest interest was taken in the proceedings. Such contests are not of long standing here, the first dating back only ten years, but the interest in them is increasing, and they are spreading the love of music among the masses.

Sunday concerts in the public parks are also of recent institution, and two notable functions deserve a word. On June 11 the band of the Irish Guards (conductor, Mr. C. H. Hassell) gave a concert in Summerfield Park, where there was an attendance of 30,000 people. It was an experiment on the part of the Park Music Committee, and was completely successful. On June 18, at Victoria Park, Handsworth, the band of the Coldstream Guards (conductor, Lieut. Rogan) was engaged for a concert, when upwards of 25,000 persons assembled, and the collecting-sheets realised nearly £50. These things are signs of the times.

The musical matinees at the rooms of the Royal Society of Artists, directed by Mr. Oscar Pollack, came to a close on June 10. They have been well attended throughout.—On June 19 the Midland Institute School of Music closed the session with a concert of chamber music, when works by Benoit, Holländer, Chaminade, Beethoven, Ries, Arensky, Vieuxtemps, and Scharwenka were admirably interpreted by a number of students, among whom special mention must be made of Miss G. Fuller and Mr. A. Hitch (violin), and Miss B. Hewitt and Mrs. F. Yardley (pianoforte). For the first time a composition by a student of the school was introduced. This was a prelude and double fugue for two pianofortes, by Julius A. Harrison, very musicianly in scope and treatment, and well given by the composer and Miss Olive Rider.

MUSIC IN CAMBRIDGE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The principal event of the term has been the performance of Dr. Walford Davies's 'Everyman,' given by the University Musical Society, under the direction of the composer. There was a large audience, and the concert was a great success. Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Florence Oliver, Mr. J. Horncastle, and Mr. W. G. Forington were the soloists. The last-named deserves a special word of commendation for his rendering of the exacting part of the hero. The work was preceded by Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, conducted by Dr. Alan Gray.

The Joachim Quartet visited us on May 9. They played quartets by Beethoven and Mozart. Miss Drestel was an admirable vocalist.

Dr. Naylor, of Emmanuel College, did an enterprising thing in producing Perosi's 'Missa Davidica,' for male-voice soloists and chorus, at Emmanuel, on June 11. Also the performance by amateurs, on June 5, of a masque, 'The Christening of Rosalys,' gained distinction because Mr. E. J. Dent, of King's College, wrote music specially for the occasion. The biographer of Scarlatti showed that his 17th century studies have not deprived him of the power of writing modern and charming strains.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The music of the summer season is mainly that of the Colleges, the Musical Club, and the Musical Union. The first musical event was the Festival of the last-named Society, celebrating the second decade of its existence, 1894-1904, when two concerts, excellent in their way, were given. At the first, which took place on May 2, the chief items in the programme were Svendsen's octet for strings in A minor (Op. 3), and Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony. The programme of the second concert, on the evening following, included Beethoven's string quartet in A (Op. 18, No. 5), and Dvořák's pianoforte quintet, also in A (Op. 81).

At the concert on May 11, in the Town Hall, given under the auspices of the Musical Club, the Joachim Quartet, led by Dr. Joachim, gave some very enjoyable performances—e.g., Haydn's string quartet in C (Op. 54, No. 2), Mozart's quartet in E flat (K. 428), and Beethoven's well-known quartet in A minor (Op. 132.)

The concerts of the 'Eights Week' were started by Balliol on May 28, the programme consisting of Beethoven's variations from the Septet, and Schubert's ever-welcome octet in F. Mr. A. Gibson was the leader, and the concert was excellent.

At the Exeter College Concert on May 30 the string band played in good style Volkmann's serenade in F (Op. 63), and songs were contributed by Miss Viola Salvin and Mr. F. Ranalow.

On June 1, at Keble, the chief interest centred in the orchestral items, which were Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture, Tchaikovsky's 'Eugene Onegin' waltzes, and Wagner's 'Meistersinger' overture, all being capably performed under the baton of Mr. F. Shaw. Some excellent songs (vocalist, Mr. Walter Ivimey) and part-songs given by the Society were admirably rendered.

At Queen's on the following evening the principal features were the 'Red King,' a choral ballad composed by Alice Mary Smith (Mrs. Meadows White), and 'Ode to Music' by Mr. Miles B. Foster, who honoured the Society by conducting his work. We must not omit to mention the thoroughly artistic singing of Mr. J. Reed, principal tenor of Trinity College, Cambridge, both in the solos of the above works and also in Purcell's charming song 'Nymphs and Shepherds.'

On June 7, in the Sheldonian Theatre, Sir Hubert Parry gave a professional lecture of great educational value on 'The Evolution of Thematic Material.' Illustrations were given by Miss Evans, Mr. Friskin, and Mr. James, of the Royal College of Music. The Professor's discourse was highly appreciated by a large audience.

On Midsummer-night the Local Orchestra, conducted by Dr. H. P. Allen, gave a very enjoyable concert in the Town Hall. The performance included Haydn's symphony in E flat (No. 6), 'Five Songs of the Sea,' composed and conducted by Sir Charles Stanford and admirably sung by Mr. Plunket Greene, and aria for soprano solo with flute obbligato, 'Susser Trost,' by J. S. Bach, the vocalist being Miss Sichel and the flautist Mr. Fransella.

MUSIC IN THE SOUTH-WEST OF ENGLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The second half of the season 1904-1905 has been unusually eventful in the south-western counties; several new choral societies have been formed, and others have been energetic in the performance of various works. 'The Creation' has been popular among the smaller societies to such a degree as might be called a revival, but there has been an entire absence of new works of the choral type.

THE THREE TOWNS.

In the programme of the Corporation's concerts, organised by Mr. H. Moreton, the chief events have been the performances of 'The Golden Legend' (March 4) and 'The Martyr of Antioch' (April 15) by the Guildhall Choir, who found Sullivan's melodious and essentially vocal choral numbers much to their liking, and sang splendidly and with the utmost attention to colouring. The principals on these two occasions were Miss Caroline Hatchard, Miss Marion Battishill, Mr. Anderson Nicol, Mr. Charles Knowles, and Mr. Sydney Smith (a member of the chorus), Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Margaret Milward, Mr. Will Foster (a member of the chorus, who did remarkably well), and Mr. S. T. Bishop. At both concerts an excellent band was led by Mr. John Pardew, and Mr. H. Moreton conducted.

After extensive repairs, rebuilding, and enlargement the organ in Plymouth Guildhall was re-opened on March 15 in the official presence of the Mayor and Corporation. The scheme, proposed by the borough organist, had been endorsed by Sir Frederick Bridge, and carried out by Messrs. Hele & Co. with excellent results. Mr. H. Moreton gave a recital calculated to illustrate this fact.

In the plébisite taken at the penultimate concert (on March 7) of Mr. Frank Winterbottom's series of Symphony concerts, Schubert's 'Unfinished' proved the favourite, and this, with movements from Rubinstein's 'Ocean' (which had been performed in its entirety on February 10), in addition to Tschaiakovsky's fifth Symphony (played earlier in the season), formed the chief items in the programme of the final concert on April 7. Grieg's 'Sigurd Jorsalfar' suite and a Serenade for strings by Gerlach, both novelties here, were introduced.

The Misses Smith drew the entire programme of their third chamber concert (February 2) from the works of living British composers, and introduced a pianoforte trio in B minor by Sir Hubert Parry, a sonata in D minor for pianoforte and violoncello by Sir Charles Stanford, a Suite for violin and pianoforte by Mr. Arthur Hinton, and a pianoforte composition by Mr. T. F. Dunhill, consisting of an air with sixteen variations, all of which were excellently interpreted.

Attempts have been made in two directions to awaken natural local interest in the folk-songs of the West collected on Dartmoor by Rev. S. Baring-Gould. Concert recitals with historical readings have been given by Mr. Reginald Waddy, the first taking place on March 2, and costume performances, with readings by Rev. S. Baring-Gould, were given on May 3, organized by Miss Gage Goodfellow.

A new choral society, formed by Mr. Manley Martin for the northern suburb of Plymouth, made its debut on February 22 in Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' the numerical strength of the chorus and the very gratifying results of the first session's training supplying sufficient raison d'être for the new Society, which will entirely confine operations to the Mannamead district. Madame Mary Poole, Messrs. Dean, Trotter and G. S. Meadows were the principals.

OTHER DEVONSHIRE TOWNS.

Two other new societies claim recognition, one conducted by Mr. W. M. Jones, in Barnstaple, which made its first appearance (on February 15) in 'The Creation,' assisted by Miss S. M. Lewis, Messrs. Trevor Evans and David Hughes, with Mr. R. Ball leading the band; the other, styled the 'Belgrave,' has been organized for one of the Torquay suburbs by Dr. Orlando A. Mansfield, and gave Spohr's 'God, Thou art great' and a programme of miscellaneous choruses on March 8.

Totnes Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Herbert Worth) performed Barnett's 'The Ancient Mariner' on March 2, with Madame Mary Poole, Miss Edith Reade, Mr. H. Afanfryn Hill, and Mr. T. W. Balhatchet as soloists; the small but useful Society at Brent gave Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Callirhoë' on the same date, under Mr. David Parkes; Mr. Walter P. Weekes was responsible for a very meritorious performance by the Plympton Society of 'The Ancient Mariner' on April 26; Haydn's 'Creation' was performed at Exeter by the Oratorio Society under Dr. H. J. Edwards on March 22, again on April 26 at Babbacombe, Torquay, conducted by Mr. W. L. Twining, and yet again by Ashburton Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Harold O. Jones), with 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' on May 3, in the last case with Madame Mary Poole (as also at Babbacombe), Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Balhatchet as principals.

On May 3 the cultured Musical Festival Society at Barnstaple gave, under Dr. H. J. Edwards, concert recitals of Gounod's 'Faust' with a degree of artistic effect not often achieved under such conditions, Madame Emily Squire, Miss Pleasance Miller, Messrs. S. Masters and S. J. Bishop contributing to the happy result.

The Western Counties Musical Association undertook a heavy task for their Festival on May 4. The performance of the first two parts of the 'Hiawatha' trilogy and of Elgar's 'King Olaf' constituting a programme which must be considered ambitious when it is remembered that the chorus consists of branches from small country places. The conductor of the combined forces, Dr. D. J. Wood, organist of Exeter Cathedral, however, produced results which were gratifying and encouraging, and though lack of unanimity and occasional falling of pitch was almost inevitable, the chorus displayed commendable recognition of the demands of both works. The principals were Madame Emily Squire, Messrs. Charles Saunders and Mr. William Higley.

Teignmouth Orchestral Society concluded its twenty-fifth season on May 18 with a miscellaneous concert, conducted by Mr. A. J. James.

CORNISH TOWNS.

Only a brief resumé can be given of the numerous choral concerts in the country towns in Cornwall. On January 16 Penzance Choral Society rendered 'Judas Maccabæus,' which had not been presented in the district since the year 1878. The veteran conductor, Mr. T. H. Nunn, was unable through feebleness to be at his post, which was taken by Mr. Richard White. The same Society closed the season with Bennett's 'The May Queen' and Mendelssohn's 'Loreley' on May 3.—Torpoint Choral Society, under Mr. W. Greet, gave 'The Creation' on January 26, with Madame Mary Poole, Mr. Will Foster, and Mr. G. S. Meadows in the solo parts.—One of the best efforts of the Launceston Choral Society was the performance of the 'Departure' section of the 'Hiawatha' trilogy on February 2, assisted by Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Penderel Price, and Mr. Arthur Walenn, and conducted by Mr. C. S. Parsonson.—The first part of Haydn's 'The Seasons' was sung by Camborne Choral Society on February 16, conducted by Mr. H. V. Pearce; and on the same date the Truro Amateur Glee Society (conductor, Mr. Braid), gave a concert of which the chief feature was the excellent rendering of minstrel songs.—Tywardreath Choral Society presented Bennett's 'The May Queen,' on February 23, conducted by Mr. H. Dagger.—Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' was well performed by the Saltash Society, conductor, Mr. Harold Lake, on March 2.—The performance of 'The Rose Maiden' by St. Budeaux Choral Society on March 15 was so successful that it was repeated on April 12, Mr. Barnicott conducting.—A new society at Fowey gave 'St. Paul' on March 22, conducted by Mr. Hawkins and assisted by Miss Viola Salvin, Miss Hackin, Messrs. Albert Collings, and H. Sunman.—The little society at Plymstock gave 'Elijah' on April 27, and the Liskeard Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Arthur C. Faull, of Plymouth) again evidenced the popularity of 'The Creation' by a good rendering on April 28, with Miss Gertrude Drinkwater, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. G. S. Meadows as soloists.

Foreign Notes.

COPENHAGEN.

The hundredth anniversary of the birth of J. P. E. Hartmann was celebrated here on May 4. His grandfather, a royal-chamber musician, who died in 1763, was the composer of the national melody 'Konge Christian stod ved høyen Mast,' the principal theme of which was used by Meyerbeer in an entr'acte of his incidental music to 'Struensee.' His father, who first taught him music, was for many years organist of the garrison church of this city. Hartmann made his debut as stage composer in 1832 with 'Ravnen' ('The Raven'). He was the friend of Mendelssohn, and father-in-law of Gade. At the age of thirty-five he became director of the Copenhagen Conservatoire, and died at the ripe age of ninety-five.

MILAN.

The piercing of the Simphon is to be commemorated next year by a grand International Exhibition, also by a great Theatrical Exhibition organized by the box-owners of La Scala, to be held at the same time. The exhibits will be divided into three groups, the second of which will include souvenirs of great composers, conductors, vocalists, portraits and autographs. The third group will be devoted to music, scores of operas and ballets, autographs and printed books, music, libretti, programmes, tickets, catalogues, &c.

WURZBURG.

Father Hartmann's new oratorio, 'The Last Supper,' the text compiled from the Bible and the Roman Catholic liturgy, was performed at the Royal School of Music on May 24. The Emperor of Germany has accepted the dedication of the work. Father Hartmann has already written and produced two other oratorios: 'Saint François' and 'Petrus.'—An Adagio for clarinet and strings composed by Richard Wagner for the clarinetist Christian Rummel, who from 1815 to 1841 was capellmeister at Wiesbaden, has recently been performed at the Royal School of Music of this city. Wagner went to Würzburg in 1833 where his brother was stage-manager, and there he completed his early opera 'Die Feen.' The above statement with regard to the Adagio is taken from a foreign paper, but no details are given as to the character of the music, or as to whether it was discovered in this city.

ROME.

A memorial tablet to Wagner has been affixed to the Palazzo Grifoni, 73 Via Babuino. The inscription (in Italian) runs thus:

In this house dwelt Richard Wagner
in the year 1877
Some admirers of his art set up this stone to his memory
Rome 1905.

The scheme was carried out by a committee, with Prince Gabrielli as president. At the inauguration Diego Angeli, the historian, delivered a speech, in which he drew a parallel between Goethe and Wagner.

Miscellaneous.

An interesting function took place at the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, on June 16, when Mr. David Jenkins, Mus. Bac., the lecturer in music, received the handsome present of a gold watch-chain and the full score of Wagner's 'Parsifal' from the College Musical Society. The Society attained its majority on the occasion of the concert held in April, when 'Elijah' was performed with great success, and this was deemed an appropriate occasion to recognise the invaluable services which Mr. Jenkins has rendered to the College. For twenty-one years he has conducted the Society's concerts, during which period twenty-eight classical compositions—oratorios, cantatas, and symphonies—have been performed. Moreover he has not confined his energies to that body only, as he has also directed the orchestral performances in connection with the Dramatic Society, which contributed largely to the success of these gatherings. All these services have been rendered gratuitously, and this fact greatly increases the Society's debt of gratitude to him. The alacrity with which the professors and students generally responded to the committee's appeal for contributions testifies to the high esteem in which he is held by his colleagues and students.

The London University Musical Society is a newly-formed organization to consist of a choral and instrumental section. Dr. Davan Wetton has been appointed conductor, and Dr. C. E. Lakin, the Middlesex Hospital College, and Mr. A. J. H. Iles, St. Thomas's Hospital, have accepted the offices of Hon. Secretary and Hon. Assistant Secretary respectively. Those eligible for the membership of the Society are (i.) Members of the London University, (ii.) Present and past members of the teaching staff of those Institutions at which there are recognized teachers of the University, and (iii.) A limited number of ladies and gentlemen not included in either of the first or second classes, who may be elected by ballot at a general meeting of the Society.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music: The Charles Rube Prize (for string trio) to Mary Burgess (pianoforte), Hilda Barnes (violin), Gwendolen Griffiths (violinello); and the Heathcote Long Prize (pianoforte-playing) to Sydney Rosenbloom (of Edinburgh).—The Josephine Troup Scholarship (founded by Miss E. J. Troup) is for British-born lady composers, particularly of orchestral works. The Scholarship, tenable for five years, is of the value of thirty-three guineas per annum. Full particulars may be obtained upon application to the Secretary of the Royal Academy of Music.

At the meeting of the Musical Association held on June 13, Dr. Arthur Somervell read a paper on 'The Basis of the Claim of Music in Education.'

Mr. Paul England recently gave a highly successful song recital at Los Angeles, where he is temporarily residing. One of the local newspapers refers to his 'literary as well as musical interpretation of Schumann's Dichterliebe cycle'; and three songs by English composers—'Come away, death' (C. Wilson), 'My star' (C. Salaman), and 'A roundelay' (C. A. Lidgley), all quite new to the people of Los Angeles, were immensely appreciated.

We are requested to state that at the Victoria University of Manchester the diploma of Licentiate of the Incorporated Society of Musicians will also be accepted in connection with the examination for the degree of Bachelor of Music as an equivalent for the satisfactory playing of some musical instrument, and that Dr. C. W. Pearce has been appointed by the Court to be an external examiner for musical degrees.

Mr. Tobias Matthey delivered the Queen Victoria Lectures at Trinity College of Music, London, on May 31 and June 1, when he discoursed on 'The foundations of pianoforte playing,' a subject upon which he is well qualified to speak.

Mr. Walter Mackway, conductor of the Clapham Choral Society, has been presented with a handsome and massive pair of silver candlesticks (James I. pattern) by the members and friends in commemoration of the Society's silver jubilee.

Errata: In the June issue, page 370, line 7, for 'C minor, Op. 10, No. 1,' read 'D, Op. 10, No. 3'; page 399, line 20 from the end, for 'Sunderland' read 'Sutherland.'

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

GALWAY.—The recently-established Choral Union concluded its first season on May 23, at the Court Theatre, with a programme which included Mendelssohn's 'Loreley,' and the following part-music: Cooke's 'Strike the lyre,' Hodson's 'All the world is bright,' Stewart's 'Bells of St. Michael's tower,' and Pinsuti's 'Good night, beloved.' There was a choir of sixty voices, conducted by Mr. Frank W. Sturgess, to whom is due the credit of founding the Society and of introducing music of a high class in this locality.

GREAT YARMOUTH.—Mr. E. E. Chustoney has been presented with an illuminated address and a purse of gold in recognition of his twelve years' service as organist of the Congregational Church.

GREYTOWN, NATAL.—The Choral Society's second concert this season took place in the Town Hall on May 20, when the late J. More Smetton's cantata 'King Arthur' was performed. The solo vocalists were Miss Jessie Carter, Mr. Charles Hayter, Mr. A. L. Moon and Mr. A. W. Cooper, the conductor of the Society, who replaced the representative of King Arthur at short notice.

LEAMINGTON.—At the first annual meeting of the New Choral Society the conductor, Mr. H. M. J. Gibbon, was presented with a handsome rosewood double-desk music stand as a token of the esteem of the committee and chorus.

NEWCASTLE (N.S.W.).—The first subscription concert this season of the newly organized Orchestral Society was given in the Central Hall on May 4. The programme was an ambitious one, and comprised Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' and 'Hebrides' overtures, Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony and entr'acte 'Rosamunde,' Mozart's 'Die Zauberflöte' overture, and the pianoforte concerto in G minor by Saint-Saëns (solo, Miss Florence Lance). The orchestral playing under Mr. Edward King's direction was of a high order, and the Society has only to go on in the same direction and prosper.

WESTGATE-ON-SEA.—The first concert of the recently-formed Musical Society took place in St. Saviour's Schools on May 24, when Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' together with Bach's concerto in A for pianoforte and strings, the latter well played by the small orchestra of six players, were performed. The choir sang efficiently in the cantata, and in several madrigals and part-songs (representing part-music of the 16th to the 20th centuries) by Festa, Benet, Gibbons, Beale, Hubert Parry, and Charles Wood. The conductor was Mr. A. H. R. Robinson.

Answers to Correspondents.

ORGANUM.—In reply to your request for information concerning the 'thunder pedal' stop in the organ of Doncaster Parish Church, Mr. Wilfrid Sanderson writes as follows: 'The thunder pedal is merely a mechanical device. By working a foot lever (after the manner of a swell-pedal) the lower notes of the pedal-board are pressed down gradually—i.e., the more the lever is depressed, more notes are sounded from the lowest C to G, the fifth above. You can therefore understand the effect when the 32 and 16 feet stops are drawn; moreover, as the lever is being depressed more stops—there are twenty-five to select from!—can be drawn by the hand. The thunder pedal is very popular when all else in the way of music fails, and has been known even to draw tears!' We may add that if this thunder stop fails to clear the air, it makes serious demands upon the wind.

W. G.—As to the date of the old song 'Here's a health unto his Majesty,' so trustworthy an authority as Mr. Frank Kidson says: 'This noble and spirited song was (so far as the melody is concerned) the production of Jeremy or Jeremiah Savile, a composer of much strength during the 17th century. It is first found in John Playford's publications, including The Musical Companion, 1667 and 1672-3, where it is arranged for three voices. The song as these printed has but one verse; but in modern copies another is added, and "confusion to his enemies" stands in place of the original "conversion to," &c. Savile was also the composer of the glee known as "The Waits," or "Fal la, la," the performance of which was always the closing number at the meetings of all old glee societies.'

'GONE ON IT.'—See the 'Complete Tutor for the Euphonium,' by J. A. Kappey, published by Messrs. Boosey & Co., who would also supply you with a euphonium. Their price-list shows that the cost of an instrument ranges from seven to eighteen guineas. Write to them for further particulars. We hope now that you are 'gone on it' (the euphonium) you will go to it and derive as much pleasure in your leisure hours from the practise of the instrument as you have experienced in listening to its strains.

C. A.—There is no 'Register of all musicians' similar to 'The Medical Register'; but the following books will give you the information you desire: 'The Musical Directory'; 'The Roll of the Union of the Graduates in Music'; 'The Year-Book and Register of the Incorporated Society of Musicians.'

W. A. M.—We regret to say that so far we have not been able to trace a musical society in London called 'The Museodum' which, according to the 'silver ticket' in your possession, existed in 1807. Will you kindly favour us with the name that is on the ticket? Perhaps some of our readers can trace the society.

HAMBURG.—(1) Miss Bettina Walker, the authoress of 'My musical experiences,' published in 1890, died at Fulham on February 4, 1893. She was born at Dublin. (2) You will probably obtain the back numbers you want by applying to the publishers. (3) Biographical sketches of the pianists you mention have not appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES.

H. G.—(1) We are unable to say if William Jackson, of Te Deum fame, was an atheist. Probably not. In 1782 he published 'Thirty letters on various subjects' (2 vols.), of which an early biographer states: 'This miscellany contains many striking reflections upon men, manners, and opinions, sometimes singular and paradoxical, but generally lively and instructive. An attempt to revive the exploded doctrine of equivocal generation, and another to retrieve the poetical reputation of Quarles, are those in which the ingenious author deviates from the common judgment.' (2) The 'sweetest of melodies' to which the hymn 'When God of old came down from heaven' was sung at the recent Royal wedding, is the tune named 'Winchester Old.'

A. A. B.—Consult 'The Choral Society,' by Mr. L. C. Venables (Curwen), and Stainer's 'Choral Society Vocalisation,' No. 50 of Novello's Primers.

GLASGOW.—You probably mean 'The Royal College of Music Patrons' (not Parson's) Fund for the encouragement of British composers and British artists.' The Registrar of the Royal College of Music, Kensington, S.W., will furnish you with full information.

E. H. R.—The music you mention would fetch very little, probably not the cost of advertising it. We should advise you either to keep it, or dispose of it by presentation.

M. G. B.—The hymn-tune to which you refer is a Plain-Song melody, which accounts for the seeming irregularity of rhythm. These melodies should not be clothed in the tight-fitting garb of bars.

H. M.—You should submit your 'Strad' to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, who, in return for a fee, will advise you as to its value.

MAC.—The Handel Festivals at the Crystal Palace are held triennially, and as the last took place in 1903 the next will fall due in 1906.

GRILLON (also E. G.).—We are sorry that we cannot give the names of teachers, or advise as to the merits (or demerits, if such exist) of various pianoforte manufacturers.

H. G. L.—Thanks. Yes, we quite hope to write an article on the School you mention; in fact arrangements for so doing are already in progress.

SOMERSET.—If you have any position as an organist in England you had better stay in the old country and not run the risk of obtaining an appointment or professional work in America.

F. A.—In regard to your 'Preston' violin, see the answer to H. M.

J. T. N.—See King Hall's 'Harmonium' book in Messrs. Novello's Primer Series.

F. S.—The plot (or 'argument') of 'Il Trovatore' is printed in Novello's edition of the opera.

A CORRESPONDENT calls the attention of 'A Constant Reader' to 'The Beethoven Pianoforte Sonatas: Letters to a Lady,' by Dr. Reinecke (Augener). In this connection mention may also be made of another book on the subject, entitled 'Beethoven's Piano Works,' translated from the German of A. B. Marx by F. L. Gwinner, and published by Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago.

"EVERYMAN," Dr. WALFORD DAVIES.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY MUSICAL SOCIETY, June 9, 1905.

"The principal task, however, fell upon Mr. W. Forington as Everyman, and his long and trying part was sung splendidly. At times he threw much feeling and dramatic intensity into his words, and at the close his voice, which is of pleasing quality, was just as fresh and clear as at the start."—Cambridge Chronicle, June 16, 1905.

Everyman, which is written for a bass voice, is the most important part. . . Mr. W. Forington . . . rendering the music with extreme artistic effect."—Cambridge Express, June 16, 1905.

RUTH

A HARVEST PASTORAL
SUITABLE FOR USE IN PLACES OF WORSHIP.

WORDS BY EDWARD OXENFORD
MUSIC BY
ALFRED R. GAUL.
SUITABLE FOR THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventful episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—STAFFORDSHIRE CORRESPONDENT, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City.' . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontyfridd Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"Taking this composition all in all, it lays claim to rank as a most practicable and melodious setting of the hymn, and we can confidently commend it to church choirs of moderate abilities. . . . The accompaniment is so conceived as to render performance on the pianoforte, or organ, or harmonium equally successful; and, on the whole, it is decidedly and happily designed in pitched intervals, and a musical combination of average executive ability."—The Border Advertiser (Galashiels), November 22, 1904.

THE ANTHEM BOOK

OF THE

UNITED FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND

ISSUED BY AUTHORITY.

THIS collection contains an adequate supply of material—167 Anthems and setting of Canticles—suited to the needs of choirs and congregations where it is desirable that the music employed should be of a somewhat simple nature; but in order to meet the requirements of choirs and congregations of higher musical attainments the selection includes compositions which present somewhat greater degrees of difficulty. In the preparation of the book great care and attention have been paid to such practical matters as the clear and distinct printing of the words in close proximity to each of the voice parts, when the latter do not move together; the printing of the organ accompaniment on a separate stave whenever that seemed desirable in the interest of clearness; and generally the avoidance of such typographical defects as have been found by experience to interfere with the usefulness of previous books of a similar nature.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER

SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS

FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY, RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS,

FINAL AMENS, VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER, APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters, and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

THE COUNCIL SCHOOL HYMN BOOK

A COLLECTION OF HYMNS, WITH PRAYERS, FOR USE IN COUNCIL SCHOOLS

COMPILED TO MEET THE PARTICULAR NEEDS OF THE NEW EDUCATION

AUTHORITIES ESTABLISHED BY THE ACT OF 1902.

In preparing the work the Editors have been guided by two main considerations :—

1. To include only such Hymns as express the central truths of religion and are suitable to the minds and capacities of children.
2. To maintain such a literary standard as will bear comparison with the best books used in the general work of the schools.

The Hymns chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

In regard to the music of The Council School Hymn Book two editions are being prepared : (i) in the ordinary hymnal form for the purposes of accompaniment, and (ii) with the melody only of the tunes, but with the staff and tonic sol-fa notation combined for the use of the children in the schools. No less care has been bestowed upon the music than upon the hymns, all the tunes having been selected for their suitability and attractiveness.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

Price (limp Cover), 6d. The Editions with Tunes—in the Press.

ADDITIONAL HYMNS WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN OR ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition (in the Press).

Hymns only, Imperial 32mo, Cloth Boards, One Shilling.

Single Specimen copies of the above editions sent post-free to the Clergy and Organists, on application to the Publishers direct, at the following prices: Hymns with Tunes, 2s. ; Hymns only, 8d.

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d. ; paper, 3d.

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 7s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

(Op. 21).

PRESS NOTICES.

"We dealt with 'King Conor' long ago, and therefore need only confirm our expressed opinion of the work, which proved to be even more dramatically effective than we anticipated. Choir, band, and conductor did all they knew for the composer, with the result that a finer performance was hardly possible, and Mr. Adams, who received an ovation at the close, had every reason for gratification. Seldom, indeed, has a local composer received the honour of a first production by this great and historic Society. Now it only remains to hope that the Cantata may be heard again. Its merit would certainly justify further hearing."—Birmingham Gazette and Express.

"The impression created was entirely favourable, and the applause was only suspended for a moment as the composer was brought on the platform, to be renewed with double vigour as he bowed again and again in acknowledgment of the compliments showered upon him from all sides."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Mr. Adams's musical setting is continuous, the composer making use of representative themes, which are skillfully handled, most pronounced being the motives standing for King Conor, Christ, and the Dance. The choral portion is never abstruse or overlaid, and is well written for the voices, whilst the orchestration shows a distinct advance in polyphony and picturesqueness from former efforts."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"A most favourable impression was created, the composer being enthusiastically applauded. There is much clever work in 'King Conor', and Mr. Adams is sincerely to be congratulated upon his achievement."—Birmingham Evening Dispatch.

Dramatic, scholarly, and effective."—Bristol Mercury.

"The work, a brief, spirited, and musicianly composition, should find considerable favour at the hands of choral organizations on the outlook for half-penny pieces."—Glasgow Evening Times.

"The composer has caught the spirit of the poem in a remarkable way."—Catholic News.

INTRODUCTION AND ALLEGRO FOR STRINGS (QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY EDWARD ELGAR.
(Op. 47.)

Full Score and Parts (in the Press).
Pianoforte Duet Arrangement (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenuity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naïve little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem than familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted what excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

"The musical value of some of the pieces is not inconsiderable."—The Times.

"Must needs prove most useful, and are not at all dry."—Daily Telegraph.

"The studies are quite as entertaining to the listener as they are serviceable to the performer."—Musical Opinion.

"Six clever and useful 'Octave Studies.' They are more than usually interesting."—Musical Standard.

"Excellent for practice."—Christian World.

"They afford a very complete course of study. The different numbers are tuneful and attractive, and the variety is great."—The Lady.

"Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells.

"These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student."—Church Family Newspaper.

"Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"Fitted for advanced students. For wrist work No. 2 is excellent, and No. 6 is good enough for a concert piece. In all there is pretty equal work for both hands."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Six excellent octave studies (legato and staccato)."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

"Can safely be recommended to players who possess the laudable ambition of keeping up their technique."—Western Daily Press.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

1A. TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position)	2s. od.	1B. STUDIES (1st Position)	2s. od.
2A. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	2B. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. 6d.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES' "EVERYMAN."

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, RICHMOND, May 3. Of this Concert—The Herald says: "Mr. Arthur Walenn's fine baritone voice was heard to much advantage in the exacting solos for Everyman."

The Surrey Comet: "Mr. Arthur Walenn gave to the character of Everyman the deepest expression and impressiveness, at the same time avoiding that exaggeration which would tempt a singer of less culture."

The Richmond Times: "Of the soloists, the place of honour must certainly be given to Mr. Arthur Walenn, who, as Everyman, had so much to do. It was always difficult, requiring great variety and expression, to ward off a suspicion of dullness that might otherwise have crept in. In Mr. Walenn's hands nothing of the kind happened; he has a bass voice of very pleasing quality, well under control, and was evidently thoroughly acquainted not only with the music itself, but with the spirit of the work."

TO VIOLINISTS.

Owing to the enormous success of PROFESSOR ŠEVČŮK'S METHOD, MR. ERNEST WINDUST, who spent FOUR YEARS studying under the Professor at PRAGUE CONSERVATORIUM, has opened a Studio to take PUPILS through the WHOLE COURSE at MODERATE PRICES. In the case of Advanced Pupils or Professionals, terms can be had per Lesson.

The System as now published requires very minute study to grasp its many complexities, but by taking a COURSE OF LESSONS Mr. Windust guarantees that ANY PUPIL can save MANY YEARS of useless toil, the cost of tuition repaying by saving the time and expense spent on OLD METHODS.

"Ernest Windust, violinist, was my pupil at the Conservatorium for four years, and I hereby state that during this time he COMPLETELY mastered my system and is capable of giving the most thorough instruction therein." (Signed) OTAKAR ŠEVČŮK.

Prague, March 28, 1901. Professor at the Prague Conservatorium. Brilliant testimonials from EUGÈNE YSAÏE, Prof. HEERMANN (Frankfurt Conservatorium), Prof. FLORIAN ZAJIC (Kammermusikanten at the Court of Baden), WALTER DAMROSCH (Conductor of the New York Philharmonic Concerts and Opera), and many other excellent recommendations.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC, LONDON.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:
THE RIGHT HON. LORD COLERIDGE, M.A., K.C.

Warden:
EDMUND H. TURPIN, Mus.D.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins on Monday, September 25.

The College provides complete and systematic instruction and training in every recognized musical subject.

Students can enter for the Course or for Special subjects, and the lessons are given during the day and on certain evenings.

The Course consists of two lessons per week in the principal subject, one lesson per week in a Secondary subject, together with instruction in the Theory of Music (in the case of students of the pianoforte, singing, &c.), and attendance at the Lectures on the Art of Teaching, Musical History, &c. The curriculum is framed with due regard to the special requirements of each Student, and the Directors of Studies are in constant attendance for the purpose of advising Students in this connection. The Fee for the course per Term is Ten Pounds.

The tuition of the College will serve as a preparative for all Public Examinations in the Theory and Practice of Music, including the Examinations for University Degrees.

The College Orchestra, the Choir, the Light Opera Class, and the various Ensemble Classes, are also open to those not attending the College for other subjects.

JUNIOR SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Pupils of either sex are admitted to this Department up to the age of fifteen, and, as in the Senior School, entry may be made for the Course or for single subjects. All Junior Pupils are under the immediate supervision of the Directors of Studies.

Classes Prospectus, including that for the Junior School, may be had from the undersigned.

By order, SHELLEY FISHER, Secretary.

BOSWORTH EDITION.

MESSRS. BOSWORTH & CO. desire to draw the attention of the Musical Teaching Profession to their issue of a splendid series of works, by two of the most eminent living editors for their respective instruments, containing:

PRACTICAL TEACHING MATERIAL

FOR PIANOFORTE (IN FOUR PARTS).

By HEINRICH GERMER.

FOR VIOLIN SOLO (IN FOUR PARTS). By EMIL KROSS.

FOR VIOLIN DUET (IN SIX PARTS). By EMIL KROSS.

This material, which is culled from the classics of each instrument, is progressively arranged with explanatory notes, careful phrasing indications, and every other possible aid to a correct and intelligent reading on the part of the student, while reducing the labour of the teacher to a minimum.

The FOUR PARTS for PIANOFORTE, by H. GERMER, are numbered in the Bosworth Edition 3 to 6. Each 2s. 3d. net.

The FOUR PARTS for VIOLIN SOLO, by E. KROSS, are numbered in the Bosworth Edition 65 to 68. Each 1s. 6d. net.

The SIX PARTS for VIOLIN DUET, by E. KROSS, are numbered in the Bosworth Edition 253 to 258. Each 2s. net.

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED CATALOGUES.

a. For Pianoforte, in six divisions of difficulty;

b. For Violin, the various positions sub-divided, and the whole so arranged as to be a real help to teachers in the selection of music of different grades of difficulty (in the Press).

St. Margaret's on certain occasions. As far back as the year 1480 we find this entry:

Item: exps. at tavern in Saynte Margaret evyn upon the Syngers of the Abbey - - - vij*l*d.

In 1641, however, the amount of these 'exps.' was considerably increased, even allowing for the changed value of money, e.g.:

Item: paid to the Singing men of the Abbie for a yearly allowance given unto them for singing anthems in the Parish Church at Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide, and is toward their feast at St. James Tyde, according to annient custome - - - j*l*i.

The Chapel Royal singers were also gastronomically entertained, as late in the 15th century there was paid the sum of 12½*d*. for 'brede, ale, and wyne for Syngers of the Kyngs Chappell': later on (in 1548) a disbursement is recorded of i*l*j. xj*d*. ('bread, ale and wyne'), for the gentlemen and children of the King's Chapel, for their panes in helping of the divine service at the blessed communion on Our Lord's day in Lent.' High jinks at former Coronations may be estimated from the following entries:

1661. Item: paid for a hoggshead of French wine which rann at the Coronation of King Charles the Second - - - vij*l*i*l*d.

March 23, 1680. Ordered that the Churchwardens doe provide a Hoggshead of Claret and other things usuall at the Coronation (William III. and Mary) and the charges thereof to be allowed in their account.

For the moment we may quit this documentary information and turn to some architectural features of the church. As the present rector, Canon Hensley Henson, observes: 'St. Margaret's church is an ancient church in a modern shell.' Again: 'Outside, as we all know, St. Margaret's has the aspect of an unpretending Georgian church of the too-familiar type, but you cross the threshold to find yourself in a mediæval church of singular beauty.' This is perfectly true. The photograph on page 514 gives a good general idea of the interior. There are features, however, which baffle the photographer's lens—e.g., the stained-glass windows. The statement that the remarkable east window was originally intended for Henry the Seventh's Chapel, Westminster, seems to be very erroneous, according to the opinion of so reliable an authority as Mr. N. H. J. Westlake.* The principal subject, which occupies the three centre lights, is the Crucifixion; in the side lights are two portraits, doubtless intended to represent Henry VIII. and Catherine of Arragon, his Queen. Mr. Westlake says: 'As a design in colour the window is extremely good, and the glass is of high quality.' He assigns the date of the window to early in the 16th century, and, 'as it is of doubtful origin, and there is no positive evidence of its being foreign' (it is said to have come from Dort, in Holland), he places it among English works. This east window, after having originally occupied the eastern lights in New Hall, Essex, was sold to the churchwardens of St. Margaret's in 1758. At that time the Dean and Chapter of Westminster looked upon the window as 'a superstitious image and picture'; in fact, so strenuous was their objection that they instituted a lawsuit for its removal, which, after having been fought for seven years, resulted in a complete victory for the churchwardens, one of whom (in 1759) was the celebrated John Wilkes. About twenty years ago Messrs. Clayton & Bell added plate-glass on either side of the window in order to preserve it from decay. Underneath is an altar-piece, in lime wood, carved by an English artist, the relievo representing the Supper of our Lord at Emmaus, after a famous painting of Titian's in the Louvre.

The modern windows are of peculiar interest as memorials to some of England's great men, Caxton, Raleigh and Milton. The printers and publishers presented the Caxton window in 1882. It is located over the south-east entrance to the church, and has the following inscription, by Tennyson, on Caxton's motto 'Fiat lux':

Thy prayer was 'Light—more Light—while Time shall last!'

Thou sawest a glory growing on the night,
But not the shadows which that light would cast,
Till shadows vanish in the Light of Light.

Caxton lived and carried on his beneficent work in the parish of St. Margaret's, and he is buried in the church. Moreover, he bequeathed a portion of his stock of printed books to the 'behave' of the parish. In the church receipts of the year 1491 are these entries:

Item, at the bureying of William. Caxton for iiij torches - - - v*l*s. vij*l*d.
Item, for the belle atte same bureying - - - v*l*d.

A similar entry (in 1498) doubtless refers to the wife of another great English printer:

Item, for the knelle of Elizabeth de Word with the greate belle - - - v*l*d.

American admirers of Sir Walter Raleigh erected the great west window (also in 1882) to his memory: its inscription, by James Russell Lowell, reads:

The New World's sons, from England's breast we drew Such milk as bids remember whence we came;
Proud of her past wherefrom our future grew,
This window we inscribe with Raleigh's fame.

Raleigh, who was beheaded close to the church, is buried within its walls, the registers of 1618 (October 29) recording his interment thus:

St. Walter Rawleigh, Knight

The Milton window—presented in 1888 by Mr. G. W. Childs, of Philadelphia, and, like the Raleigh, executed by Messrs. Clayton & Bell—bears this quatrain from the pen of John Greenleaf Whittier:

The New World honours him whose lofty plea
For England's freedom made her own more sure,
Whose song, immortal as its theme, shall be
Their common freehold while both worlds endure.

Milton, who lived at Petty France North and was rated at 16*s*. per ann., was married to his second wife, Katherine Woodcock, at St. Margaret's, in

November, 1656. He never saw his bride, and fifteen months later she and her infant were buried in the churchyard. In this connection additional pathos is imparted to his beautiful sonnet 'on his deceased wife.' Another interesting entry (of which a facsimile is here given) in these marriage registers records the nuptials of Mr. Pepys, who resided at Axe Yard, King Street, where a portion of the Foreign Office now stands. It will be observed that, according to Commonwealth custom, the marriage was a civil ceremony, not ecclesiastical. An extract from Mr. Pepys's famous diary, relating to St. Margaret's, may be quoted:

May 26, 1667. After dinner I by water alone to Westminster to the parish church, and there did entertain myself with my perspective glass up and down the church, by which I had the great pleasure of seeing and gazing at a great many very fine women, and what with that and sleeping I passed away the time till sermon was done.

The Registers of this church cover a period of nearly four hundred years. The first volume is headed:

The Registre of the Buryalls, Weddyns, and Chrystenyns in Sainte Margarette's Paryshe in Westmyenster, begynnyng the jst daye of Januarie in the year of our Lord God 1538, and the 30th year of our Sovereign Lord Kynge Henry VIII.

Dean Aldrich, the musical Dean of Christ Church, Oxford, was baptized here and so were the children of Titus Oates and Judge Jeffries. In addition to the weddings of Milton and Pepys just mentioned we find that of Jeremy Bentham, and (in 1626) is recorded the marriage of Richard Lambe to Barbara Puddinge. Among the burials—supplementary to those previously referred to—are the remains of Thomas Ford, composer of 'Since first I saw your face,' his name appearing in the register as 'Mr. Tho. ffourd'; Dr. James Nares, well known as a composer of church music; Robert Whyte; John Hilton, John Hingston, and G. F. Pinto, musicians of repute; the respective mothers of Oliver Cromwell and Henry Purcell (the great composer lived in Bowling Alley East, near the church); Father Smith, the eminent organ-builder; the famous engraver, Wenceslaus Hollar, and others. Anthony à Wood records that, at the funeral of Hingston in 1657, when ecclesiastical music was forbidden, 'the Fraternity of Musicians sang in the house over the corpse before it went to the grave and kept time on the coffin.'

Some extracts from the churchwardens' accounts may now be given. The title-pages of these early books—measuring about 26 in. by 15 in.—are most beautifully and elaborately illuminated; a facsimile of one of these title-pages will be found on the opposite page.

In perusing these records of ways and means, one cannot help being struck and even amused at some of the payments and receipts. For instance, in 1611 the sum of 6*d.* was paid to 'Goodwife Wells for salt to destroy the fleas in the Churchwardens' pew,' thus seeming to imply that that particular pew was less sectarian than insectarian. In 1510 the receipts included:

'Atte bureying of the costerdmonger for iv. tapers - iv*d.*

This is a very early instance of the word costermonger—four years earlier, in fact, than that given in the Oxford English Dictionary*.

That the churchwardens patronised the costermongers is proved by an entry in the accounts in 1519:

To the costerdmonger for Pears - xij*d.*

The terrible ravages of the Plague are all too evident in studying the history of old London churches: such payments as 6*d.* 'for oakre (ochre) for crosseing the doores,' 6*d.* 'for frankincense and pitch to ayre the sheds,' and 10*s.* 'att severall tymes for printed Bills of Lord have mercy upon us to sett upon the visited houses,' serve to intensify the ghastliness of the burial records during those awful visitations. It is supposed that dogs and cats greatly helped to spread the infection; hence special precautions were taken to ensure the destruction of those canine and feline propagators of disease. That Mr. Robert Wells, the official dog-killer, was a busy man is shown by a payment to him (in 1603) of vjs. viij*d*. for 'killing of four-score dogges'; furthermore, chymeney sweeper,' was paid the sum of iiij*d*. Another entry bears testimony to the liberality of the churchwardens in helping a struggling young scholar:

* Costermonger is derived from costardmonger, a seller of costard apples.

1628 Item, to Richard Busby, by consent of the Vestry towards enabling him to proceed bachelor of arts - - - - - v*l*.

This young gentleman became the celebrated Dr. Busby, headmaster of Westminster School, 'who bred up the greatest number of learned during the dog days of the same year he dispatched '422 more dogges at the price of one penny per dogge.' In 1666 a payment reads:

To the dog killer for cxi dogges and cattis at 1*d*. and ½*d*. per dogg or catt - - - xiijs. x*d*.

It is curious to find that in 1638 Richard Graygoose succeeded John Fox as dog-killer. The accounts contain an early reference to the occupation of a chimney-sweeper when, in 1561, 'Watson, ye scholars that ever adorned any age or nation.' In 1637 we find a payment

To Mrs. Stone, the wife of John Stone for bad farthings which her husband had received when he was overseer of the poor, as part of the stock brought in by his predecessor - - - 1*l*. viis.

An interesting wedding custom is referred to in a disbursement of the year 1540:

To Alice Lewis, a goldsmith's wife of London, for a serclett to marry maydens in - - - iiij*l*.

This serclett, or serklett (circlet) was evidently a sort of coronet kept for the use of brides. Chaucer mentions it in this line:

A coroune on hire hed they han ydressed.

in 1587 the churchwardens received the sum of £1 at the funeral of Sir Henry Gates 'for the blacks about the church.' About 1748 extra fees were charged for interments after 10 p.m.,

ST. MARGARET'S CHURCH, WESTMINSTER.

(Photographed specially for this article by Mr. Frank Henry.)

In Norway and Denmark a set of ornaments was kept in every parish for the temporary use of brides. These ornaments included a coronal and girle; thus the poorest woman in the land had the gratification of appearing for one day in her life in a guise she probably thought equal to a queen.

Funerals must have been a profitable source of ecclesiastical revenue, and it would almost seem as if the churchwardens did their own 'undertaking,' as the Inventory of goods belonging to the church in 1615 contains: 'Item, fower Coffines great and small and one ould wheelebarrowe.' In 1498 no fee appears to have been charged for 'the bureying of Mr. John, the Queen's foole,' the amount in the account book being left blank; but torchlight funerals being then fashionable among well-to-do folk. Searchers were formerly employed by the Vestry, in order to ascertain that the body bore no marks of foul play, and plumpers were called in by relatives 'to bedizen the body' and to make what the ladies of the day called 'a charming corpse'!

The tower of St. Margaret's contains ten bells. The largest, formerly known as 'Great Tom of Westminster,' was, in 1698, called 'Edward of Westminster.' The accounts contain some curious references to bell-ringing occasions—e.g., 'for ringing for the most prosperous reign of our most gracious Sovereign Lady Queen Elizabeth,' 2s. 6d., while 1s. was 'paid for ringing at the beheading of the Queen of Scots.' The evil designs of Guy Fawkes are thus recorded in the accounts of 1605:

Item, paid the ringers for ringing at the time when the parliament-house should have been blown up xs.

A reference to our National Anthem, then a novel strain, reads thus:

1748. 15 Oct. The churchwardens are authorised to cause the repair of the chimes they to be set to the Tune of that Loyal Song called 'God save the King.'

Among other items of interest in these old records is the mention (in 1480) of pew rents, 'from 12*d.* to 3*s.* 4*d.* per ann.'; of the 'Town Waits,' a body of musicians created by statute in 1585, who wore the Arms of Westminster and whose office existed

In regard to matters strictly musical at St. Margaret's, reference may first be made to the old Inventories of the church, e.g.:

1511 First iij grete antiphones new garnyshe with boleys (knobs.)

Item j Grate Booke in pchment priksonge (written music.)

1572 iij newe Psalme bookes of Geneuova.

In 1554 'a manuell, an ymnall, and a precessionall' cost viijs. A curious light is shed upon the musical rendering of the service in the Vestry Minutes of July 5, 1676:

That the Churchwardens do acquaint the Doctor that the Vestry are desirous that the Clerke may reade every verse of the Singing Psalme as formerly was used before the organ was set up.

until the last century; and the famous 'Westminster Tobacco Box,' dating from 1713, concerning which an illustrated and exhaustive history was published in 1887: considerations of space prevent us from enlarging upon these various points.

Again, one month later:

The Doctor being very well satisfied with the reading of the Singing Psalmes It is ordered that the Clerke do reade the Singing Psalmes as formerly they were used to be read before the organ was erected.

In 1682 a further change appears to have been made, as recorded in the following vague Minute:

Resolved that the organ be made to play before.

The 'Doctor' referred to in the above extracts was the then rector, the Rev. Dr. William Outram; and here mention may be made of three distinguished Deans who were formerly rectors of St. Margaret's, the living being held in conjunction with a Canonry in Westminster Abbey—Dean Milman (of St. Paul's), Dean Farrar (of Canterbury), and Dean Robinson (of Westminster.)

At the re-opening of the church, after restoration, in 1758-9, Walcott says that 'a fine anthem was performed composed expressly for the occasion by Dr. Boyce.' It would be interesting to discover the actual Boyce anthem then sung. In 1792, 1793, and 1794, special musical performances, with full band and chorus, were held in aid of the Royal Society of Musicians. On the first of these occasions—'By command and under the patronage of Their Majesties'—the 'Messiah' was given in the presence of the King and Queen and six of their Princess daughters and an audience of 1,200 people. The King presented £100 to the Society, and 'by Royal desire' three choruses were 'encored'—'For unto us,' 'Hallelujah,' and 'Worthy is the Lamb.'

Organs in St. Margaret's Church are mentioned as early as the year 1478, when 'For a dore at y^e rode lofte to save and keepe the people fro y^e orgaynes' the sum of xij*d*. was paid. The following chronological summary concerning the organs may not be without interest:

1478-80. For mendyng and makyn clene of y ^e small orgaynes - - -	xij d .
1484-6. For mendyng of y ^e bellowse of y ^e orgaynes in y ^e rode lofte - -	vi d .

1644. Item, of Arthur Condall, in part of v l . for the screene and organ-loft - - -	is.
1645. Received of Captain White for the organ-pipes - - -	iv d .

From the above entries we get additional information concerning the practice of one church lending an organ to a neighbouring church (see above in the year 1508); and we also find the names of Thomas Smyth (not to be confused with Father Smith) and Chapington as early English organ-builders.

In 1674 the Vestry decided to erect a new organ at a cost of £200, the work being entrusted to

Father Smith. This instrument appears to have been located in a side gallery, as in 1683 the Vestry voted £10 to Father Smith 'over and above his contract price made with him for his trouble in removing the organ.' The said removal was probably made to the west gallery, as Hatton, in his 'New View of London' (1708), refers to the 'neat organ gallery at the west end, elevated on four columns of the Corinthian order and supported by Pilasters, having also enrichments of Fames, Cupids, Cartouches, &c.' He adds: 'Prayers at 10 in the morning and 6 p.m.: and here is a handsome organ,' the reference being, of course, to Father Smith's instrument. In 1803-4, Avery built a new instrument, as shown in the illustration on page 511, but it is not known whether Smith's case was then retained or dispensed with. 'Mr. Avery had 800 guineas and the old organ, which he valued at £200,' so an old record states. The organ was rebuilt by Holditch in 1859 and again by Hill in 1868.

The present organ—a remarkably fine specimen of the art-work of Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons—was built in 1897 from the specification of the then organist, Mr. Edwin H. Lemare. In designing the instrument Mr. Lemare set himself to prove that 'a large three-manual organ could possess all the advantages of a four-manual instrument without the extra expense which the additional keyboard involves.' In this he has admirably succeeded, and his arrangement of stops, pedal-board, pistons, &c., has been largely adopted both here and in America. The organ stands in the north aisle, occupying the two easternmost arches, and has a 16-feet frontage facing west. The electric blowing machinery and feeders are placed in the tower of the church, and the wind is conveyed along the side-aisle roof to the instrument. In addition to the two controlling wind reservoirs in the tower, there are eight large reservoirs in the organ itself. The following is the specification of this most effective instrument:

The roll of St. Margaret's organists, which contains more than one distinguished name, may be said to begin with Mr. Mathew Metynghm who, in 1478, was paid the sum of viii*jd.* 'for playing at the organs when we had butt one clerke.' In 1616 the office was held by John Parsons, subsequently organist and master of the choristers of Westminster Abbey. Parsons, who was buried in the cloisters of Westminster Abbey, must have been a fine performer on the organ, judging from his epitaph:

Death passing by and hearing Parsons play,
 Stood much amazed at his depth of skill,
 And said 'This artist must with me away,'
 For death bereaves us of the better still;
 But let the quire, while he keeps time, sing on,
 For Parsons rests, his service being done.

To Parsons succeeded John Hilton, to whom the anthem 'Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake' is attributed. Bernard Smith (Father Smith) was next appointed; but as special reference to him is made on page 518, we may pass on to John Isham, the deputy of and successor to Dr. Croft, at St. Anne's, Soho, and then to Edward Purcell, the only surviving son of the great Henry Purcell.

Edward Purcell held the post from 1726 until his death. It seems strange that all previous writers on Henry Purcell and his family have hitherto failed to discover the date of Edward Purcell's death. Here it is, as recorded in two London newspapers, The Daily Gazetteer and The Daily Post of July 2, 1740:

Yesterday dy'd suddenly, Mr. Pursell (sic), Organist of St. Margaret's, Westminster, a Place of 50*l.* per ann.

It would seem as if his wife did not long survive the shock of her husband's sudden death, as the burial registers of August 19, 1740, record the interment of 'Ann Purcell.' Their son, Edward Henry Purcell, was probably a minor at the time of his parents' death, as six years later the Vestry minutes contain the following entry:

1746. October 30. Mr. Edward Henry Purcell, son and administrator of Mr. Edward Purcell, late organist of the parish church applied to the Vestry and requested payment of the salary of his said late father as organist at the time of his death. The money was ordered to be paid.

These particulars relating to the family of the great master of English music are here made public for the first time.

In 1809 John Barnard Sale became organist, and from 1857 to 1896 the late Mr. T. G. Baines officiated in that capacity. Mr. Edwin H. Lemare held the office from 1896 to 1902, when he was succeeded by Mr. Reginald Goss Custard, a grand-nephew of the late Sir John Goss. Born in 1877, Mr. Custard obtained his first organ appointment at the age of sixteen (St. Mary's Church, Battle). At the age of twenty-three he came to London as assistant to Mr. Lemare. After holding the organistship of St. John's, Lewisham High Road, for a year, he was appointed to St. Margaret's in 1902, on the resignation of Mr. Lemare. His organ recitals, which now number sixty-three, have become very popular, and he has a repertoire of nearly 400 pieces. He is to be congratulated upon being the 'chief musician' of such an interesting church as St. Margaret's, and in having so splendid an instrument at his disposal.

The thanks of the writer are tendered to the Rev. Canon Hensley Henson, B.D., Rector of St. Margaret's and Canon of Westminster, for kindly permitting free access to the church registers and for help in other ways; special acknowledgment is also due of the very valuable information contained in 'A Catalogue of Westminster Records' by Mr. John Edward Smith, F.S.A., formerly Vestry Clerk.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

A MASTER ORGAN-BUILDER.

FATHER SMITH.

Considering the fame of Father Smith as one of the greatest masters of the art of organ-building, it is strange that so little is known of him biographically. One is tempted to ask the question: What were Burney and Hawkins about in not having sought particulars of Smith's early life and antecedents from his contemporaries and descendants, who could so easily have supplied the information? In this, and in similar cases, these historians are found 'wanting.'

Father Smith—or Bernard Schmidt, to give his real name—was born in Germany, according to Burney, while others refer to him as a Dutchman. Of the date and place of his birth nothing is known. He is supposed to have arrived in England about the year 1660, bringing with him his two nephews and assistants, Gerard and Christian Schmidt: to distinguish him from these young men, he was called 'Father' Smith. He may have had a brother in the same line of business, as fifty years ago a Mr. Richard Bray, living at or near Norwich, possessed a chamber organ consisting entirely of wooden pipes, built in the year 1643—the date being inscribed on three different portions of the instrument—by Christianus Schmidt, said to be the father of the aforesaid nephews.

Rimbault hazards the opinion that Bernard Smith learnt his art from Christian Former, of Wetzlar, near Halle; but Rimbault's accuracy in such matters is in inverse ratio to his industry. Smith seems to have been in London at the Restoration. It has been stated—though neither Burney nor Hawkins records the fact, if fact it be—that Smith was appointed 'Organ-maker in ordinary' to King Charles II. Mackenzie Walcott (in his 'Westminster,' 1849) says that Smith 'was indulged with an apartment at Whitehall, called in consequence "The Organ-builder's Workhouse," and another account says that it was so marked upon an old plan of the Palace of Whitehall; but that 'Workhouse' does not appear on a plan dated 1680 and made some years earlier, though there is a room called 'The King's Musick House.'

The earliest record of Smith's work is the organ he erected in the Banqueting Room, Whitehall, not the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, as has so often been stated coupled with the quotation from Pepys's Diary of July 8, 1660, in connection therewith. This instrument, the first built by Smith in this country, is thus referred to by the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, on the authority of Burney: 'From the haste with which Smith's first English organ was put together, it did not in some respects quite come up to all expectations; but it nevertheless contained a sufficient number of novelties beyond the contents of the old English specifications, in the shape of compound, flute, and reed stops, and the echo, to cause it to create a most favourable impression on its hearers.' He adopted the manual compass downwards to GG, with 'long octaves,' without the GG sharp, and his Echo organ down to fiddle G. The specification of this initial specimen of Smith's handiwork in England is as follows:

GREAT ORGAN (10 stops).
	Pipes.		Pipes.
Open Diapason	53	Block Flute, metal, to middle
Hol-flute	53	C sharp	24
Principal	53	Sesquialtera	159

The statement made by Rimbault and copied by several biographers, that Father Smith erected an organ in Westminster Abbey in the year 1660, lacks confirmation, as we shall presently see. So deep-rooted has this statement become that the 'Dictionary of National Biography' says:

The opening of Smith's new organ for Westminster Abbey in 1660 was recorded by Pepys—'30 December (Lord's Day)' &c.

Now, what are the facts? Rimbault says, in his 'History of the Organ' (p. 113, 1870 edn.) under the heading 'Father Smith's organs':

2. Westminster Abbey. 1660.

This was the organ on which Blow, Purcell, and Croft played. It appears, by the treasurers' books of the Abbey, to have cost £120.

Through the kindness of the Dean of Westminster, the present writer has been privileged, for the purposes of this article, to examine the treasurer's book of Westminster Abbey covering the years 1660-61 and other documents relating to former organs in the Abbey. There is no mention whatever of an organ having then been built by Smith; on the contrary, one of the payments is to George Dalham (see below) for tuning the organ, therefore is it at all likely that if Smith had built the organ, Dalham would have tuned it?

Before proceeding further we may give a few entries from the Abbey treasurer's book of 1660-1:

To Christopher Gibbon (sic) in discharge of his Bill for Tuning the Organs xxx.	and to George Dalham for the same service 5s.	in all this year	- - - - -	i/i. vs.
To James fuller Blower of the Organs			- - - - -	ii/i.
To John Hill for playing on the cornet in the Church			- - - - -	ii/i. vs.
To Henry Purcell for Bookes of services for the choristers			- - - - -	iii.

To return to Father Smith. It is true that there are payments to him for tuning the Abbey organ in the year 1693, long after he is said to have built the organ. But the chief point of interest connected with Father Smith and Westminster Abbey is an Agreement between him and the Dean and Chapter in regard to additions to the organ—probably a Dalham instrument—in the year 1694. This Agreement we give literatim et verbatim :

An Agreement made between the Deane & Chapter of Westm^r & Bernard Smyth organist the 20th of July 1694

That in consideration of the sune of 200*l* to be paid by the said Deane & Chapter to the said Bernard Smyth in mannere followinge vizt. 50*l* in hand 50*l* more upon the 28th day of November next 50*l* more upon the 28th day of May then next ensuinge & 50*l* more residue thereof upon the 21th of Nov. 1695

The said Bernard Smyth hath undertaken & doth hereby undertake, That by or before the 11th day of November next ensuinge the date hereof he the said Bernard Smyth shall & will now make the present Organ belonging to the Deane and Chapter of Westm^r exceptinge the pipes & case & add thereto a double sett of keys & 4 new stops, vizt. one principall of mettle, one stop diapason of wood, one nason of wood & one fifteenth of mettle wch are to be added to the present organ by enlarginge the case backwards And that such pipes as are defective in the present organ shall be made good by the said Bernard Smyth & he is to compleate & finish the same by or before the 11th day of November next.

And that when the said Organ is compleated & finished by the said Bernard Smyth; It is hereby agreed by & betweene the parties abovesaid That the same shalbe viewed & approved of by Stephen Crespion Clerk Chauntor of the Collegiate [Church] of St. Peter in Westm^r and Henry Purcell gentl. organist of the said Church. And what defaults shalbe found by them or either of them in the composinge & makinge of the said organ shall be altered amended & made good by the said Bernard Smyth.

FACSIMILE OF THE LAST CLAUSE OF THE ABOVE AGREEMENT.

(Reproduced by kind permission of the Dean of Westminster.)

It is more than probable that this enlargement of the organ by Father Smith in 1694 may have given rise to the fable that he built one for the Abbey in 1660.

A slight deviation from chronological order may be permitted in order to refer to the organ built by Smith for the Sheldonian Theatre, Oxford. Anthony à Wood, writing on May 18, 1671, says :

We had vocall and instrumentall musick in our Theater to the new organ set up there: cost 120 li, made by . . . Smith, a Dutchman.

The next important event in the life of Father Smith is in connection with St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, of which an account is given on page 516 of the present issue. As there stated, he built a new organ, at a cost of £200, for the church in the year 1675. When the question of appointing an organist came before the Vestry, they resolved on September 17, 1675 :

That noe Organist be nominated until such tyme as the organ be erected, and then Mr. Bernard Smyth be the person first to be had in consideration for the sayd employment.

The Vestry Minutes of April 5, 1676, record the appointment in these terms :

It is ordered that Mr. Bernard Smyth be organist for one yeare to come from Ladie-day last, and the Vestry will take care to settle a salary for him.

Judging from the following Minute (of the same date) the amount of the organist's salary seems to have been mixed up with the 'fees for Buryalls' and doles to 'the poore of the parish'. Here is the Minute :

The Vestry doe order and appoynt That the Sexton for the time being doe every moneth (allowing twelve moneths to the year) make stopp of 3*l*. of the moneys arising by clerkes fees for Buryalls in this parish and pay the same over to the hands of the churchwardens for the time being, to be disposed of by the Vestry to the Organist and the poore of the parish as to them shall seeme good for the terme of one year from Ladie-day last.

The indefiniteness of the organist's salary was removed in August, 1676, when it was fixed at £20 per annum. It is not often that an organ-builder holds an organist appointment, but in this respect Father Willis followed the example of his great predecessor, Father Smith.

Renatus Harris proved a very formidable rival to Father Smith in tendering for and sometimes obtaining the best work. The memorable 'battle of the organs' at the Temple Church is well known. The Benchers allowed Smith and Harris each to erect an instrument in their sanctuary. Smith employed Dr. Blow and Henry Purcell to display the beauties of his handiwork, and Harris engaged Draghi 'to touch his organ.' Rivalry reigned supreme in the case—the organ case—of Smith v. Harris. At length the latter challenged the former to make reed-stops within a given time. These were the vox humana, cremona, double bassoon, and others, which, being new to English ears, charmed those who attended the trials. A bad feeling seems to have entered into the contest, as in the night preceding the last trial of the new reed-stops, the friends of Harris cut the bellows of Smith's organ in such a manner as to render the rival instrument windless and useless. No wonder that Roger North said the contest was carried on 'with such violence by the friends of both sides, that they were just not ruined.' Five years the trial lasted, with the result that Smith became the conqueror. The Treasurers of the Middle Temple and the Inner Temple in equal shares paid 'Bernard Smyth, of London, Gent.,' the sum of £1,000 for the said organ, 'and all stops and pipes and other partes and appurtenances of the said organ, and particularly the stops and pipes in the Schedule hereunder written mencioned, and alsoe the curtaine rods and curtaines—and all other goods and chattles belonging to the said organ and organ-loft.' Here is the said Schedule, or specification of that remarkable and historical instrument:

401 pipes.

With 3 full setts of keyes and quarter notes.

The compass of Smith's organ at the Temple extended to FFF in the bass. From FF upwards the instrument was provided with two additional keys, or 'quarter notes,' in each octave, 'which rarities,' according to an old book preserved in the library of the Inner Temple, 'no other organ in England hath; and can play any tune, as for instance ye tune of ye 119th Psalm (in E minor) and severall other services set by excellent musicians, which no other organ will do.' The subjoined illustration shows that the keys for the two extra notes (A flat and D sharp) were provided by those for G sharp and E flat being cut across midway, the back halves, which acted on additional pipes, rising as much above the front halves as the latter did above the long keys.

A SECTION OF THE ORGAN KEYBOARDS FORMERLY AT THE TEMPLE CHURCH, SHOWING THE QUARTER-TONES (DIVIDED BLACK KEYS).

Among other reasons which led to the choice by the Benchers of Father Smith's organ were its greater 'sweetnes and fulnes of Sound, besides y^e extraordinary Stopps, quarter-notes, and other Rarities therein'; also its greater 'Depthe and Strengthe of Sound' arising from the presence of all the diatonic notes from CC down to FFF, and the chromatic note BB flat.

Smith's next most important work was the organ he built for Durham Cathedral, full particulars of which, with some quaint letters from the famous organ-builder, were given in the illustrated article on Durham in the May issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. His position as the leading organ-builder—or 'Organ-maker,' as he was called—of the day secured for him the building of the former organ in St. Paul's Cathedral. Dr. W. H. Cummings possesses the original document relating to the erection of that magnificent CCC instrument which stood upon the choir screen and was opened on December 2, 1697, when Jeremiah Clark officiated at the keyboards—pedals there were none. The document above referred to is as follows :

St. Pauls Church, Lond :—At a Comittee, Fryday, Octob. 19th, 1694.

Present.

Lord Major of London.	Dr. Oxenden.
Ld. Arch Bp. of Canty.	Sr. Thomas St. George.

JOHN WIDDOWS.

A broadside in the British Museum entitled 'Queries about St. Paul's organ' (too long to reprint here) doubtless emanated from Renatus Harris, who subsequently made an important proposal to erect an organ at the west end of the Cathedral. (See page 533 of the present issue.)*

It is impossible to give a complete and authentic list of the organs—said to number fifty—built by Father Smith. Recent investigation has shown that some of the instruments assigned to him by Rimbault were not of his manufacture ; but there can be no question that his artistic and conscientious work was in great demand and that he was held in the highest repute as a master of his art. Burney, writing in 1789, says that he was 'assured by Snetzler, and the immediate descendants of those who have conversed with Father Smith and seen him work, that he was so particularly careful in the choice of his wood as never to use any that had the least knot or flaw in it ; and so tender of his reputation as never to waste his time in trying to mend a bad pipe, either of wood or metal ; so that when he came to voice a pipe, if it had any radical defect, he instantly threw it away and made another. This, in a great measure, accounts for the equality and sweetness of his stops as well as the soundness of his pipes, to this day.' Another account states that his wooden pipes were 'all of clean yellow deal.'

In his interesting brochure 'A few notes on the Temple organ,' the late Mr. Edmund Macrory, K.C., says that on one occasion when a friend of Smith's spoke to the famous organ-maker of the rough and unfinished appearance of his metal pipes, and urged him to bestow a little more time and care to make them look neater and better finished, Smith replied: 'I do not care if ze pipe looks like von teufel, I will make it schpeak like von angel.'

Father Smith held the organistship of St. Margaret's, Westminster, for the long period of thirty-three years, till his death. The date of his decease had not till now been discovered, nor the place of his burial. Search made in the burial registers of St. Margaret's specially for this article has resulted in the discovery of the following entry, under date February 20, 1704 :

Bernard Smith Esqr. Organ-maker in Ordinary. S.S.C.

The description following his name refers to his official Court appointment as Organ-maker to Queen Anne, while the letters 'S.S.C.' give the location of his grave, at the south side of the church. As no stone marks the spot or any other memorial exists, it may be suggested that steps should be taken to place a brass in the church to commemorate so great an artist, one who also for so many years held the organistship of the House of Commons church.

Father Smith married a Miss Elizabeth Houghton, daughter of Humphry Houghton. The date of his union with that lady is unknown, but it was before November 12, 1686, as on that day he concluded a letter written to the Registrar of the Dean and Chapter of Durham in these amorous terms: 'My and my wife's hartely love and humble servis to you and yours, from your humble servand to commande, Ber. Smith.' In December, 1687, he was living at a house 'over again the Cock, in Suffolk Street, near Chering Crose.' In his will, dated November 4, 1699, he is described as 'Bernard Smith of the parish of St. Martin in the fields in the county of Middlesex his Majesties Organmaker.' His testamentary depositions contain this bequest: 'Imprimus I give and bequeath unto all my Brothers and Sisters and unto all and every of their children the sume of one shilling a piece in full of all their Rights and pretentions to my Estate'. The rest of his property he bequeathed to his wife, whom he appointed sole executrix. No mention is made in the will of any child, or children, nor of his business; the latter is said to have been carried on by his son-in-law, Christopher Schrider.

In concluding these biographical notes on the great organ artificer of the 17th century, these words of Burney may be quoted: 'The number of organs built and enriched with new stops by Father Smith is prodigious, and their fame equal to that of the pictures or single figures of Raphael.' Could higher praise be given?

The portrait of Father Smith which forms one of our special supplements is photographed from the original oil-painting in the Music School Collection, Oxford, and is reproduced by the kind and special permission of Mr. Arthur Hassall, M.A., Secretary to the Curators of the Schools.

F. G. E.

THE FATHERS OF GREAT MUSICIANS.

J. S. BACH.

Johann Ambrosius Bach, the father of John Sebastian Bach, was one of twin brothers who entered the world at Erfurt on February 22, 1645. Spitta says that the resemblance of the twins to each other, physically and mentally, was so striking that every one who knew them was astonished, and they became the object of much curiosity and interest. They both played the violin, and had the same way of interpreting music. So similar were they in appearance that when they were apart even their own wives, it is said, could not distinguish between them. After their father's death, and at the end of their apprenticeship, the two brothers travelled as town-musicians' assistants; but then their pathways in life became separated, and Ambrosius settled down in Erfurt when he was twenty-two years old. He then entered the Association of the Erfurt Raths-Musikanten as a viola-player, and Spitta points out, as bearing upon Sebastian's development, that the music he heard in his father's house must have been almost entirely violin-playing.

A year after his appointment, on April 8, 1668, Ambrosius, aged twenty-three, married Elisabeth Lämmerhirt; the issue of this marriage was six sons and two daughters. Soon after his marriage Ambrosius moved to Eisenach, where, in addition to the support of his own family, he undertook to provide for his helpless, idiot sister. The preacher of the funeral sermon on the death of this sister throws a pleasant light on the esteem in which her brothers were held, by saying that they were 'gifted with a good understanding, with art and skill which made them respected and listened to in the churches, schools, and in all the township, so that through them the Master's work is praised.'

The youngest son of Ambrosius was the great John Sebastian, who was born (at Eisenach) in all probability on March 21, 1685. Nine years later the wife of Ambrosius died, and seven months afterwards he married again, only, however, to enjoy this fresh period of domestic felicity for two months. As he died when his illustrious son was only ten years of age, he cannot have had much influence on the training of the greatest of all the Bachs. So far as is known he seems to have been a quiet, kindhearted man who had a more or less uneventful career.

HANDEL.

Bach's father was a musician; Handel's paternal relative was a doctor. Born at Halle, in September, 1622, Georg Handel (or Händel) began life by studying the rude surgery of the period under the tuition of Christoph Oettinger, the town barber. The latter died, and Georg Handel married the widow; he was under twenty-one, she twelve years his senior. By this stroke of matrimonial fortune the youthful bridegroom became entitled both to the freedom of the town and the distinction of being called 'Meister Gorge.' Six children were born to them, and so diligently did Meister Gorge work at his profession that, in 1652, he was appointed town surgeon of Giebichenstein, a suburb of Halle of some importance. Surgeon-in-ordinary, and valet-de-chambre to Prince Augustus of Saxony were additional appointments that came unto him, and therefore he may be regarded as having been a man of mark. His wife died in October, 1682, and six months afterwards he entered into the holy state of matrimony a second time when he, aged sixty, offered his hand to a lady thirty-two years of age, Dorothea, daughter of Pastor Taust of Giebichenstein. The first child of this marriage died in infancy: the second—born February 23, 1685—when his father had reached the age of sixty-two, is known to the world as George Frederick Handel.

The old surgeon smiled at the musical propensities of his little son, but as the music-making had become a passion, and he had decided upon educating the boy for the law, he determined that he 'would have no more of such jingling' and he gave orders accordingly. The effect of such prohibitions resulted in Master George's smuggling an old clavichord into an unoccupied garret of the house, and his practising upon this instrument while the rest of the household slumbered and slept. How the father repented of his opposition to the boy's desires to follow the art of music is well known from the various biographies of Handel. Moreover, the old gentleman wisely fostered his son's ambition and guided his steps accordingly. Bach was ten and Handel twelve years old when they lost their respective fathers. Respected by all who knew him, George Handel, the surgeon, died in February, 1697, aged seventy-five, leaving behind him three children, twenty-eight grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

HAYDN.

From the professions of music and surgery to the trade of a wheelwright is a wide step in the social scale. The Haydns may be said to have been out-and-out wheelwrights, as no fewer than seven of one family followed that calling. Mathias Haydn, the father of the composer, is described as 'a German peasant of the best type, an honest, God-fearing, hardworking man, content with his own lot in life. He had learned to play the harp by ear, and enjoyed singing to its accompaniment, sometimes alone, at other times in duets with his wife.' In 1728 he married Maria Koller, cook to Count Harrach, lord of the castle of Rohrau in Austria, the village in which Mathias Haydn plied his trade. Their family consisted of twelve children, of whom Franz Joseph, the composer of 'The Creation,' was the second—born March 31, 1732. A brother, named Michael, was also musical, and Haydn Senior took great pride in teaching his sons to sing correctly in the part they took in the family concert. The wheelwright rather prided himself upon his knowledge of music, and when his sons questioned his rendering of a voice-part or accompaniment, the paternal rebuke would come in the remark: 'You are a set of donkeys,' an asinine aspersion that brooked no contradiction. As Joseph left home when he was only six years of age the influence of his father on his development was very slight, but the old man lived to see his son well on the road to fame. Pohl refers to Haydn's parents as 'honest, industrious people, who instilled into their children a love for work, method, cleanliness, and above all, religion. In his old age Haydn gratefully acknowledged his obligations to their care.'

MOZART.

Mozart and Bach had this in common in their birth, they were the children of violinists and professional musicians. Johann Georg Leopold Mozart (1719-1787), known as Leopold Mozart, the father of the composer, began his musical career as a chorister. He subsequently played the organ remarkably well, and one who knew him records: 'It was wonderful, to see his hands and feet going together, but exceedingly fine—yes, he was an extraordinary man. . . . How he used to jeer at the priests when they wanted him to turn monk!' He seems to have had a somewhat pessimistical turn of mind and a touch of sarcasm in his nature. 'Take it as an universal truth,' he writes, 'all men tell lies and add to the truth or take away from it, just as it suits their purpose. Especially must we believe nothing which, if known, would add to the reputation of the speaker or flatter his interlocutor, for that is sure to be false.' It is satisfactory to know that this distrust of mankind he failed to implant in the bosom of his genius son, and, as so often happens, his cynicism and pessimism were more on the surface than deep-rooted in his nature. Born and educated at Augsburg, he studied jurisprudence at Salzburg. He then entered the service of Count Thurn, Canon of Salzburg, and assiduously studied music. He became so proficient in playing upon the violin that the Archbishop Leopold took him into his service; he was afterwards appointed Court composer and leader of the orchestra, and subsequently Vice-Kapellmeister.

Leopold Mozart was a prolific composer, especially of church music, including twelve Lenten oratorios. His creative industry resulted in the output of 'a host of theatrical pieces, as well as pantomimes,' in addition to 'a long list of symphonies,' upwards of thirty serenades, much chamber music, &c. Six of his violin sonatas he engraved with his own hand. Curious indeed were the 'Occasional pieces' that came from his pen, in their quaint instrumental effects and somewhat ponderous humour. These jeux d'esprit include a pastoral symphony in which shepherds' horns and two flutes obbligato are employed; a military piece (trumpets, drums and kettle-drums); a Turkish and a Chinese piece. In a pastoral, representing a country wedding, during the march and after each huzza there was a pistol shot, according to the custom at rural marriages, and Leopold Mozart directed that any one who could whistle well with his fingers was to whistle during the huzzas. These creations, however, were feeble as programme-music compared with his 'Sledge drive,' of which a pianoforte duet arrangement was printed. The following programme was printed by the composer for a performance in Augsburg, December 29, 1755:

MUSICAL SLEDGE DRIVE.

Introduced by a prelude, consisting of a pleasing Andante and a splendid Allegro.

Then follows:

A prelude, with trumpets and drums.

After this:

The Sledge Drive, with the sledge-bells and all the other instruments.

After the Sledge Drive:

The horses are heard rattling their harness.

And then:

The trumpets and drums alternate agreeably with the oboes, French horns and bassoons, the first representing the cavalcade, the second the march.

After this:

The trumpets and drums have another prelude, and

The Sledge Drive begins again, but stops suddenly, for all the party dismount, and enter the ball-room.

Then comes an Adagio, representing the ladies trembling with cold.

The ball is opened with a minuet and trio.

The company endeavour to warm themselves by country-dances.

Then follows the departure, and, finally:

During a flourish of trumpets and drums, the whole party mount their sledges and drive homewards.

In consequence of the performance of these occasional pieces in Augsburg, the composer received the following anonymous letter:

'Monsieur et très cher ami!

'May it please you to compose no more absurdities, such as Chinese and Turkish music, sledge drives, and peasant weddings, for they reflect more shame and contempt on you than honour, which is regretted by the individual who herewith warns you and remains,

'Your sincere Friend.

'Datum in domo vere amicitie.'

All Leopold Mozart's compositions are forgotten save one—his 'Violin School,' published in 1756, a carefully and admirably written treatise, eminently practical and intelligent. It is no wonder that the book 'passed through many editions in various languages,' and that for a long period it was the only Method for the violin.

Leopold Mozart married (November 21, 1747) Anna Maria Pertlin. They were considered the handsomest couple in Salzburg. Of their seven children only two survived—Maria Anna (Nannerl) and the immortal Wolfgang. Both were wonderfully gifted children, and the father devoted his entire energies to their musical education. Early in the year 1762 he started on the first of those journeys undertaken to exhibit the precocious talents of his daughter and son. Nannerl was ten, Wolfgang six years of age. The most important of these prodigy tours occupied more than three years—June 1763 to November, 1766. England was included in the itinerary, and Leopold Mozart, his wife, Nannerl and Wolfgang were in London between April, 1764 and July, 1765. They at first lodged at the house of 'Mr. Cousins, Hair-cutter, in Cecil Court, St. Martin's Lane.' Thence, after they had replenished their wardrobe, Father Mozart

It must have been extremely gratifying to Leopold Mozart to receive the following appreciation of his son's genius from the lips of Papa Haydn. He said :

I declare to you before God as a man of honour, that your son is the greatest composer that I know, either personally or by reputation ; he has taste, and beyond that the most consummate knowledge of the art of composition.

But this, interesting though it be, is leading us away from the father to his wonderful bairns. He nearly outlived his son, as he died at Salzburg on May 28, 1787, a little more than four years before Wolfgang drew his last breath. In the words of Pohl: 'Leopold Mozart bore the honourable distinction of having trained one of the greatest musicians the world ever saw.'

Consideration of the fathers of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and some other composers must be deferred till next month.

LEOPOLD MOZART.

wrote: 'How do you suppose my wife and girl look in English hats, and the great Wolfgang in English clothes?'

In reference to the children's appearance at the Court of George the Third—for which they received an honorarium of twenty-four guineas—the father records: 'The favour shown to us by both royal personages is incredible; we should never imagine from their familiar manner that they were the King and Queen of England. We have met with extraordinary politeness at every Court, but this surpasses them all. A week ago we were walking in St. James's Park; the King and Queen drove past, and although we were differently dressed, they recognised us, and the King leant out of the window of the carriage smiling and nodding, especially towards Wolfgang.'

ENGLISH CHURCH EXHIBITION AT ST. ALBANS.

A VISITOR'S NOTES.

At the Town Hall of St. Albans, the Verulam of ancient days, an exhibition was held from June 27 to July 15 that was of supreme interest to the ecclesiologist and a source of attraction to the general visitor. The objects shown covered a wide range of subjects appertaining to the English Church, but the present writer's 'notes' must be restricted to making mention of some of the books that were on view and in referring to the music section of the Exhibition.

A fine specimen of a 'Quire Book' was of local interest, in that it contained compositions of Robert Fayrfax, organist of St. Albans Abbey in the last decade of the 15th century. This illuminated MS. (circa 1510) measures 26 by 18½ inches, and belongs to the Lambeth Palace Library. Its contents include a MS. Gloria in five parts, which formed the exercise written by Fayrfax for his degree of Mus. D. at Cambridge in 1504. Eton College lent a similar music book, containing a collection of motets and Magnificats by Lambe, Cornysch, Turges, Browne, Davy, Wilkinson, Fayrfax and other composers, for use in Eton College Chapel, circa 1500. Dr. Cummings enriched the Exhibition with some treasures from his valuable storehouse. A large folio volume, chiefly in the handwriting of Henry Purcell, containing anthems by Orlando Gibbons, Pelham Humphrys, Dr. Blow, and the great Purcell himself, was specially interesting, and so was a volume, magnificently bound for the Duke of Chandos, containing anthems by Handel in the handwriting of his copyist Smith. Among the autographs were the anthem 'The souls of the righteous,' composed by Dr. Boyce for the funeral of King George II. (1760), endorsed 'This is the property of William Boyce, of Hammersmith,' and Attwood's Coronation anthem for William IV. (1831). Here were also to be seen the autographs of Samuel Wesley's motet 'Deus majestatis' for double choir and instruments (1799), Crotch's 'The Lord is King' (1838), Goss's 'O praise the Lord' (1868), and an anthem by Arthur Sullivan, composed when he was a chorister in the Chapel Royal. We give the opening bars of this juvenile composition :

SING UNTO THE LORD. A. SULLIVAN.

Sing un-to the Lord, and praise His Name, and praise His Name,

Sing un-to the Lord, and praise His Name.

&c.

The Bible and Prayer Book sections were of peculiar interest. Space will only allow me to mention a few of these precious tomes. In the preface to his revision of Wycliffe's translation, John Purvey (1388) speaks of himself as 'a symple creature' who translated the Bible 'out of Latyn into English,' and he adds :

this symple creature hadde myche travaile with diverse felawis and helpiris . . . to make oo Latyn bible sumdel trewe . . . and to translate as cleerli as he coude to the sentense, and to have manie gode felawis and Kunnyngte at the correctyng of the translatioun.

A Bible printed by John Day in 1551 contained some curious printed annotations. The following, on 1 St. Peter iii., may be quoted :

and yf she [the wife] be not obediende and healfull unto hym [the husband], endeouoreth to beate the fere of God into her heade, that thereby she maye be compelled to learne her duty and do it.

An old Bible here exhibited contains the following 16th century prescription, perchance written by a doctor of divinity :

'A MEDECINE FOR A SICKE SOULE.'

Take a quart of the repentance of Nineveh and put hereto both your handfulls of fervent faith in Christe's blood, with as much love and charitie of the purest that you can get in God's shoppe, a like quantitie of each, and put it into a cleane vessel of a good conscience and let it boile well together in a fierce love till thou seest with the eie of faith the black fume of this world's stinke in thy stomake, &c.

'Printers' errors have in former times played sad havoc with the truth of Holy Writ—e.g., in a Bible printed by John Field, 'printer to the Parliament' (1653), the omission of an all-important 'not,' causes 1 Corinthians vi. 9 to read :

Know ye not that the unrighteous shall inherit the Kingdom of God.

A similar lapsus in one of the Edwardian Prayer Books contains the commandment :

Thou shalt bear false witness against thy neighbour.

Canon Gibbs, one of the most active promoters of the Exhibition, points to the remarkable fact that, so far as his knowledge extends, 'every English Prayer Book, from 1561 to 1660 inclusive, has this misprint in its Psalter : 'The righteous shall be punished' !

Some curious translations of the Douay version of the Bible may be exemplified as follows :

Judges v., 28. His Mother looked out at a window and howled ; and she spoke from the dining-room Why is his chariot, &c.

One that was wiser than the rest of his wives returned this answer to her mother-in-law, &c.

Psalms 90. Thou shalt not be afraid . . . of the business that walketh about in the dark . . . or of the noon-day devil.

The Exhibition catalogue says : 'With this last, however, may be compared Coverdale's version (1550) : 'So thou shalt not nede to be afraied for any bugges by nighte.'

The Prayer Book section—thanks to the kindness of Lord Aldenham, who lent so many specimens of these and also of Bibles from his fine collection—was particularly comprehensive. Following 'The Order of Communion,' printed on March 8, 1548, is the King's proclamation setting forth the authority and circumstances under which this first edition of the English Service for the Communion of the Laity was compiled and published :

least every man phantasizing and devising a sondry way by hymself, in the vse of thys moste blisshed Sacrament of vnitie, there myghte thereby arise any vnsemely and vngodly diuersitie.

In a Prayer Book containing 'The Psalter and certain Godlye Prayers' (1560) there is printed 'a short Introduction into the Science of Musick, made for suche as are desirous to have a knowledge thereof, for the singing of these Psalms.' In 1566 was issued :

The Psalter of Psalmes of Dauid after the translatioun of the great Byble. Poynted as it shall be songe or sayde in Churches.

Duw Tâd o'r nef : trugarhâ wrthym wir bechaduriaid.

A splendidly printed copy of 'The Book of Common Prayer . . . according to the use of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America' (De Vinne Press, New York, 1893) contains special Psalms for sixteen festivals, also twenty selections of Psalms which may be used instead of the Psalms for the day. In this 'selection' (why only for twenty days?) forty-five Psalms only are drawn upon, and Psalm 91 occurs twice.

Like the Irishman who when 'he opened his mouth put his foot into it,' so a French compositor in the year 1551 made 'pie' when he set up :

This Prymer of Salisbury use is set out along with houtonyser chyang.

A collection of musical instruments formerly used in churches, kindly lent by the Rev. F. W. Galpin, served to demonstrate the great change that has come over church music since the portable organ used in the 15th century, of which an example was exhibited. Here was also a positive organ (c. 1600), a regal (c. 1620), a cornet, dated 1578 and used to support the treble voices of the choir, a pitch pipe, flute, clarinet, violin, 'bass viol' (violoncello), hautboy, bassoon, serpent, and a bass horn, said to be an improved serpent, probably a less seductive instrument.

One of the lectures delivered in connection with the Exhibition was given by Mr. Galpin, who took for his subject 'The by-gone music of our parish churches.'

The following is a syllabus of his interesting discourse with a programme of the musical illustrations :

The typical parochial service. Pre-Reformation plainsong and its accompaniment. Antiphone and carol. Organs portative and positive. The English Metrical Psalter (1549). Sternhold and Hopkins. 'Apt notes to sing withal.' Part-singing. Tallis's canon. Foreshadowings of the National Anthem. The Hundredth Psalm. 'A speedy demolishing of all organs.' Psalmody in decline. Territorial Times. 'The necessity of singing well in churches or not to sing at all.' Cornets and pitchpipes. Tate and Brady (1696). Wesley and the 18th century Hymn Tunes. 'Lo! He comes.' The village Church Band and its eccentricities. Personal reminiscences. Ready-made music. The 'organisation' craze.

In a petition, presented to the House of Commons in 1641, against William Grant, minister of the parish of Isleworth, he is charged with having said that he 'had rather hear an Organ (ten to one) in the church than the singing of Psalmes which scoffingly he called Hopkins his jiggs'!

Mention must be made of 'A Selection of metrical psalm and hymn books, from the collection made by the Rev. Dr. Julian,' which were lent by the Council of the Church House, where the books are now located. It may not be generally known that John Keble versified the Psalter. Here is the title of the book, a copy of which was exhibited at St. Albans :

THE PSALTER OR PSALMS of David in English Verse.

By a member of the University of Oxford, adapted for the most part to tunes in common use. Oxford, 1839. Small 8vo.

In the preface to his Psalter, Keble says :

The custom of singing the Psalms rather than chanting them, has prevailed among us so long and so universally, that there is small hope at present of changing.

Therefore he set himself to improve the 'metrical version,' 'adhering reverently to the meaning of the original,' by producing the above Psalter. In itself, this book bears testimony to the great advance that has been made in English church music since Keble's day.

The foregoing 'notes,' by reason of their limitations, can only serve to sample the many interesting things that were displayed at St. Albans, and that made a visit to the old city so pleasant and profitable. The Exhibition reflected the greatest credit on all concerned in its conception and achievement. In this connection the services and courtesy of the honorary secretary and treasurer, Miss M. A. Wix, call for special acknowledgment. An excellently compiled and well annotated catalogue of the exhibits (nearly 700 in number) proved of great value, and it is satisfactory to learn that in the autumn an illustrated catalogue will be issued at a price which should secure for it a large sale.

Special attention is directed to the advantages of the Liszt Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, which is to be competed for in September. The scholarship, which is open to persons of either sex, entitles the successful candidate to three years' free instruction at the Academy, and after that to a yearly sum (at present about £125) to assist him or her in the extension of his or her musical experience for a period of two years on the Continent of Europe. Full particulars may be obtained from the Secretary of the Royal Academy of Music.

Occasional Notes.

*The inspired musician, what a range,
What power of passion, wealth of change!
Some source of feeling he must choose
And its lock'd fount of beauty use,
And through the stream of music tell
Its else unutterable spell.*

MATTHEW ARNOLD.

Dr. Coward, of Sheffield, has received the following gratifying letter from Lord Knollys, private secretary to the King :

Buckingham Palace, July 17, 1905.

Dear Sir,—I am commanded by the King and Queen to express their high appreciation of the Sheffield Festival chorus, who sang before their Majesties at the opening of the University of Sheffield, and also of the way in which you conducted the chorus.—Yours faithfully, KNOLLYS.

H. Coward, Esq., Mus. Doc.

The following notes may supplement Sir George Grove's analysis of Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture (page 531 of the present issue). There is every reason to believe that the work was first performed by the Philharmonic Society of London. In the programme of the concert given on May 14, 1832, it appears thus :

Overture to the Isles of Fingal (MS.)

F. Mendelssohn Bartholdy.

The overture was primarily dedicated to the Philharmonic Society, and subsequently to the Crown Prince of Prussia, afterwards Frederick William IV., King of Prussia; therefore the work followed the example of Beethoven's Choral Symphony which, it will be remembered, was first dedicated to the Philharmonic Society, but the printed score is inscribed to Frederick William the Third, King of Prussia. The Harmonicon recorded the first performance of the overture in these words :

The overture of M. Mendelssohn, written for these Concerts, was now heard for the first time, a circumstance which ought to have been noticed in the program, for the dry announcement contained in the letters 'MS,' says little: indeed it may signify that, whatever the age of the composition, it had never been thought worth printing. The idea of this work was suggested to the author while he was in the most northern part of Scotland, on a wild, desolate coast, where nothing is heard but the howling of the wind and roaring of the waves; and nothing living seen, except the sea-bird, whose reign is there undisturbed by human intruder. So far as music is capable of imitating, the composer has succeeded in his design; the images impressed on his mind he certainly excited, in a general way, in ours: we may even be said to have heard the sounds of winds and waves, for music is capable of imitating these in a direct manner; and, by means of association, we fancied solitude and an all-pervading gloom. This composition is in B minor, a key well suited to the purpose, and begins at once with the subject, which more or less prevails throughout; for unity of intention is no less remarkable in this than in the author's overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream, and indeed is a prominent feature in all he has produced. Whatever a vivid imagination could suggest, and great musical knowledge supply, has contributed to this, the latest work of M. Mendelssohn, one of the finest and most original geniuses of the age; and it will be but an act of justice to him, and a great boon to the frequenters of these Concerts, to repeat the present composition before the conclusion of the season. Works such as this are like 'angels' visits,' and should be made the most of.

In his 'History' of the Philharmonic Society (1862) George Hogarth, a former secretary, says: 'At a general meeting of the Society on the 7th of June, 1832, Sir George Smart read a letter from Mendelssohn requesting the Society's acceptance of the score of this overture [The Hebrides]; and it was resolved to present him with a piece of plate in token of the Society's thanks, which was forthwith done.' What has become of this MS.? Was it an autograph score?

Mr. Felix Moscheles possesses a copy (full score) of the 'Hebrides' overture in Mendelssohn's autograph, concerning which his father, the late Ignatz Moscheles, records in his diary (May, 1832) as follows:

Mendelssohn and Klingemann came to the children's one o'clock dinner. The former gave me the score of his overture to the 'Hebrides,' which he had finished in Rome on the 16th of December, 1830, but afterwards altered for publication. I often thought the first sketch of his compositions so beautiful and complete in form that I could not think any alteration advisable, and during our stroll in the Park [Regent's Park] we discussed this point again to-day. Mendelssohn, however, firmly adhered to his principle of revision.

Did Mendelssohn bring two scores of his 'Hebrides' overture with him when he came to England in 1832?

The Athenæum notice of the first performance may also be quoted:

A MS. composition by Mendelssohn, entitled 'Overture to the Isles of Fingal,' was performed for the first time in this country. The burthen of the composition strongly reminded us of Beethoven. Towards the end it was well worked with figurative passages for violins, the subject being sustained by the wind instruments—but as descriptive music it was decidedly a failure. (Athenæum, May 19, 1832.)

The Morning Post criticism is interesting by reason of the reference to the baton, then just coming into permanent use in England:

The author conducts with a baton: the intelligence of his look, gesture, and rise of the baton imparted a confidence to the band which was productive of the most beneficial results. It is almost superfluous to repeat that we have always strenuously advocated this system of conducting with a baton. (Morning Post, May 16, 1832.)

During the Sonzogno opera season at Paris, which came to an end last month, six new works by young Italian composers were produced, the most successful of which appear to have been 'Andrea Chenier' and 'Siberia,' both by Umberto Giordano; and the least satisfactory Giacomo Orefice's 'Chopin.' Angelo Orvieto, who wrote the libretto, presents the Polish composer in various melodramatic scenes. The music has been selected from the works of Chopin. In the score is printed George Sand's opinion that one day Chopin would be scored 'sans rien changer à sa partition de piano!' The score is said to be cleverly written, but Chopin's music is bound to lose all its character and even its colour by such transposition; time spent upon a work of this kind is practically wasted.

Sir Edward Elgar has been honoured by receiving (on June 28) the degree of Doctor of Music honoris causa from the University of Yale. In presenting Sir Edward to President Hadley and the Corporation, Professor Williston Walker referred to him as:

A composer of musical creations of the highest merit, honoured for his genius and his achievements as a master of the oratorio, wherever excellence in music is appreciated; gifted and distinguished for leadership in an art that gives noble expression to that which is uplifting and inspiring in human feeling, and that voices the profoundest spiritual emotions and the deepest longings of the heart; marked in his home-land by ample scholastic recognition and by the appreciation of his sovereign; and commanding the homage of the musicians of Germany, of France, and of America, he is heartily welcome among us. We felicitate ourselves on his presence with us at this anniversary of this venerable university, and see in it a fresh evidence of the union in sympathy and mutual recognition that is knitting together by bonds of ever-increasing closeness the two great English-speaking nations. We would ask that Yale do her part to express the admiration of America for his talents and his services by conferring upon Sir Edward Elgar the degree of doctor of music, already his by the gift of English universities, and thus do herself the honour of enrolling him among her graduates.

Other musicians have recently been favoured in having had honorary degrees conferred upon them. Sir Frederick Bridge received (on June 27) the M.A. degree from the University of Durham by the Vote of Convocation; Mr. Charles A. E. Harriss, Director of the McGill Conservatorium of Music, Montreal, has had conferred upon him the Mus. D. degree by the Archbishop of Canterbury; and Signor Michele Esposito has received the Mus. D. degree from the University of Dublin. The selection of Dr. Harriss for the distinction was due 'not only to his personal attainments, but also to a desire to extend recognition of the musical efforts of Britain beyond the seas.' In 'introducing' Dr. Esposito (on July 6) the Public Orator of the University of Dublin, in course of a Latin speech, said:

Admiration is always excited when

Music awakes, and grows to form with ease

As nimble fingers fly along the keys:

but an especial veneration thrills us when Esposito has swept us away into the realms of his art, where nothing save the sounds of music, floating all around us, sway our emotions hither and thither under their delightful constraint and compulsion. And no less do we admire him when, like Apollo Musagetes, he inspires and directs with unerring art the whole orchestral company. To a musician so earnest, so distinguished, so beloved, we owe gratitude and affection. Now with loud acclaim, let us tender him this most just and grateful recognition of his merits.

Dr. Esposito—who has done excellent work for the cause of music in Dublin, especially as conductor of the Dublin Orchestral Society and as a professor of the Royal Irish Academy of Music—has been presented by his many friends with the robes of a Doctor of Music, a full score of 'Tristan,' and a service of table silver.

The committee at Lucca which recently organized the festival to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of the death of Luigi Boccherini, having learnt that the tomb of the composer at Madrid is in a state of decay, has applied to the Spanish government to have his remains transferred to Lucca, i.e., to the city in which Boccherini was born. He enjoyed great fame as a performer on the violoncello, and his chamber music in former days was much played; now he is chiefly remembered by his simple yet pleasing minuet in the key of A.

Dr. Edward Grieg—it should be remembered that he received his degree at the University of Cambridge—contributed to the July issue of the Contemporary Review an interesting autobiographical article entitled 'My first success.' As to how the Norwegian composer cleverly does not record his 'first success,' in the ordinary acceptance of the term, the reader must be referred to the article itself. In the meantime one or two extracts may be given. The first is a school-class incident, and reads thus :

One day in the German class I translated der gemeine Holländer (the common elder bush) as der gemeine Holländer (the common Dutchman), and in one of the English lessons I boldly said that kalbsbraten (veal) meant 'beef of veal.' The teacher burst out laughing and said 'Get away home, and tell your father (who was the English Consul) that kalbsbraten means beef of veal.' I went blood-red with shame. That was a terrible case down, which for long destroyed all faith in my capacity both at school and at home, where my stupidities were reported by kind friends. But my good star would have it that even in the same lesson I came in for an enormous satisfaction. In the lesson-book occurred the word Requiem; and the teacher asked if any one of us could tell what great composer had written a piece of church music with that title. No one offered an answer, till I gently ventured the name 'Mozart.' The whole class stared at me as an incomprehensibly strange creature. That I took as a success. But I suspected that it carried something sinister in its lap, and only too soon I found it was so. Naturally the class disliked, as is so often the case, having such a being in their midst, and ever after pursued me in the street with the insult, 'There goes "Mozak,"' and if I escaped down a side street, 'Mozak,' 'Mozak,' sounded after me from a long way off. I felt this abuse to be unjust, and considered myself a martyr. I came very near to hating my schoolfellows, and one thing is certain : I shunned nearly all of them.

Dr. Grieg's Scottish ancestry comes out in the answer to a question at a history lesson. The teacher asked :

'Can you tell me what generals were on the Black Sea under Catherine II.?' With a loud voice I answered, 'Generals Greigh and Elphinstone.' Those names had been welded into my consciousness ever since my father had told me that our family arms, which bore a ship, denoted that our original ancestor was in all probability the Scotch Admiral Greigh. The teacher clapped the book to. 'Quite right: for that you will get a 1 and a star; but for the year's work you will have to be content with a one-and-a-half.' I was more than content: I was as proud as a Field-Marshal after a victory. I almost think that was the greatest success of my school life.

Another quotation refers to the composer's student days at Leipzig and the 'first success' of his Opus 1 :

I hasten to give one instance of what must be called a real success. It was Easter time, 1862, before I left the Conservatorium, when I enjoyed the honour of being among the students who were selected to appear at the public performance in the hall of the Gewandhaus. I played some pianoforte pieces of my own; they were lame productions enough; and I still blush to-day that they appeared in print and figure as Opus 1; but it is a fact that I had an immense success and was called for several times. There was no doubt about that success. Yet it meant nothing for me. The public consisted of invited friends and relations, professors and students. In these circumstances it was the easiest thing in the world for the fair-haired lad from the north to make a hit.

The entire article may be read with profit. One thing is certain, that this popular contemporary composer has written on 'My first success' with success.

The Master of the Musicians' Company (Mr. C. T. D. Crews) provided an exceedingly interesting entertainment at the Guildhall School of Music on June 29. On that occasion was revived the Masque, written by Thomas Campion (1567?-1620) for the marriage of the Earl of Somerset and Lady Frances Howard in the year 1614, and performed at Whitehall. Most of the performers at the recent revival were students of the Guildhall School of Music, whose interpretations greatly added to the enjoyment of the evening. In regard to the music of the Masque, the composers laid under contribution, in addition to Campion himself, were Coperario (Cooper), Nicholas Lanieri, Byrd, William Lawes, Richard Farnaby, and Anthony Holborne. A small orchestra of ladies—among the instruments being a harpsichord and a tabor—rendered most efficient aid. Mr. Arthur H. D. Prendergast, a trustworthy authority on the subject of the Masque, specially composed (in the antique style) some vocal numbers for which no music was known to exist: he also conducted the performance—one that went with remarkable smoothness and upon which all concerned are to be warmly congratulated. The entertainment was honoured by the presence of their Royal Highnesses Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Princesses Victoria and Louisa of Schleswig-Holstein, and many other distinguished guests.

H.R.H. Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein has accepted the honorary freedom of the Worshipful Company of Musicians.

'The Quarterly Magazine of the International Musical Society' contains an exhaustive and ably written article, by Mr. Barclay Squire, on 'Purcell as theorist.' It takes the form of a comparison between the 11th and 12th editions of Playford's 'Introduction to the Skill of Musick,' and shows the important alterations made by Purcell in the 12th edition (1694) of that book. The following is an example of Purcell's theoretical style :

Notes of Syncope, or Driving-Notes, are, when your Hand or Foot is taken up, or put down, while the Note is sounding, which is very awkward to a Young Practitioner, but when once he can do this well, he may think himself pretty Perfect in keeping Time. For an Example, take this following Lesson :

In the little pamphlet entitled '54 Erbkönig-Kompositionen,' by Wilhelm Tappert (Liepmannnssohn, Berlin), the first composition there catalogued is the simple setting of Goethe's poem by Corona Schröter, which forms No. 17 of her 25 Lieder published at Weimar in 1786. In this connection, Le Ménestrel has recently published an interesting account, by Amédée Boutarel, of the festival given at the castle of Tiefurt on August 28, 1781, to celebrate the thirty-second anniversary of Goethe's birth. The following year—on the 22nd of July, a glorious summer's day—a one-act piece, 'Die Fischerin,' was performed at a spot in the quiet park amid exquisite scenery provided by Nature herself. The piece furnished by Goethe for the occasion included, among other poems, the Erbkönig, and Corona Schröter sang the setting mentioned above. A charming water-colour drawing by the painter Kraus, which Le Ménestrel has reproduced, furnishes a delightful glimpse of that memorable al fresco performance.

Dr. Max Seiffert recently consulted the registers of the Liebfrauenkirche in Halle hoping to find details respecting F. W. Zachau, Handel's teacher, when he came across the church account books, which were located in a dark room near a small organ. In one book (1715-16) he found various entries connected with Bach's visit to Halle to examine the new organ built by Cuncius. There was a receipt for one thaler paid to the messenger, Andreas Noacken, who went to Weimar with the letter to Concertmeister Bach concerning the 'examination' of the organ. Bach's reply (April 22, 1716) is given in Spitta ('Life of Bach,' English Edition I., 520). Six days later he and the other 'Herren Deputirten,' Johann Kuhnau of Leipzig, and Christian Friedrich Rolle, of Quedlinburg, were all three at Halle. After the examination of the organ came, according to good old custom, eating and drinking, the account books furnishing detailed entries of all the good things provided and the expense incurred. Among the eatables were:

- I portion of Böffallenote (bœuf à la mode).
- I gereuchert schinken (smoked ham).
- I Aschette mit Erbsen (plate of peas).
- I Aschette mit Erteffen (plate of potatoes).

in addition to salad, fresh butter, cakes, &c. And then there was Rhine wine, Franconian wine, beer for the guests and also for the servants. The day before the departure (May 3) of Bach and his colleagues they each received six thalers for their travelling expenses, and gave receipts which are preserved among the documents. On May 11 Gottfried Kirchhoff, Zachau's successor as organist of the Liebfrauenkirche, received for his services an honorarium of eight thalers. The foregoing quaint details are taken from Dr. Max Seiffert's article 'Joh. Seb. Bach, 1716, in Halle,' in the recently-issued 'Quarterly Magazine of the International Musical Society.' It should be stated that Dr. Seiffert spells the name of Handel's teacher 'Zachow,' thus adding a fourth form of the old organist's patronymic, as Mainwaring gives it Zackaw, and Schoelcher spells it Sackau.

The methods of composers are interesting and often profitable as good examples. M. Jacques Blumenthal has been so very successful as a lyrical composer that anything he has to say on his creative achievements is worthy of attention. In a letter written about twelve years ago, he says:

Sometimes I compose at the piano, at other times away from it. I am in the habit of reading a good deal of poetry, and when any poem strikes my fancy and seems adapted to musical treatment, I copy it into one of my MS. books, of which I always keep several, in English, French, German, and Italian. These verses all lie patiently there till their time comes to be set to music. Some have to wait for years, some are composed almost at once; it all depends on the mood in which I happen to be, for according to my mood I look out for some verses corresponding to it, and then the song comes forth with ease.

Thus each poem must come as a 'message' to M. Blumenthal ere he can set it to music.

Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven lived and laboured and died in Vienna, but they were not natives of that city. Vienna, however, can boast of having given birth to Franz Schubert, and among the treasures which he bequeathed to the world there are many waltzes. But at the beginning of the 19th century, while Schubert was yet a child, two men were born whose dance music soon attained world-wide celebrity.

Schubert's waltzes, written for the pianoforte, are fresh and full of charm, but as compared with his other works they are mere trifles. The two men to whom reference is made were Joseph Lanner and Johann Strauss: the former was born in 1801, the latter in 1804, and both are known as 'waltz' kings. To their memory a monument executed by the sculptor Franz Seifert was erected last month. Upon the marble pedestal stand the figures of the two composers and an inscription testifying that the work has been erected to the 'creators of immortal Viennese melodies by the grateful inhabitants of this city.' In 1902 the late Baron Nathaniel v. Rothschild added to the memorial fund the magnificent sum of 30,000 kronen, on the express condition that the monument should be placed, not in a busy thoroughfare as the committee at first proposed, but in the lovely, tranquil Rathaus park.

The Wagner family naturally wished for 'Parsifal' to be performed as long as possible at Bayreuth only; but, as our readers will remember, Mr. Conried gave it at New York on December 24, 1903, and since then it has been performed both in German and in English in many cities of the United States. Two private performances of the work were given at Amsterdam on June 20 and 22 by the Richard Wagner Society, under the direction of Dr. Henri Viotta, members only being admitted. The cost of these two performances—which were excellent in every way—amounted to eight thousand pounds, the greater part being defrayed by a well-known lover of art.

Wales has the reputation of being a musical country, and we know how the emotional inhabitants of the Principality can sing 'God bless the Prince of Wales' in Welsh. But that 'a cornet also rendered the same stirring air in English' is simply astounding. As, however, the statement is made in a well-known London newspaper, who can doubt it? The incident is reported in connection with the recent visit of the Prince of Wales to Cardiff. Was the 'special correspondent' who telegraphed the news a male, or a female 'Mail' scribe? In this connection we are reminded of a lady at a party who, when about to 'oblige with a song,' said to the accompanist: 'I shall sing it in German.' 'Oh! don't mention it,' replied the polite pianist; 'but as I can't read German, I hope you won't mind if I play the accompaniment in English.' He did!

It happened at the sea-side. The band had pleased pretty promenaders with sweet, soft strains. A young American asked the euphoniumist the title of that particular piece. 'The wedding waltz,' was the reply. 'Of course, from the Wedding March in Saul,' said Jonathan junior.

The following is from an organ-recital programme, not printed in England:

Toccata and Fugue in D minor - - - Bach.

Mr. S. Ernest Palmer, Founder of the Patron's Fund of the Royal College of Music, has presented the Musicians' Company with the sum of one thousand pounds wherewith to found two scholarships at the Guildhall School of Music. It has been decided that one of the scholarships shall be for competition among ex-choristers of St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey who show proficiency in instrumental music and general musical knowledge, and the other for competition among girls who evince the best aptitude in reading music at sight. The scholarships will entitle the holders to a complete course of training in music extending over a period of three years.

(Op. 26.)

This beautiful work reflects the impressions made on Mendelssohn by his tour, when quite young, through the Western Highlands in 1829. It is a pleasant legend that on his return to his family in Berlin he was asked by his sisters to tell them something about the Hebrides, and that his answer was, 'They are not to be described, only played about'; and then sitting down to the pianoforte he played the phrase with which the Overture opens. But in fact this subject occurred to him on entering the cave. It was a direct inspiration. We owe the knowledge of this fact to a letter of Mendelssohn's to his family, which is dated 'From one of the Hebrides' (auf einer Hebride), August 7, 1829, as if actually written on the island, and begins with the first twenty-one bars of the Overture, accompanied by the following words only: 'In order to make you understand how extraordinarily the Hebrides affected me, the following came into my mind there':

To this Hiller adds a few particulars in his Letters and Recollections of Mendelssohn. He says: 'The first few bars containing the principal subject actually occurred to him on the spot. The same evening he and his friend Klingemann paid a visit to a Scotch family. There was a piano in the drawing-room, but, being Sunday, music was utterly out of the question, and Mendelssohn had to employ all his diplomacy to get the instrument opened for a few minutes so that he and Klingemann might hear the theme.' It is probable that he began the serious composition of the work very soon after his return to Germany. In the next year (1830) he went to Italy, and it was during his stay there that he completed his first draft or version of his work. This appears from the allusions to it in his letters from Rome—viz.: November 16, 23, 30, and especially those of December 10 and 20, in the former of which he tells his father that he intends to finish it the next day as a birthday present to him, and in the latter speaks of it as a thing completed. The autograph score, however, is dated 'Rome, December 16, 1830.' But that, though 'finished' at that time, he was not entirely satisfied with it, is plain from a letter about two years later, in which, writing from Paris, January 12, 1832, he says that he will not produce it there because he does not consider it yet quite right—"the middle portion in E (forte) is too stupid, and the whole working-out smacks more of counterpoint than of train-oil, sea-gulls, and salt-fish, and must be altered.^{2*} These alterations (of a piece with those he was at the same time making in the 'Reformation' symphony) must have been accomplished in the course of the next four months, for, on May 14, 1832, it was played (for the first time?) at a Philharmonic concert in London under his own direction, when he says that it 'went splendidly, and sounded so droll amongst all the Rossini things.' There is a curious uncertainty about the title of the work. In his letters Mendelssohn calls it alternately 'The Hebrides' and 'The Solitary Island' (Einsame Insel); and similarly, the name 'Fingal's Cave' (Fingals Höhle) is prefixed to the published score, while that of 'Hebrides' is on the orchestral parts.

It is difficult to imagine that this enchanting composition could ever be mistaken for anything but a sea-piece. It would surely be impossible to interpret it otherwise. Those gusts which rise and fall, and sweep and whistle through the rocks; those descending notes, which seem to plumb the depths of ocean's deepest caves; and other effects, which in the hands of an inferior musician would sound like imitations, but which are here as native to the picture as the winds and waves are to Staffa itself—all seem naturally to be of the sea and the sea only. But its author has fortunately saved us from any mistake on the point by giving it a title. Mendelssohn approved of 'Programme-music,' and justified it by the example of his great predecessor. 'When Beethoven,' said he, 'had opened the road in the Pastoral Symphony, it was impossible not to go farther.' And he was right! The work even called forth a warm eulogy from Wagner—not always his eulogist. 'The Hebrides,' says he, 'is Mendelssohn's masterpiece. Wonderful imagination and delicate feeling are there presented with consummate art.' And surely in this overture we need not be told that Mendelssohn has written a piece of descriptive music which can hardly be surpassed as long as music remains what it is.

'To me,' says he, 'the finest object in nature is, and always will be, the sea. I love it almost more than the sky.' Of his four concert overtures two are sea-pieces. And yet what variety! The ocean of 'The Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage' is an ocean of no time and no quarter of the globe—a truly ideal sea. But the 'Hebrides' overture is as local as the other is universal. It is not only full of the sights and sounds of those northern islands, those sombre shores, and gray skies, and moaning, uncertain winds and busy waves; but it is pervaded with the erie, lonely feeling that makes the northern maritime regions so peculiar. And yet, after its northern character is well established, what a burst of softness comes over the picture! It must be the warmth and colouring of Italy, where he elaborated and matured his composition. The sweet airs of the south blow upon him while he is meditating or working at his Highland theme; and he forgets the rude north, and the Italian sun shines, and the scene changes from the cloudy sky and the lashing breakers of Staffa to the Bay of Naples, blue and calm, and Galatea and her Nymphs and Nereides sail over the surface, and the notes of their sounding shells re-echo along the sunny shores and float over the bosom of the bay. (See Example No. 3.) But hardly has he seen and recorded this vision of the Old World before he remembers how unreal it is, how it must come to an end—has already come to an end; and a sigh of regret escapes him, and he turns from the lovely, voluptuous southern picture back to the stern, gray sea and barren, sounding shores, and melancholy sentiment of the north again.

The phrase with which the overture opens—and closes—and which is repeated and repeated with an 'obstinate iteration' recalling the continued repetition of a not dissimilar figure in the first movement of the Pastoral Symphony, is as follows:

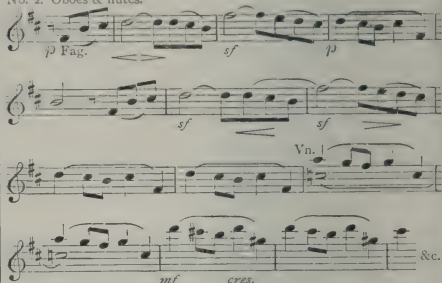

Allegro moderato.

No. 1.

This was the phrase, as B minor was the key, which occurred to him in the cave—the direct product of the magic sights and sounds of that wonderful place.

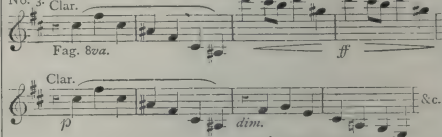

After the fourth bar begins the passage especially selected by Wagner for admiration, where, in his words, 'the oboes rise above the other instruments, wailing like sea-winds over the waves.' Out of this phrase is born—

No. 2. Oboes & flutes.

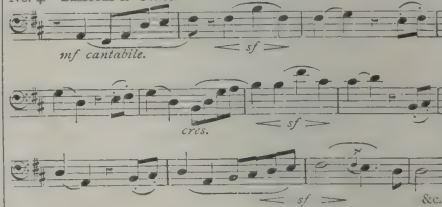

with the reiterations of its later bars; and then a suggestive passage in the clarinets and bassoons which seems to carry one down to the very depths of the ocean:

No. 3. Clar.

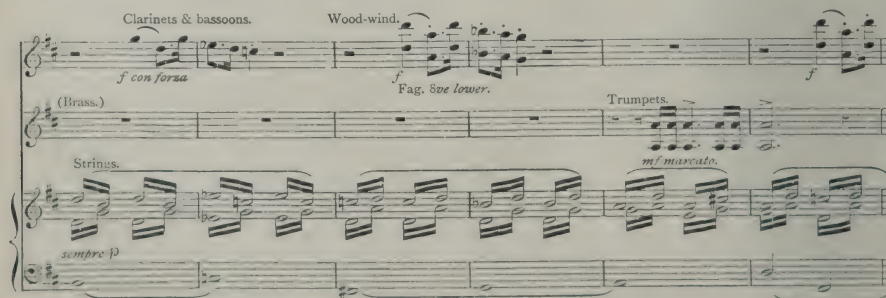

Following close on these, the 'second subject,' first heard in the bassoons, and later on in the clarinets, with an effect which once to hear is never to forget—is in absolute contrast:

No. 4. Bassoons & Cellos.

Amongst the lovely passages of which the Overture is full the following, in the 'working out' (already alluded to for its southern colouring), is one of the loveliest:

But it is useless to quote where no extracts can convey an adequate idea of the beauty and delicacy of the composition. There are a dozen subjects and phrases each as worthy of quotation as those given.

Church and Organ Music.

A WEST-END ORGAN FOR ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

Sir George Martin has very kindly called our attention to a very rare three-page pamphlet (small quarto) in the Library of St. Paul's Cathedral. This is probably the only copy—there is certainly not one in either the British Museum or the Bodleian Libraries. Moreover, he has afforded facilities whereby we are enabled to set the contents of this interesting and scarce document (circa 1710-13) before our readers.

A PROPOSAL

(by RENATUS HARRIS, ORGAN-Builder)

For the Erecting of an ORGAN in St. Paul's Cathedral, over the West Door, at the Entrance into the Body of that Church.

AS VOCAL MUSICK is the most perfect, so that fort of Instrumental which most resembles it, in its highest Perfection, must claim the Precedence of all others: In which Respect, the ORGAN is justly stil'd the King of Instruments; which has of late Years receiv'd many Improvements, particularly by representing all Wind and String'd Musick; to which Improvements the Propofer presumes he has in some measure contributed: And upon this Occasion, thinks it necessary to give an Account how he came to the Knowledge of swelling the Notes upon an ORGAN, because to this is owing the following Proposal.

It has been look'd upon as impracticable, by the ablest Judges in Musick, to divide a Note into twelve distinct Parts. The Propofer having asserted, that he would undertake to divide a Note into an hundred Parts, clearly distinguishable by a Musical Ear, did accordingly, in a full Assembly of Musical-Gentlemen, Masters of the Faculty, and other Artists, on Tuesday in Whitsun-Week, 1700, perform this Operation on an Organ then standing in his Work-houfe, now in St. Andrew's Church in Holborn, to their full and entire Satisfaction; and for the Conviction of the Curious in that Art, is ready to repeat the Experiment. This Performance gave the Propofer a Notion of the swelling of the Notes upon the ORGAN, which he finds to answer upon Tryal, tho' look'd upon equally impracticable with the other; and therefore most humbly submits the following Proposal to the Consideration of her Majesty, and both Houses of Parliament.

This ORGAN shall contain a double double Diapason, the Profundity of which will comprehend the utmost Notes of Sound. In this Stop shall be Pipes forty Foot long, and above two Foot Diameter; which will render this Organ vastly superior in Worth and Value to the other Diapason Organs; and that the rest of the Work may bear a due Proportion, it shall consist of six entire Sets of Keys for the Hands, besides Pedals for the Feet.

The first Set to be wholly appropriated for a grand Chorus, intended to be the most strong and firm that ever yet has been made.

The second and third Sets to answer all Sorts and Varieties of Stops, and to represent all Musical Instruments.

The fourth to express the Echo's.

The fifth to be a Chair or small Organ, yet to contain more Pipes, and a greater Number of Stops, than the biggest Organ in England has at present.

The sixth to be adapted for the emitting of Sounds to express Passion by swelling any Note, as if inspir'd by Human Breath; which is the greatest Improvement an Organ is capable of, except it had Articulation. On this Set of Keys, the Notes will be loud or soft, by swelling on a long Note or Shake, at the Organist's Pleasure. Sounds will come surprizing and harmoniously, as from the Clouds, or distant parts; pass, and return again, as quick or slow as Fancy can suggest; and be in Tune in all Degrees of Loudness and Softness.

By means of the Pedals, the Organist may carry on three Fugues at once, and be able to do as much as if he had four Hands; for the Feet would act upon the Pedal-Keys, when the Hands were employ'd above, and the Sound would be proportionably strong; which, in the grand Chorus in fo vaft a Church, ought to be as strong and bold as poffible; and therefore Pedals are us'd in all the great Organs beyond the Seas.

IF at the Charge of the Publick, fuch an Organ were built in the Place propos'd, which is the moft proper to give this Defign its full and defir'd Advantage, fuch an Inftrument, containing more Beauties and Variety than all the moft celebrated Organs, as it would be by far the compleateft in its Kind, fo it would be fuitable to the Grandeur of fo ftately a Fabrick.

SIR,

THE inclos'd Propofal takes its Rife from the Organ I fet up in Salisbury Cathedral in 1710, which was begun fome Years fince for a Church in London, as a Mafter-piece of great Value, to have been paid for by Subfcription, and was made capable of emitting Sounds to exprefs Paffion, by fwelling any Note, as if infpir'd by Human Breath: But the Place where it is now fix'd, not being proper for that Performance, which requires the Situation to be againft a Wall, for the Sound to ftrike but one way, it lofes that Advantage; and yet being prepar'd for that Intent, there may be more Varieties expref'd thereon, than by all the Organs in England, were their feveral Excellencies united. You are defir'd to obferve, that the propos'd Organ for St. Paul's, is intended to be plac'd at a great Diflance from the Choir, and not to interfere with the prefent Organ in the Performance of the Service, being chiefly confider'd in its Situation for the Benefit of fwelling the Notes, and study'd to be in all Refpects made the moft artful, coftly, and magnificent Piece of Organ-Work that ever has hitherto been invented. The Ufe of it will be for the Reception of the Queen on all publick Occafions of Thankfgiving for the good Effects of Peace or War, upon all State-Days, St. Cecilia's-Day, the Entertainment of Foreigners of Quality and Artifts, and on all Times of greateft Concourse, &c. And by the Advice and Affiftance of Sir Christopher Wren, the external Figure and Ornaments may be contriv'd fo proportionable to the Order of the Building, as to be a Decoration to that part of the Edifice, and no Obftruction to any of the refl. This Inftrument will be of fuch Reputation to the Kingdom, as will far furmount the Expence of it, which will be ealy whenever her Majefty and the Parliament fhall farther think fit to enlarge their Bounty to St. Paul's Church, by appointing a Sum out of the fame Revenue which built it, or any other way, as they in their great Wifdom fhall judge proper for the Ornament and Grandeur of the State-Church of that City which is the chief of her Majefty's extenfive Dominions.

Several Cities, Corporations, and Gentlemen, have wrote to their Representatives, to vote and ufe their Intereft for promoting this defign. Sir Christopher Wren approves it, and I have promis'd him, Dr. Battle, Sub-Dean of her Majefty's Chappel-Royal, Mr. Crofts, and Mr. Weldon, the Queen's Organifts, and others, a Specimen, as Mr. Philip Hart had five Years fince, of fwelling of the Note, before I reap any benefit, or that the Work begins, which fhall be as foon as the Parliament determines to put this Propofal in Practice. The Patrons, and Mafters of Mufick, are very zealous in carrying on and recommending this to both Houfes, as being a National Reputation and Honour to Mufick in general, and no Charge to any Particular; and therefore humbly presume alfo in your Intereft to render this Defign effectual, and entirely compleat, whereby I may Unfortunately the binder, or fome other shearing-propensity person, has cut off the concluding lines of Harris's manifesto. That the 'Proposal' secured fpecial attention is proved by the fact that Addison noticed it in the Spectator of December 3, 1712 (No. 552), in the following eulogistic terms:

Among other omissions of which I have been alfo guilty, with relation to men of industry of a fuperior order, I muft acknowledge my filence towards a propofal frequently inclosed to me by Mr. Renatus Harris, Organ-Builders. The ambition of this artifice is to erect an organ in St. Paul's cathedral, over the weft door, at the entrance into the body of the church, which in art and magnificence fhall transcend any work of that kind ever before invented. The propofal in perspicuous language fets forth the honour and advantage fuch a performance would be to the British name, as well as that it would apply the power of founds, in a manner more amazingly forcible than, perhaps, has yet been known, and I am fure to an end much more worthy. Had the vafst fums which have been laid out upon operas without skill or conduct, and to no other purpofe but to fufpend or vitiate our underftandings, been difpofed this way, we fhould now perhaps have an engine fo formed as to ftrike the minds of half a people at once in a place of worfhip with a forgetfulness of prefent care and calamity, and a hope of endless rapture, joy and hallelujah hereafter.

It may be assumed that in making this 'Proposal'—put forth after Father Smith's death—Harris was anxious to place a fpecimen of his own handiwork in fo important a church as St. Paul's Cathedral, where his great rival Father Smith had already erected the noble inftrument which fo greatly added to his fame.

The King and Queen attended a fpecial fervice at St. Saviour's Church, Southwark, on July 3, in connection with its incorporation as the Cathedral of the newly-formed Diocese of Southwark. The mufic, under the direction of Dr. Madeley Richardson, organift of the Cathedral, included Sir Charles Stanford's Te Deum in B flat, the 'Hallelujah' chorus ('Messiah'), and Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm.

A CHORISTER'S EPITAPH.

Attached to one of the buttresses on the fouth fide of Rendcombe Church, near Cirencefter, is the following interefting infcription:

Here lyeth ye body of John ye fon of Francis and Sarah Woolley, chorifer of the Cathedrall Church of Glouc. who, after a fhort but very painfull ficknefs dyed ye 27 of July 1710 in 13 year of his age and ten months.

Tho' young I fell. Survivers ceafe to grieve,

My mortal pafte here moulders: yet I live
And fing with cherubs, whose fericaph lays

In confort eccho for yr Maker's praife.

Forbear your vulgar mufick to admire,

For all when young a fpeedy change defire,

I have not changed my implemment, but my choir.

'THE SUN IS SINKING FAST.'

Not a little of the popularity of the above evening hymn is due to the melodious and perfectly fuitable tune with which it is invariably associated. The compofer thereof, Mr. Herbert Stephen Irons, died, we regret to record, very fuddenly at Nottingham on June 29. The fon of John Irons, a lay-clerk of Canterbury, and a nephew of the late Sir George Elvey, Mr. Irons was born in 1838 at Canterbury, and fang as a chorifer in the Cathedral there. He ftudied under his uncle, Dr. Stephen Elvey, and became organift and precentor of St. Columba College, Rathfarnham, Ireland, in fucceffion to Dr. G. B. Arnold. His fubfequent appointments were organift of Southwell Collegiate Church, now the Cathedral (1857-72), and affiftant organift of Chefter Cathedral (1873-75). For the laft twenty-nine years he had held the office of organift of St. Andrew's Church, Nottingham—indeed, he played at a fervice in the church on the evening preceding his death. A man highly efteemed and a prolific compofer of church mufic, Mr. Irons is beft known by his tunes 'Southwell' and 'St. Columba,' both of which firft appeared in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' (1861): the latter, to 'The fun is finking faft,' will long preferve the memory of its compofer.

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC—Continued from page 534.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS AND CHANTS.

Mr. Richard Brown, of Numery Road, Canterbury, writes:

I think Mr. Bumpus will find that Sir John Goss arranged the double chant of which he speaks in the July issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES, from Clarke's beautiful C.M. tune called 'King's Norton,' No. 43 in the Rev. Henry Parr's 'Church of England Psalmody.' It is also to be found, though somewhat altered, in Dr. S. S. Wesley's 'European Psalmist,' No. 226.

Mr. O. E. Fleet-Cobb, of Sidcup, writes on the same subject:

Mr. John S. Bumpus's notes concerning 'The Great Composers and Chants' in your July issue, have reminded me of a passage in Sullivan's 'Victoria and Merrie England,' a ballet written for the Alhambra Theatre in 1897. The notes are to be found on page 18 of the pianoforte score, where the seven bars between the double bar and the fluttering demisemiquavers are in themselves a double chant to all intents and purposes.

MUSIC IN CATHEDRALS.

The organ in Durham Cathedral was re-opened on July 21 after having been entirely rebuilt, re-voiced, &c., by Messrs. Harrison & Harrison, of Durham, when Sir Walter Parratt gave a recital which passed off most successfully. A well-compiled and illustrated pamphlet, giving much information concerning the history of the Durham instrument—including a reprint of much of THE MUSICAL TIMES article (May, 1905) on the Cathedral and a detailed account of the recent renovation of the organ—has been published by Messrs. T. Caldcleugh & Son, Durham.

At an influentially attended meeting held on July 15 in the Chapter House of Gloucester Cathedral, under the presidency of the Dean, Dr. A. Herbert Brewer was presented with the robes of a Doctor of Music, an address, and a cheque. The address, contained in an album artistically designed and printed by Messrs. Chance & Bland, was couched in the following terms:

To A. Herbert Brewer, Mus. Doc. This album is presented, together with the robes of a Doctor of Music, by Stewards of the Gloucester Musical Festival, Subscribers and Members of the Festival Choirs, the Gloucester Choral, Orpheus and Orchestral Societies, as a mark of their appreciation of the honour conferred upon him by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, of his skill as a musician, and the ability he has consistently displayed as Conductor of the Festival, and of the Societies with which he is connected.—Gloucester, July 15, 1905.

Sir Walter Parratt, in pursuance of his annual and much appreciated custom, gave an organ recital in St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, to the Eton masters and boys and their friends on Sunday evening, July 9, when the following organ solos were performed:

Imperial March	- - - - -	Elgar.
Choralvorspiel	- 'Ein feste Burg'	J. S. Bach.
Lamentation	- - - - -	Guilmant.
Fantaisie in E flat	- - - - -	Saint-Saëns.

The organ pieces were interspersed with vocal and violin solos, and the hymn 'There is a land of pure delight' was sung.

Mr. T. Tertius Noble has been giving an interesting series of organ recitals in York Minster during the past month in aid of the organ fund. The programmes, which have been exceedingly varied, have included a Concerto in G by Matthew Camidge, a former organist of the Cathedral, a Suite in F, by Corelli, and a Theme with Variations composed by Mr. Noble himself.

Mr. Edwin H. Lemare has planned out a busy round of organ recital engagements. From August 28 until the end of September he will be touring in Scotland, Ireland, and the North of England, playing every night. About the end of November he will sail for Australia, having been engaged to give a series of twelve recitals at the opening of the new organ in the Melbourne Town Hall, also visiting Sydney, Adelaide, Brisbane, and New Zealand, and possibly calling at South Africa on his way home. Next year he hopes to visit the United States for an extended recital tour.

The death took place at Axminster, on June 17, at the age of ninety-one, of Mr. Thomas Nicholes Webber, said to be the oldest organist in England. Born at Exeter on April 27, 1814, he became a chorister in the Cathedral and subsequently held the organistship of Axminster Parish Church. He continued to officiate until February, 1903, when, at the age of eighty-eight, he resigned the office, the duties of which he had discharged with efficiency and faithfulness for the long period of sixty years.

'The Chorister' is the title of a periodical issued as the magazine of the London School of Choristers. The contents of No. 1 include some brightly-written articles by the boys themselves, including 'My tour round our Colonies,' 'How England may be invaded in 1905' (we hope it will not), and 'An adventure with a tiger,' thus showing the diversified tastes of the young gentlemen so admirably trained by Mr. James Bates.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

A Song of Thanksgiving. Cantata for Harvest and General Festival use. Words by Shapcott Wensley. Music by J. H. Maunder.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

Mr. Maunder's cantata is laid out for soprano, tenor and bass (or contralto) solo and chorus, well-known hymn-tunes being added to be sung by the congregation. The composer has a peculiar talent for securing broad and attractive effects by simple means, and we know of no work better calculated to meet satisfactorily the requirements of the majority of church choirs at harvest thanksgivings. Mr. Shapcott Wensley has provided an excellent 'book,' and its jubilant and devotional spirit is happily expressed in Mr. Maunder's music. The solos are melodious and, in common with the choral-writing, easy to read and sing. The simple omission of the hymn 'We plough the fields and scatter' makes the cantata suitable for general use, and an alternative Finale is provided for concert-room performances.

Thou shalt keep the feast of Harvest. Composed by Frederick H. Cowen.

Praise to God, Immortal praise. Composed by John E. West.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

Any composition from the pen of Dr. Cowen commands attention, and his new harvest anthem will certainly reward those who study it. The composer has manifestly written for a well-trained choir, the members of which are capable of taking up entrances with precision on any beat or half-beat of the bar. If this is the chief difficulty the anthem presents, the part-writing is most melodious, the intervals, with one or two exceptions, being easy to read. The exceptions, however, are justified by the harmonic effects which contribute to the significance of the music. Structurally the work consists of a dignified opening chorus in C, which leads into a short solo in A flat for a soprano voice, the singer being presently supported by the altos, tenors and basses. A brief recitative for basses in unison followed by a terse choral passage and an organ interlude effectively prepare the way for the final portion, which consists of a fugatto based on a virile subject, preceded and followed by sections in solid four-part harmony of imposing character.

Mr. West has set a portion of a hymn by Anna Lætitia Barbauld (1743-1825), and in a manner that testifies to keen apprehension of what is effective in choral-writing. The anthem contains no solos, but the respective sections of the choir are made to answer each other in a way that provides ample variety and secures good contrast with the portions in close harmony. In two places the sopranos and altos are divided severally into two parts, but the vocal-writing, although requiring a crisp attack, presents few executive difficulties.

A Method of teaching Harmony based upon Ear-trainings.

By Frederick G. Shinn, Mus. Doc. Part II. Chromatic Harmony and Exceptional Progression.

[The Vincent Music Company, Limited.]

The first part of this work, dealing with diatonic harmony, was reviewed in our issue of September, 1904. Dr. Shinn in this new section boldly carries his ear-training plans into the subtle atmosphere of the most modern harmony. If he asks too much from the average harmony student, at least it may be said that no pains have been spared to provide ample and well-organized material for study. No student who plods through the course herein designed could fail to gain valuable knowledge and practical skill in harmonizing, and probably an awakened ear. We regret to note that Dr. Shinn, in his theoretical explanations, talks of 'generators' (which generate sounds out of tune!), and that he even goes so far as to support the least tenable assumption of the Day theory that the presence of certain discords as part of the harmonic or partial series excuses 'preparation,' a word which, if it means anything, means the sounding of a note before it is discordant. Dr. Shinn is far happier in his interesting chapter on exceptional progression, wherein he shows by numerous examples from good composers that the so-called 'rules' of harmony are advantageously set aside under certain circumstances. Many students, we fear, will only too eagerly attend to this chapter.

Trafalgar. Ballad for chorus and orchestra. Words by Francis T. Palgrave. Music by Hugh Blair.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

The battle of Trafalgar took place on October 21, 1805, therefore it is with singular appropriateness that in this centenary year Mr. Hugh Blair should have set to music some of the most stirring lines of Palgrave's poem celebrating Nelson's great naval victory. The music is laid out for chorus and orchestra only, and in a manner that is productive of good effect. Chorus singers will find their full declamatory opportunity in the rendering of these stirring strains. The music is full of virility, and moreover it has the merit of being melodious, not difficult to sing, and not spun out as modern works too often are. Mr. Blair's 'Trafalgar' abounds in contrasts—from the strenuous unaccompanied phrase 'England expects every man will do his duty' to the tender music of 'Features that ne'er can be gazed on again till the death pang is o'er.'

This refreshing work, which occupies fifteen minutes in performance, is one that, if we mistake not, will be welcomed by choral societies, not only for its spirited subject-matter and skilled musicianship, but for the healthy character of its strains.

Six Morceaux de Salon. Pour Violon et Piano. By Carl Bohm.

First Steps for the Violin (first position only). By Emil Kreuz, Op. 53. Part I. Violin only. Part II. The pieces for violin with pianoforte accompaniment. (Nos. 65 and 65A of Novello's Music Primers.)

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

Among the present-day writers of music for the violin Carl Bohm holds an enviable position, teachers and amateurs alike regarding him with high esteem for the skilful and delightful solos his resourceful brain and facile pen abundantly provide for them. His latest work, 'Six Morceaux de Salon,' will not only go far towards retaining the affections of his old friends, but will bring him many a new admirer.

With the exception of the last number, the pieces under review are written in various dance rhythms; nevertheless, they are most creditably free from the usual hackneyed type of such things. Thus No. 1—'Rigaudon,'—gives us a solemn, impressive theme (Molto moderato, quasi Adagio), in place of the lively, even skittish little airs often associated with the Rigaudons of the old French composers of the 17th century. Apart, however, from the title—which perchance may cause some surprise—the solo, with its elevated harmonic accompaniment, lends itself to effective solo playing, with a possible good display on the G string.

The Bourrée and Gavotta (Nos. 2 and 3) are more conventional in form, but none the less pleasing. The Gavotta, with its bright, joyous theme may indeed possibly become the favourite of the set. Strong and majestic in character is the Sarabande (No. 4), a piece that requires a somewhat masculine handling to give it its full measure of success. The Valse Etude (No. 5) departs from the usual beaten track of the mere waltz. Skilfully constructed on an arpeggio foundation, the subject-matter furnishes good scope for excellent legato practice. No. 6, a flowing Capriccio Finale, demands nimble fingers for an adequate performance, but young people—for whom these pieces are more especially designed—should give a warm welcome to a pretty strain written in a form in which they have doubtless had many a dry study to practise:

The violin parts—employed only within the compass of the first to third positions—are mostly ably written, and afford almost a maximum of effect with a minimum of effort. The accompaniments, as usual with Herr Böhm's compositions, are always interesting, and with pleasing harmonies well support the soloist.

'First Steps for the Violin' should prove to be a useful instruction book. It comprises a number of easy and progressive studies and a collection of melodious pieces with pianoforte accompaniment. Mr. Kreuz is an experienced teacher and an accomplished musician, and he has embodied in this Primer the results of years of observation of the difficulties met with by beginners. He considers that in instruction books, as a rule, too many difficulties are introduced at each successive step. His course is divided into twenty well defined and graded steps, and the technical instruction is accompanied by explanations of musical theory. But the logic of violin fingering and not that of abstract musical notation governs the gradation of the course. Thus one of the first exercises is in the key of E on the E string, the steps being based upon the idea of finger posture. In this way a pupil is led on to play many scales without difficulty. An attractive speciality of the course is that a pianoforte accompaniment is provided to the exercises. This will be an incentive to home practice. All the valuable exercises and melodious studies so treated are in the instruction book and are also published separately with the pianoforte accompaniment. They are thus available for use as a supplement to other courses.

Beethoven. By Ernest Walker.

[Philip Wellby.]

This little volume, belonging to the 'Music of the Masters' series edited by Mr. Wakeling Dry, concerns, as the title shows, only the master's music. Limited space compels the author to be brief, yet on every page he shows himself well acquainted with Beethoven's art-work. It would be impossible, and indeed unnecessary, to review this thoughtfully written book in detail. We therefore just comment on one or two passages. In the interesting chapter on the pianoforte sonatas, for instance, the author speaks of Op. 2, No. 3 in C, as 'technically very brilliant'; but we are surprised that he does not specially single out the Adagio, which seems to us on a far higher plane than the rest of the work. Again, we cannot agree with his opinion respecting the sonata 'Pathétique' as 'vastly superior' to that in C minor, Op. 10, No. 1. But after all there is truth in the old proverb, Quot homines, tot sententiae. Attention, by-the-way, is called to the thematic similarity between the opening notes of the first three movements of Op. 106. But surely the fugue theme in the Finale might also have been included. In referring to Beethoven's music as a whole, Dr. Walker touches on the 'burning question' of the 'meaning' of instrumental music. He thinks it highly probable that all the master's statements recorded by the friends of Beethoven were 'mere jokes.' With this we cannot agree, although we feel sure that the composer would have looked with contempt on some of the 'meanings' assigned by various writers to many of his works. Neither do we think his remark to Charles Neate, re always working to a picture in his mind, 'cryptic,' 'difficult' to understand. There is a 'Chronological Table of Ludwig van Beethoven's Life,' but even for a small volume too brief, and referring principally to some works, their completion, production, or publication.

Declining now, the Sun's bright Wheel. Lo, now the Shades of Night are swiftly fading. Come, Holy Ghost. English words by the Rev. John Anketell. Music by Horatio Parker. Op. 58.

Two little songs: The Lark. The Bumble-Bee. Words by Alice Herbert. Music by John Pointer.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

So many modern sacred songs have a secular character that it is satisfactory to come across these three legitimate examples by Professor Horatio Parker, which are instinct with nobility and reverent feeling. The original Latin words of 'Declining now' are by Charles Coffin; they are taken from the Paris Breviary of 1735, and their dignity and depth of sentiment are echoed in the broad, musical phrases to which they are allied. This song is designed for a baritone voice, but 'Lo, now the shades' is written for a contralto. The text is a solemn prayer for pardon, protection and peace, and the music is distinctly impressive. 'Come, Holy Ghost' is similar in sentiment, but is laid out for a soprano voice, and affords a fine opportunity for legato singing. These songs may be specially recommended to those who sing at organ recitals given in churches.

Mr. Pointer's 'Two little songs' are delightfully gay and dainty little ditties for a soprano voice; moreover, they are as clever as they are pretty.

ASSOCIATION OF MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

The Association, which was formed in May 1904, held its first annual Conference on June 27 at Messrs. Broadwood's King's Room, Conduit Street. At the morning session there was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen associated with between thirty and forty Festivals. Lady Mary Forbes-Trefusis presided. It was stated that 244 subscriptions and a donation of £10 had been received. The officers, Lady Forbes-Trefusis as Chairman, Miss Wakefield and Dr. McNaught as Hon. Secs., and Mr. W. H. Leslie as Treasurer, were re-elected, and it was decided that they were to be regarded as an Executive Committee with power to co-opt not more than two other members of the Association. We understand that Mr. Fuller-Maitland has consented to join as one of the co-opted members.

In the course of a short discussion on the business of the Association attention was drawn to a large map starred to show places in England where competitions were held. The most noteworthy feature was the concentration of a number of Festivals in the North-Western corner of England.

Mr. Fowler (Bristol) asked why Welsh competitions were not noticed on the Association lists, and it was stated that although the idea of competitions had been adopted from the Welsh, the lines of Eisteddfodau were generally different from the English Festivals, and there had been no disposition shown by the Welsh to join the Association.

Miss Wakefield then read a paper on 'How this Association can enhance the value of the musical competition festival movement. What is the hindrance to music in England?' It was impossible to lay down hard and fast rules for the conduct of Festivals, because the circumstances of districts differed considerably. Broadly, the scheme should include (1) a plain-sailing choral work, (2) a madrigal, (3) a male-voice part-song, (4) a female-voice part-song, and 'sight-singing for all and above all' and always with words at first sight. In addition to the above there should be, say, three junior classes—(1) a unison song or a round, (2) a two-part song, and (3) again sight-singing. As to the 'hindrance to music in England,' it consisted of the want of serious purpose on the part of the general public. The drawing-room view of music is paramount in England. She looked to the competition festival promoters to improve the outlook and to stifle all that tends towards want of thoroughness. 'Every nerve must be strained, every purpose rendered purposeful to the fullest extent possible, for so, and so only, may we hope to remove an artistic reproach of which we hardly seem aware.'

Mr. Plunkett Greene, in opening a discussion, deplored the prevailing lack of seriousness in musical study. No doubt great strides had been made in recent years, and much of this progress was due to the movement initiated by Miss Wakefield. A big point in the whole matter was the professional singer. What songs were in demand? Unfortunately the wrong sort. The professional singer and the publisher naturally gave way to this demand, and so fed and accentuated the appetite. A vicious circle was created. The only remedy was to alter the demand, and it was here that this powerful Association could assist. He besought the promoters of these gatherings to do all they could to create a demand for the best kind of music, and the professional singer would very gladly follow with the supply.

Dr. McNaught pointed out that so far as children's sight-singing was concerned insistence on words at sight all through would call for a serious revision and limitation of the purely musical cultivation of the ear and mind found quite possible when the sol-fa syllables were freely employed. No doubt sol-fa was too exclusively used in schools, but the remedy was not to abolish it but to endeavour to use it rationally. It would be a considerable advantage if the Association could standardize the tests for children's competitions. Dr. Coward stated his agreement with Dr. McNaught. Mr. W. H. Leslie said that, notwithstanding all that had been done for the last generation, village sight-singing was a failure. Sol-fa was not sight-reading, but a thing of itself. He did not say the syllables must not be used, but that from the first the names should be thought, not uttered.

Mr. Henry J. Wood, who had promised a paper on 'Voice Production in Choral Classes,' was unable to be present. His topic however was dealt with by Dr. Coward, who stated his belief that there were splendid voices all over the Kingdom waiting proper methods of development. A choir could never rise above its conductor. He proceeded to give a number of practical hints as to how to secure unity of vowel and attack, &c. One of the most important ideas ventilated was that it was the duty of a conductor to conserve the voices of his choir and not to wear them out.

Mr. James Bates, of the London School for Choristers, then read a paper on 'The Cultivation of the Child's Voice.' Methods of securing pure, sweet tone, purity of vowel production, flexibility, and proper breathing were described and admirably illustrated by eight boys. A full report of this paper appears in the August issue of The School Music Review. A discussion followed, in which Mr. E. T. Cook (Worcester) and others took part.

The next item was a paper on 'Various aspects and details of Music Competitions,' read by Dr. McNaught. The possible relations of the Association with Welsh Eisteddfodau, the French Orpheonistes, and the Brass Band movement were discussed. Special care was called for in dealing with school teachers. We must have sympathy with their reluctance to jeopardise their professional reputations. What we had to make plain was that the Festivals were designed to help school teachers by giving importance and recognition to their work. The movement had been the means of exhibiting the wonderful skill of many school teachers in the matter of training children's voices and in teaching sight-singing. Dr. McNaught then went on to speak of boys' clubs, girls' clubs, the inclusion of vocal soloists, church choirs, accompanists, 'own-choice' pieces, metronome rates and forms of prizes. As to combined performance of big works, it was important to take care that this section of the programme did not overwhelm the cultivation of refined and tasteful performance of glees, madrigals and part-songs, which were perfect forms in their way.

Lady Winefride Cary-Elwes (Brigg) gave an interesting account of her experiences and difficulties. They had made the children's sight-singing an important feature at Brigg, and for this purpose had dropped other classes. She would like to have sight-tests uniform throughout the country. Vocal solos were found popular. One difficulty was the form of prizes. People got tired of having certificates.

The Hon. Norah Dawnay (Northampton) agreed that certificates soon became stale as rewards, an experience confirmed by Miss Egerton (York). Miss Wakefield said that there was nothing else to suggest but cups and banners, and Mrs. Mansel (Mid-Somerset) expressed the difficulty she had over prizes. The subject was evidently one that had given trouble all round. In the end a small sub-committee was appointed to inquire into the matter and report.

After an interval for luncheon, Dr. Somervell read a paper on 'The Educational value of Music.' He observed that music, like all other art, made a double appeal—viz., to the sense and to the intellect. With children no appeal was possible through the intellect, the nearest approach to this was where we try to teach children to read music. This matter was well looked after generally at competitions. But with regard to the appeal to the senses there was great scope for improvement. The child's sub-consciousness was used to establish habits of cleanliness and for the inculcating of morals, but little use was made of it in instilling a right and beautiful outlook on Art. 'We none of us feel it would not matter if children had an occasional evening off in a public house, nor should we care to see them enter for a spitting competition in the street; but we are willing to allow our children to hear the best, the mediocre, or the worst music, and are indifferent to the effect the hotch-potch makes on their minds.' The only way to inculcate a love of beauty into children was to give them the best and only the best. If we left a child with a beautiful picture in his bedroom he would soon assimilate it. If the child could reproduce or re-create that picture for himself it would be a better and surer way of assimilating. But this would mean years of drudgery. The case of music was different. Here the child could re-create for himself from the time he was in the cradle. Intellectual appreciation was a late development. We found this means of culture neglected. We laid no foundation and were thus disheartened at the results, expressed in a national flouting of Art. In choosing music for children's competitions we should inquire whether the song chosen was one that the child could remember all his life. The nearest approach to part-singing tolerable should take the form of rounds and catches. Music for two or three equal voices was rare, and when it was found it was generally second-rate stuff. Unison national songs—say six—should be chosen as tests. The neglected children of the rich deserved attention. Preparatory schools also generally neglected music, but splendid work was being done in our public schools. Music might help us through some of our difficulties as a nation by 'awakening our lost power of imagination and restoring our sense of the beautiful, which had been deliberately killed by the so-called moral teaching of the Puritans.'

In the discussion that followed, Mrs. Commeline (Berks, Bucks, and Oxon. Festival) dwelt on the village aspect of the movement, and Mrs. Newmarch, in an interesting speech, said that she hoped it would be to the emotional and not to the ethical or too greatly to the intellectual aspects that they would look for results.

The Hon. Maud Stanley spoke of working girls' clubs and the advantage of music study to their members. The Hon. Robert Spencer (Northampton), Lady Forbes-Trefusis, and others spoke.

Dr. McNaught remarked that a good deal had been said that day that might lead listeners to think that little or nothing in the way of sight-singing was accomplished in schools in the country generally. It would be bad if only unison songs were cultivated in all schools. A great means of musical culture for the senior classes would be thrown away. No doubt ordinary three-part music must be used with caution.

Dr. Somervell said that the fact that all the children sing high and low notes was the saving grace of rounds.

Mr. W. H. Leslie read a paper on 'The people who Listen.' It was recently stated by a leading musician that 'a living art of music should consist of three factors, The composer, the executant, and the critic.' But this left out a very large class, namely, the people who listen. It was remarkable that notwithstanding the enormous spread of musical education there was not any corresponding increase in the desire to listen. This was owing somewhat to the fact that almost all musical instruction was designed to promote executive skill. He considered that it was quite possible to train listeners. When we reflected on the marvellous power of the ear to differentiate sounds in daily life, could we not assume that musical sounds could be made quite as easy to distinguish? The professional musician bound by the law of supply and demand might have to do things he would rather not do, but the amateurs, who controlled Festival competitions, were not so fettered. It was in their power to do a great deal towards educating the demand.

Miss Wakefield read a paper on 'Music for Competition Festivals.' She deprecated the choice of music designed to show off 'points' and suggesting great exaggerations of force. The speciality of the Festival movement she had begun at Kendal was the idea of having music for the combined choirs. This was the element that made for duration.

Miss Mary Egerton (York), in a racy speech, spoke of the difficulty of getting orchestras. Well-prepared choral performances were often ruined by a local orchestra. Could not English composers help musical education by writing choral ballads that had no 'wire entanglements'? Mrs. Mansel (Mid-Somerset), and Mrs. Massingberd (Spilsby), also spoke.

Mrs. Newmarch said that in the matter of finding new works the field of Russian choral music had been ignored. There was an enormous quantity of choral music in Russia.

The last paper to be read was by Canon Gorton (Morecambe) on 'The Financial Position of Competitions.' In Canon Gorton's absence the paper was read by Dr. McNaught. The growth and manner of dealing with the Morecambe Competition were the chief points in the paper. In 1892 the total receipts were £70. This year the receipts were £1,366. The paper concluded with an acknowledgment of the indebtedness of the Festival to the late Mr. R. G. W. Howson. 'To him and to him alone, our Festival owes its financial success, and to our Executive only in so far as we were ever ready to put our faith in him and to give force to his ideals.'

A discussion followed, and the proceedings closed with a vote of thanks unanimously accorded to Messrs. Broadwood for the use of the hall.

COVENT GARDEN OPERA.

'MADAMA BUTTERFLY.'

The Royal Opera Syndicate is often accused of want of enterprise in not producing new works, but it must be admitted that the history of the past justifies caution. Signor Puccini's 'Madama Butterfly'—performed for the first time in England on July 10—promises, however, to prove an exception to the rule, for not only was Covent Garden well filled on the first night, but the subsequent performances attracted crowded audiences. This success is undoubtedly due in large measure to the libretto being based upon Mr. Belasco's dramatised version of a story by the American writer Mr. John L. Long, which was introduced to England at the Duke of York's theatre in April, 1900. Signori L. Illica and G. Giacosa, the operatic librettists, have expanded Mr. Belasco's one-act play into two acts—practically into three, as the curtain is dropped between the first and second sections of the second portion.

The first act, which is very animated and picturesque, opens with Goro, the marriage-broker, showing Pinkerton, a lieutenant in the American Navy, the Japanese home provided for his honeymoon with Madama Butterfly, a geisha. Anon Sharpless, the American Ambassador, arrives to be present at Pinkerton's wedding, and there ensues a well-written duet, having a realistic and unique climax in Pinkerton asking his friend to take a whisky and soda! The arrival of Butterfly and her relations, and the solemnisation of the marriage in Japanese fashion, is set to extremely vivacious music and, after the guests have departed, the duet between Butterfly and Pinkerton contains the strongest and most fascinating music Signor Puccini has hitherto given us. Throughout the act the use of the old modes to give local colour is remarkably clever, and their characteristic intervals are so deftly blended with modern harmonies and Italian phraseology that no incongruity is felt.

The second portion of the opera takes place in the interior of Butterfly's house. Pinkerton has been absent for three years, and Suzuki, Butterfly's faithful maid, expresses her doubts of Pinkerton's constancy. But Butterfly, in a finely-written song 'Mi bel di,' scouts the idea of his faithlessness. Pinkerton, however, has married an American wife, and sends his friend Sharpless to break the news to Butterfly. But her joy on hearing that Pinkerton is returning is so great that Sharpless has not the courage to tell her the real purport of his visit, and when he has gone Butterfly and Suzuki set to work to deck the room with flowers, singing the meanwhile a most charming duet. Finally, when all has been arranged, Butterfly takes up a position at the window with her child and servant to watch for Pinkerton's arrival. As the shadows fade into the darkness of night a curious intermezzo—written for strings, and voices singing in bouches fermées tones—is heard, and on this pathetic scene the curtain falls. When it rises again dawn is breaking. Butterfly is still watching, but the child and servant have fallen asleep. Suzuki, waking, persuades Butterfly to carry her child into another room, which she does, singing the while a graceful lullaby. Presently Pinkerton and Sharpless arrive, and beg Suzuki to break the news to her mistress. Pinkerton is stricken with remorse at all the evidences of Butterfly's constancy, and there ensues a remarkably fine trio, the music in this scene being the most powerful in the whole opera. The entrance of Pinkerton's wife and the subsequent scene between the two women has called forth some terse and vivid declamatory music, and Butterfly's farewell song to her child, whom she resigns to Pinkerton's wife before committing suicide, is one of the most beautiful and intensely pathetic utterances of modern Italy.

Regarded from a purely musical point of view the opera is not a great work of art, for it lacks the logical sequence and coherence which distinguish masterpieces. But for all that the music is intensely alive with emotional force, possesses great melodic beauty and significance, and is always appropriate to the situation it illustrates. The work is decidedly stronger than the composer's 'Bohème' in that its tone is more virile, its tenderness more true, and the climaxes built more sequentially and with greater restraint.

Signor Puccini was fortunate in his exponents. Madame Destinn's embodiment of the name-part was as distinguished, although in an entirely different way, as that of Madame Calvé's Carmen. The graceful and sympathetic music was beautifully sung, and histrionically Madame Destinn's great talent as an actress has never been more conspicuous. To have Signor Caruso as Pinkerton was in itself an enormous help towards gaining public favour; and Madame G. Lejeune as Suzuki, Signor Scotti as Sharpless, and Mr. G. Dufriche as Goro sustained their respective parts with a completeness that greatly contributed to the hearty reception of the opera. The ensemble under Signor Campanini's direction was also excellent, and the scenery and mounting most picturesque.

'L' ORACOLO.'

The other novelty of the season was the first performance on any stage, on June 28, of Signor Franco Leoni's music-drama in one act entitled 'L' Oracolo.' This is a musical version of Mr. C. B. Fernald's gruesome one-act play, 'The Cat and the Cherub,' which was first mounted in this country at the Lyric Theatre in 1897. The central figure is Cim-Fou, the keeper of an opium den in China Town, San Francisco, who kills his rival, San-Lui, and is in turn killed by San-Lui's father, Win-Shee, the oracle. Incidentally San-Lui's sweetheart, Ah-Joe, goes mad over the dead body of her lover. As these events are portrayed in fifty minutes, and as there are several minor incidents, it will be surmised that the composer has little opportunity to develop his themes. The characters were well impersonated by Mdle. Donalda appearing as Ah-Joe, M. Dalmores as San-Lui, Signor Scotti and M. Marcoux respectively embodying Cim-Fou and the name part, and minor characters being sustained by Madame Paulin, M. Coteuil and Signor Montecucchi. M. Messenger conducted.

'Don Giovanni' was added to the season's list of operas on July 1, an excellent cast being provided in Mesdames Destinn, Agnes Nicholls and Donalda, with Signori Caruso and Scotti respectively as Ottavio and the Don, and MM. Journet and Giliert severally as Leporello and Mazetto.

Owing to the indisposition of Madame Kirkby Lunn, the name-part of Gluck's 'Orphée' was taken on June 28 by Mdle. Gerville-Réache, a new-comer, with marked success.

MADAME BAUERMEISTER'S FAREWELL.

A memorable event last month was the benefit matinée, on July 12, at Covent Garden Theatre, organized by Madame Melba for the farewell of Madame Bauermeister, who for forty years has constantly assisted in grand opera in many countries, particularly in England, during which time she appeared in so many parts and with such completeness as to earn the title of prima donna of secondary characters.

Madame Bauermeister was born at Hamburg, but settled in this country. Through the interest of Madame Tietjens she became a student at the Royal Academy of Music, where she obtained the King's Scholarship. The programme on July 12 consisted of the two first acts of 'Roméo et Juliette,' and the third act of 'La Bohème,' Madame Melba appearing in both excerpts, and the cast of the former including Madame Bauermeister (as the Nurse), MM. Dalmores and Gilibert, G. Dufriche and Sevelhach, and that of the latter comprising Miss Parkina and Signori Caruso and Scotti. M. Messenger and Signor Campanini were the conductors. The house was packed by a sympathetic audience, and after the second act of Gounod's work, the gifted artist, surrounded by floral tributes from friends, bade the audience good-bye in a voice vibrating with emotion.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The students of the Royal Academy of Music gave an interesting concert on June 26 at Queen's Hall. Particular talent was shown by Mr. Rowsby Woof in Sir Alexander Mackenzie's too seldom heard 'Pibroch' (Op. 42) for violin; and by Miss Irene Scharrer in Liszt's pianoforte concerto in E flat. Much skill was also shown by Mr. Kenneth Park as a violinist in his interpretation of Max Bruch's 'Kol Nidrei,' and Miss Alice W. Hooke gave a good account of César Franck's 'Variations Symphoniques' for pianoforte. A prominent feature of the concert was the production of a setting by Mr. Hubert C. Bath (student) for female voices and orchestra of Mrs. Hemans' poem 'Psyche's Departure.' The music is somewhat lacking in contrast and climax, but it is cleverly written and distinctly shows talent for composition. The solos were sung by the Misses Caroline Hatchard and Zélie Pelluet, the quartet parts being entrusted to the Misses I. Rawlins, A. Parker, E. Hill and C. Dugard. Some songs were also admirably rendered by Miss Gwladys Roberts, Miss Katherine Malone and Mr. David Evans. Sir Alexander conducted with his usual skill and readiness of resource.

Owing to Queen's Hall being in the hands of painters and decorators the annual prize-giving was held at Covent Garden Theatre, the choir being placed in the stalls and Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducting from the middle of the front row, the orchestra being in the 'well.' The arrangement was a little awkward, but apparently it was the best that could be made. The programme was brief, consisting of two sections from Mr. Edward German's 'Welsh Rhapsody' and Mr. Hubert Bath's 'Psyche's Departure,' above mentioned.

Sir Alexander's address was couched in the usual happy vein. He commenced by humorously congratulating the choir on having sung at Covent Garden, and slyly hinted that they need not mention the opera. If he were asked to say which opera the afternoon's performance most represented he should be inclined to say 'L' Oracolo,' owing to the Chinese-like reversal of ordinary procedure, the singers occupying the stalls, and the customarily silent conductor being the chief soloist. There had been no troubles, alarms, or excursions to disturb the work of the Academy in the past year, and he was happy to be able to say that Lord Shaftesbury had joined the directorate and Mr. C. T. D. Crews the Committee of Management. Speaking of the progress of the School, Sir Alexander referred to two remarkable productions, 'Dross,' by Mr. Paul Corder, and 'The house of shadows,' by Miss Lomax, and to the unique opportunity now offered to British women composers by Miss Josephine Troup's five years' scholarship. Another new scholarship was for two years, to alternate with the Royal College of Music, in memory of Lilian Eldée. This was not to be competed for, but conferred at the discretion of the appointed committee. The prizes and certificates were then distributed by Princess Henry of Battenberg, and included the award of the Dove prize, for general excellence, to Mr. Benjamin J. Dale, and the Worshipful Company of Musicians' medal for the most distinguished student in the Academy, conferred upon Mr. York Bowen.

The following awards have recently been made: Swansea Eisteddfod Prize (all voices) to David Brazell (Pwll-Llanelly); Parepa-Rosa Prize (tenors) to John Bardsley (Manchester);

Walter Macfarren Gold Medals (pianoforte playing) to Margaret Bennett and Arnold E. T. Bax; Schloesser Prize (accompanying) to Eleanor C. Rudall (London); Frederick Westlake Prize (pianoforte) to Hubert Bath (Barnstaple); Hannah FitzRoy Prize (violin playing) to Rowsby Woof (Iron Bridge, Salop); Charlotte Walters Prizes (elocution) to Zelpa Mullett and Constance Dugard (London); Julia Leney Prize (harp playing) to Hilda M. Hine (Devonport); the Maas Memorial Prize (tenors) to John Bardsley (Manchester); the Melba Prizes (soprano and contralto voices) to Caroline Hatchard (Portsmouth) and Verena Fancourt Mutter (London).

PATRON'S CONCERT.

The fourth concert of the Palmer Patron's Fund took place at Queen's Hall on June 29. Sixty compositions had been sent in, from which the committee had selected works by seven composers. The most satisfactory of these was a Suite in D for full orchestra, by Mr. Haydn Wood. This consists of three movements: a flowing and rationally harmonized Andante con moto; a set of six extremely interesting and well-contrasted variations on an original theme in B minor; and a vivacious polonaise. The composition is pervaded by a sanity, resource and sense of climax in the right place that entitles it to be heard in our concert rooms. Next in order of successful achievement of purpose was a suite for small orchestra by Mr. Harry Farjeon. The composer has taken for his poetic basis Hans Andersen's fairy tales, 'The gallant tin soldier,' 'The nightingale,' 'The little mermaid,' and 'Little Klaus and big Klaus,' which have inspired him to write attractive music possessing many passages of sly humour. Amateur orchestral societies should make early acquaintance with this suite. If the other works were less satisfactory they all bore witness to artistic purpose and earnest intention, and failed rather from vaulting ambition than humbleness of purpose. A scene for voice, recitation and orchestra entitled 'Ulla, or the Adjurant,' by Mr. Hubert Bath, proved a sincere attempt, but a moderate achievement. 'Variations for pianoforte and orchestra' (the solo part played by the composer) on Dibdin's song 'Tom Bowling,' by Mr. Frank Tapp, are well-written, but failed to hold the attention in spite of the unexpected experiences to which 'Tom' is submitted. Speaking generally the compositions showed an advance on those performed at the previous concerts, and there can be little doubt that the Fund is exerting a salutary influence in encouraging the production of music of artistic design. Sir Charles Stanford directed the performance of Mr. Tapp's work, but the others were conducted by their respective composers.

London Concerts.

ORIANA MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

The desirability of keeping alive and promoting a taste for music, particularly English, of the 16th and 17th centuries is so great that the advent of a society founded with this object is to be warmly welcomed. The Oriana Society, conducted by Mr. Charles Kennedy Scott and formed about a year ago in connection with the Leighton House scheme, gave its initial concert on July 4 at Portman Rooms. The choir now comprises about forty members, but it is proposed to increase this number to eighty, and applications will be welcomed by the Honorary Secretary, Mr. C. L. Stocks, Leighton House, Holland Park.

Much might easily be written concerning the beauties and peculiarities of the madrigals, ballets, rounds, and ayres by John Benet, Wilbye, William Lawes, Morley, Bateson, and Weekes, which were sung on this occasion, but the only satisfactory way to appreciate duly this old-world music is either to take part in its performance or to listen to it frequently. Modern ears unaccustomed to the influence of the old modes miss the emotional intensity of later harmony, but familiarity with the music in which our forefathers excelled reveals much that is fresh and consequently refreshing. The beauties of this true vocal part-music were admirably set forth by the choir, the delicacy with which soft passages were rendered in particular attesting to the musical perception of the choristers and the skilfulness of their training. The soloists were Miss Cordelia Grylls, Mrs. Kennedy Scott, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, and instrumental music was contributed by Miss Grace Sunderland, Messrs. Frank Thistleton, Ivor James, and Aldebert Allen.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The pupils of the operatic class at the Guildhall School of Music gave witness of their ability and the skill of their teachers at performances in the theatre of the Institute on July 13 and 14. The programme commenced with the second and third acts from Gounod's 'Romeo and Juliet,' in which the parts of the 'cross-star'd lovers' were meritoriously impersonated by Mr. Louis van Hes and Miss Maud Wilby. This was followed by the second act from 'Faust,' Miss E. Barwell-Holbrook singing with considerable charm as Marguerite, and Mr. E. Henry Lewis doing well as Faust. Each evening concluded with a vivacious interpretation of Giltbert and Sullivan's merry burlesque 'Trial by Jury,' Miss Phyllis Stevenson showing dramatic talent as the Plaintiff, and the Judge being divertingly impersonated by Mr. Sidney Stern, who had previously appeared as the Friar in 'Romeo' and Mephisto in 'Faust.' M. Georges Jacobi, director of the operatic class, conducted, and Mr. B. Soutten discharged the duties of stage-manager.

RECITALS.

Record should be made of a pianoforte recital given by Master Cecil Baumer on July 1 at the Salle Erard, for the lad played with a fluency and intelligence that should enable him in future years to take a prominent position in his art.

Miss Lita de Klint, a Swedish lady, gave a vocal recital at Steinway Hall on July 1. Her singing was artistic, but she gave most pleasure by her renderings of Swedish folk-songs.

Miss E. Leginska, sometime a pupil of M. Leschetitzky, showed, at her recital at Bechstein Hall on July 3, that she is progressing in her art, and she manifestly gave much pleasure to her listeners.

Miss Amely Heller, a violinist aged fifteen, daughter of Chevalier Hermann Heller, Imperial Councillor of Austria, and editor of the Mährisch-schlesischer Korrespondent, made her first appearance in England on July 3 at the Royal Society of British Artists. If scarcely entitled to be called a prodigy, Miss Heller showed by her playing in Wieniawski's Concerto in D and smaller pieces that she is exceptionally gifted, not only with rare executive facility at her age, but with musical intuition and sympathetic and emotional temperament which should carry her far in her career. It is interesting to note that she is a relative of the late Stephen Heller.

Mischa Elman concluded—at Queen's Hall, on July 6—his recent remarkable series of violin recitals, when, in association with Miss Adela Verne, he played Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' sonata. If, as might almost be expected, his reading was lacking in virility, it possessed individuality of an attractive kind, and technically it was a marvellous performance for a boy of fourteen.

Miss Vivien Chartres, who made her début at Queen's Hall on May 15, gave her first violin recital at Bechstein Hall on July 13, when she played with extraordinary executive skill for a child (said to be nine years of age) Bach's Chaconne and other works of an exacting nature.

Miscellaneous.

The distribution of medals, prizes and certificates to the successful students of the London Academy of Music took place at St. George's Hall on July 22 before a crowded audience of friends and students. There were over 150 recipients of rewards in the various branches of the Academy (among which, by-the-way, elocution is made an important feature), the distributor being Mrs. Yorke Trotter. A short concert was given previous to the distribution, the orchestra of the Academy, directed by Mr. René Ortmans, and the Ladies' Choir, conducted by Madame Edith Hands, testifying especially to the efficient character of teaching in the Institution.

As a result of the competitive examination for open scholarships and exhibitions just held at Trinity College of Music, London, the following awards have been made: Scholarships: Margaret A. B. Richardson (Pianoforte, three years); Ethel R. Izard (Violin, one year). Exhibitions: Laura Deavin-Cafyn, Harry A. Gray, Gladys E. Hamilton, Ethel M. Jackson, Hannah Smith. Free tuition (one year): Violet Branson, Walter G. Britton (Violoncello); Dorothy M. G. Constable, Bertha Tomlin (Pianoforte); Rachie Smith, Evelyn Stewart (Violin); Maud M. Pilcher (Singing). In some cases the award includes part maintenance.

The Manchester and District Nonconformist Choir Union, a body comprising ninety-five choirs and 2,000 choralsists, held its annual competition at Belle Vue on July 15. Twenty-eight soloists and nine choirs competed. Moss Side Baptist (Mr. J. W. Turner), Gravel Lane Wesleyan (Mr. W. D. Bailey), Bradford Primitive Methodist (Mr. J. S. Collinge), gained first prizes in various sections. The adjudicators were Dr. McNaught and Dr. Keighley. The annual Festival of the Union will be held in the Free Trade Hall on October 25. Six hundred singers will perform Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and a miscellaneous selection under Dr. Keighley.

The thirty-third annual Festival of the London Sunday School Choir was held at the Crystal Palace on July 5. Concerts were given by the Junior Festival Choir, consisting of 5,000 voices, conducted by Mr. J. Wellard Matthews, Mr. Phillip H. Kessel being at the organ, and the Festival Choir of 4,000 voices, conducted by Mr. W. Whiteman, the organist being Mr. Horace G. Holmes. The London Sunday School Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Wesley Hammet, took part in the second concert. Dr. Warwick Jordan adjudicated at the choral competitions, in which the Willesden Choir (Mr. J. S. Waddell) were the winners.

At the Annual General Meeting of the Philharmonic Society, held on July 8 at Queen's Hall, the following gentlemen were elected Hon. Directors for next season's concerts: Mr. Francesco Berger, Mr. Oscar Beringer, Dr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Ernest Ford, Mr. Charles Gardner, Mr. Edward German, and Sir Hubert Parry, Bart.

The proprietors of The Gentlewoman offer a prize of £25 for an orchestral composition by a lady. All competitors must be British or Colonial born or naturalised subjects. The conditions of the prize may be obtained from the office of The Gentlewoman, Long Acre.

Mr. John Northcott, formerly musical and dramatic critic of The Daily Chronicle, died, we regret to record, at 179, Adelaide Road, N.W., on June 30. He was much respected for his kindly nature and honest criticism.

Mr. Joseph Ivey has been appointed conductor of the Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society, in succession to Mr. William Shakespeare, who has resigned that office.

Mr. Robert Taylor has been re-elected, for the thirty-sixth time, conductor of the Sacred Harmonic Society, Brighton.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

DURBAN.—The Berea Choral Society gave its first concert this season at the Town Hall on June 10, when Haydn's 'Creation' was performed. The solo vocalists were Miss Ada Forrest, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. S. O. Simpson. Mr. R. H. Macdonald, the Borough organist, conducted. The other works announced for performance this season are Parry's 'Judith,' 'The Battle of the Baltic' (Stanford), and 'The flag of England' (Bridge), the last two works to be given on Trafalgar Day.

GRAHAMSTOWN (S. AFRICA).—Mrs. W. Deane (who, as Miss Grace Batchelder, was formerly a scholar at the Royal College of Music) has been giving a series of lecture-recitals on 'Chopin' at various schools in this town. Mrs. Deane gave an admirable account of the composer's life, works and influence on pianoforte music and, among other pieces, played as illustrations the Waltz in A flat, the Sonata in B flat minor, Nocturne in D flat, and Ballade in A flat. Mrs. Deane is to be congratulated on the excellent educational work she is doing, as is also her husband, who has been for twelve years organist of the Cathedral, and has recently been elected an Honorary Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

HULL.—A choir Festival of the Rural Deanery of Howden was held at Howden Parish Church, on July 12, when above 300 members of the various choirs of the district, including Howden, Hessele, Estrington, Brough, Ferriby and Willerby were present. Dr. Brewer's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis and Woodward's anthem 'The radiant morn' were sung. The choirs had been well trained by the organist of Hessele parish church, Mr. Philip Chignell, who conducted, whilst Mr. Pilling, of Ferriby, presided at the organ.

SPILSBY.—A performance of Brahms's Requiem was given in Spilsby Parish Church on July 4. The local choir of about thirty voices, which was astonishingly good in so difficult a work, furnished commendable evidence of the success of musical training due to the competitions which have of late years taken such firm root in East Lincolnshire. Mrs. Massingberd, of Gunby Hall, who conducted the choir, may well be congratulated on the result of what must have been a very careful and arduous preparation. The solos were adequately taken by Mr. Talbot and Mrs. Montgomery, and Dr. G. J. Bennett, of Lincoln Cathedral, presided at the organ.

WELLINGTON, (N. Z.).—The first concert of the Wellington Choral Society was given in the Town Hall on Tuesday, June 13, under the direction of Mr. J. Maughan Barnett, with much success. The programme comprised Gade's melodious cantata, 'The Crusaders,' Liza Lehmann's song-cycle 'In a Persian Garden,' and Eaton Faning's 'Song of the Vikings,' the soloists being Miss Amy Murphy, Miss Lloyd Hassell, Mr. Frank Graham, and Mr. A. S. Ballance. The chorus, orchestra and soloists alike acquitted themselves admirably; and Mr. Maughan Barnett skilfully played the pianoforte accompaniment to the song-cycle.

Answers to Correspondents.

H. S.—As the question of the speed of Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C sharp minor has more than once been raised, it seems desirable to settle the point upon what seems to be indisputable authority. When M. Rachmaninoff was in London, in the year 1899, one of Messrs. Novello's assistants personally submitted to the composer a proof of the piece in question. On that occasion M. Rachmaninoff not only inserted crotchet = 72 in that proof by his own hand, but altered one of the chords, saying, as he did so, that that particular chord had always been wrongly printed. Therefore the edition published by Messrs. Novello may be accepted as one that is fully authorized by the composer.

CONVILLE.—For 'cantatas within the power of a small choral society which successfully performed Anderton's "Wreck of the Hesperus" last season," see the following: 'Ode to the North-East Wind' (Alice Mary Smith), 'Young Lochinvar' (Arnott), 'Banner of St. George' (Elgar), 'Revenge' (Stanford), 'May Day' (Macfarren), 'Flag of England' (Bridge), and 'Trafalgar' (Blair).

B. J. S.—You are not the only pupil who has suffered from having studied under a methodless master. The time your new teacher suggests that you should devote to technical work seems rather long, but he probably considers that some drastic measures are necessary. If you have confidence in him, you had better follow out his plan. No doubt he will temper technique with artistry, especially as he says that you have 'the soul for music.' Do not think anything about this or that examination you could 'manage': remain unexamined for the present, at all events.

QUERCUS.—There are no fewer than fifteen Sonatas for Organ and other instruments by Mozart. Of these Sonatas 1 to 11, 13 and 15 are for organ, two violins and bass, while Nos. 12 and 14 are for organ, strings, wind instruments and drum. (2) The Rheinberger piece you inquire about is probably his Suite for organ, violin and violoncello (Op. 149). All the foregoing can be obtained from Messrs. Novello & Co.

VESTA.—For books on the training of boy's voices see Sir George Martin's primer, 'The art of training choir boys' (Novello), and Mr. J. S. Curwen's, 'The boy's voice' (Curwen); for mixed voices try Stainer's 'Choral Society Vocalisation' primer, and Dr. McNaught's 'Hints on choir-training.'

W. T.—A series of articles on 'The organs of England's Town Halls' would largely consist of a succession of specifications, as there would not be much historical information connected therewith; but we thank you for the suggestion, and will keep it in mind.

R. S. N.—'Uriel Acosta' is the subject of an overture by L. Schindeldeisser, and 'The little Haydn' is the title of an opera by G. Cipollini. We cannot trace the remaining works you give. Are they not the titles of books, instead of musical compositions?

GILMOREHELL.—(1) F. L. Ritter's two primers on 'Musical Dictation' (Novello) and Dr. Shinn's 'Elementary Ear Training' (Vincent) will probably meet your requirements. (2) Yes; Dr. Bonavia Hunt's 'Concise History of Music' will doubtless suffice for your purpose.

ORGANIST.—Reckoning from the date of publication, the copyright of a hymn-tune lasts for a period of forty-two years, or the lifetime of the composer plus seven years, whichever is the longer period.

A. F. P.—We have never heard that the use of the Sevenfold Amens is restricted to the visit of a Bishop: if that were so, such strains would in many churches seldom be heard.

S. E. G.—The articles by Mr. W. T. Stuart on 'Voice-training' that have recently been appearing in The School Music Review will shortly be issued in pamphlet form. See also Randegger's 'Singing' primer.

A. C. J.—Three of the four hymns you mention are non-copyright. We cannot trace the hymn beginning 'My God, with transport I embrace.' It does not appear to be in Julian's 'Dictionary of Hymnology.'

A. B. N.—As to the value of your Guamerius violin, submit it to the expert opinion of Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street.

R. B.—The errors in the words of the last chorus of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' have now been corrected in Novello's latest edition—'rereward' for 'reward,' &c.

J. S.—There must be damp to cause rust in the pianoforte. Consult some reliable dealer as to the condition of the instrument.

D. C.—Try the 'Sight-singing studies' (Staff notation) in Books Nos. 29, 42, 53, 69, 82, 91, and 137 of Novello's School Song Books.

H. C. R.—Your copy of Handel's 'Messiah' is not one of the first edition, but Wright's reprint thereof. It is not of any special intrinsic value.

ROBERTUS.—Apply to the Professor for the dates of the lectures.

W. E. R.—Yes, we do 'think it fit to study harmony as well as the pianoforte at the same time.'

T. W. S.—You probably mean Liszt's 'Christus,' not 'Crispus.' The full-score is only of second-hand value.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

“Mr. W. H. Reed, a violinist-member of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, who met with an extremely hearty reception after the first performance of his ‘Suite Venitienne’ at the Promenade Concerts last night, quite defies our criticism by his fearlessness in writing tunes and by the cheerfulness and brightness of his work. For Mr. Reed and his music there is no need of the cheap philosophy which does duty so easily for the ‘poetical basis’ of so much of our young composers’ music. He writes as he feels, evidently; and he writes not only well but sincerely. Small wonder, then, that his suite captivated a very large audience, which recalled him again and again. His suite is not strikingly original. But it is fresh and cheery, unpretentious and clear, and, above all, healthily-minded. . . . In the prearrangement of his ideas Mr. Reed shows almost a master-hand—largely owing, no doubt, to the fact of his being a member of an orchestra; and in as great a degree as is possible his scoring, admirable and rich and full as it is, compensates for a lack of distinct originality in his thematic material. In any case, however, his suite deserves high rank among the novelties that have been produced this season at these admirable concerts.”—The Times.

TECHNIQUE

AND EXPRESSION

IN

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

RUTH

SUITABLE FOR USE IN PLACES OF WORSHIP

WORDS BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

SUITABLE FOR

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventful episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—STAFFORDSHIRE CORRESPONDENT, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City.' . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

OLD ENGLISH
ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs.

KING CONOR

BALLAD

(FOUNDED ON AN OLD IRISH LEGEND)

BY

T. D. SULLIVAN

SET TO MUSIC FOR

BARITONE SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

JOSEPH H. ADAMS

(Op. 21).

PRESS NOTICES.

"It proved an interesting piece of work, well laid out for the voices, and designed with a thorough knowledge of what is necessary for broad effects."—Morning Post.

"The feature of the evening concert was the cantata 'King Conor.' This meritorious work was finely rendered under the direction of the composer."—Daily Chronicle.

"Was a great success."—Lloyd's News.

"The music is picturesque."—Yorkshire Observer.

"Highly acceptable music, modern in idiom, but never extravagantly so."—Musical Times.

"This meritorious work was finely rendered under the direction of the composer."—Musical Opinion.

"We dealt with 'King Conor' long ago, and therefore need only confirm our expressed opinion of the work, which proved to be even more dramatically effective than we anticipated. Choir, band, and conductor did all they knew for the composer, with the result that a finer performance was hardly possible, and Mr. Adams, who received an ovation at the close, had every reason for gratification. Seldom, indeed, has a local composer received the honour of a first production by this great and historic Society. Now it only remains to hope that the Cantata may be heard again. Its merit would certainly justify further hearing."—Birmingham Gazette and Express.

"The impression created was entirely favourable, and the applause was only suspended for a moment as the composer was brought on the platform, to be renewed with double vigour as he bowed again and again in acknowledgment of the compliments showered upon him from all sides."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Mr. Adams's musical setting is continuous, the composer making use of representative themes, which are skilfully handled, most pronounced being the motives standing for King Conor, Christ, and the Dance. The choral portion is never abstruse or overlaid, and is well written for the voices, whilst the orchestration shows a distinct advance in polyphony and picturesqueness from former efforts."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"A most favourable impression was created, the composer being enthusiastically applauded. There is much clever work in 'King Conor,' and Mr. Adams is sincerely to be congratulated upon his achievement."—Birmingham Evening Dispatch.

"Dramatic, scholarly, and effective."—Bristol Mercury.

"The work, a brief, spirited, and musically composition, should find considerable favour at the hands of choral organizations on the outlook for half-night pieces."—Glasgow Evening Times.

"The composer has caught the spirit of the poem in a remarkable way."—Catholic News.

THE ANTHEM BOOK

OF THE

UNITED FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND

ISSUED BY AUTHORITY.

THIS collection contains an adequate supply of material—167 Anthems and setting of Canticles—suited to the needs of choirs and congregations where it is desirable that the music employed should be of a somewhat simple nature; but in order to meet the requirements of choirs and congregations of higher musical attainments the selection includes compositions which present somewhat greater degrees of difficulty. In the preparation of the book great care and attention have been paid to such practical matters as the clear and distinct printing of the words in close proximity to each of the voice parts, when the latter do not move together; the printing of the organ accompaniment on a separate stave whenever that seemed desirable in the interest of clearness; and generally the avoidance of such typographical defects as have been found by experience to interfere with the usefulness of previous books of a similar nature.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER

SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS

FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY, RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, FINAL AMENS, VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER, APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters, and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

NOW READY.

THE COUNCIL SCHOOL HYMN BOOK

A COLLECTION OF HYMNS, WITH PRAYERS, FOR USE IN COUNCIL SCHOOLS

COMPILED TO MEET THE PARTICULAR NEEDS OF THE NEW EDUCATION
AUTHORITIES ESTABLISHED BY THE ACT OF 1902.

In preparing the work the Editors have been guided by two main considerations:—

1. To include only such Hymns as express the central truths of religion and are suitable to the minds and capacities of children.
2. To maintain such a literary standard as will bear comparison with the best books used in the general work of the schools.

The Hymns chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

In regard to the music of The Council School Hymn Book two editions are being prepared: (i) in the ordinary hymnal form for the purposes of accompaniment, and (ii) with the melody only of the tunes, but with the staff and tonic sol-fa notation combined for the use of the children in the schools. No less care has been bestowed upon the music than upon the hymns, all the tunes having been selected for their suitability and attractiveness.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

Price (limp Cover), 6d.

The Editions with Tunes—in the Press.

- a. Words and Tunes with complete Accompaniment, the usual hymnal form.
- b. The Words with the Melody only (staff and tonic sol-fa notations combined), for the use of the children.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

RECENTLY ISSUED.

ADDITIONAL HYMNS WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN OR ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition (in the Press).

Hymns only, Imperial 32mo, Cloth Boards, One Shilling.

Single Specimen copies of the above editions sent post-free to the Clergy and Organists, on application to the Publishers direct, at the following prices: Hymns with Tunes, 2s.; Hymns only, 8d.

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d.; paper, 3d.

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 7s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

INTRODUCTION

AND

ALLEGRO FOR STRINGS (QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 47.)

Full Score, 12s.; Quartet Parts, 4s.; Orchestral Parts, 7s.
Pianoforte Duet Arrangement (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenacity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naive little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

OPINIONS OF THE LONDON AND PROVINCIAL PRESS

ON

A. R. GAUL'S CANTATA
"JOAN OF ARC"

PRODUCED WITH GREAT SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ATHENÆUM.

"An advance on the earlier work, 'The Holy City.' . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and an 'Ave Maria' and the final chorus of the 'Spirit Voices' may be named as really charming."

LONDON FIGARO.

"Bound to be widely taken up, doubtless to attain which the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The 'Ave Maria' is singularly beautiful."

DAILY NEWS.

"Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of choral societies, and likely to become highly popular."

REFEREE.

"Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects."

WESTERN TIMES.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"

THE SHIELDS DAILY NEWS.

"One of the most delightful concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."

LEAMINGTON SPA COURIER.

"St. Paul's Choral Society brought their season to a close with a performance in the Town Hall of 'Joan of Arc.' The cantata, both in verse and music, is essentially fascinating and contains all the elements necessary to make it one of the standard works for performance by musical societies, the choral writing and orchestration being simply charming."

TEWKESBURY REGISTER.

"The Conductor of the Philharmonic Society is to be congratulated on his selection of a Cantata possessing such attractive music as that which goes to make 'Joan of Arc' what it undoubtedly is—viz., the best work I remember having heard in Tewkesbury."

NORWICH DAILY PRESS.

"By the invitation of the Head Mistress of the High School, a large company assembled to hear a performance of 'Joan of Arc.' There is probably no living English composer who has obtained more popularity with provincial choral societies than Mr. A. R. Gaul. His sacred cantata, 'The Holy City,' is more extensively known than any other modern English composition of a similar character, and 'Joan of Arc' has already been successfully performed in London and many of the largest provincial towns. Mr. Gaul's writing is characterised by the most perfectly neat workmanship and spontaneity, combined with a never-failing resource of melodic invention."

CRYSTAL PALACE REPORTER.

"The music throughout is of a very high order, and full of beauty and interest, so much so that it is hardly possible to single out any numbers for special praise. The various movements are widely contrasted in style, in some considerable dramatic power being manifest, but all overflowing with melody, and there is a happy absence of the restlessness of tonality which disfigures so many modern works. The vocal parts, whether for soli or chorus, are written within the range of average vocalists, and are therefore grateful alike to the singers and hearers. The cantata is a credit to English art, . . . one of the most interesting works yet given by the Anerley Society."

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.

"Will further enhance the reputation of the composer of 'The Holy City,' as a writer of bright, melodious, attractive, and musicianly Cantatas."

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON HERALD.

"In 'Joan of Arc,' particularly in the latter part, there are some exquisite passages—some charming descriptive pieces. The lovely 'Hark! thy spirit voices call,' carried one away in the spirit into veritable realms of dreamland, and the chorus, 'Fret not thyself to-day,' is picturesquely beautiful, graceful, and effective."

THE WESTERN NEWS.

"Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall last evening."

THE WESTERN DAILY MERCURY.

"Proved an unqualified success. . . . the bulk of the Cantata is allotted to the chorus. In fact, the choir of this Association has seldom had such a good opportunity for giving their sterling worth a good display."

LEWIS MERCURY.

"Drew forth enthusiastic plaudits. . . . Of the Cantata, as interpreted last evening (in the Town Hall, Leeds, with a band and chorus of 250 performers), it is impossible to speak in terms of anything but praise. Solos and choruses alike are full of melody, while the orchestration is descriptive to a degree. For each of the principal vocalists there is one song that singles itself out, and each received an encore."

HERTS AND CAMBRIDGE REPORTER.

"The theme is one of the most romantic in the pages of history. In the earlier and poetic passages there is something of the charm of Sir Stenardale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The last chorus is set to music which would be not unworthy of the great masters."

LIVERPOOL COURIER.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."

HUDDERSFIELD EXAMINER.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE DAILY CHRONICLE.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."

BRADFORD OBSERVER.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY TIMES.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsmen's greatest production. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form. . . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

MR. ARTHUR WALENN

(BARITONE).

Now Booking for Next Season.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES' "EVERYMAN."

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, RICHMOND, May 3. Of this Concert—The Herald says: "Mr. Arthur Walenn's fine baritone voice was heard to much advantage in the exacting solos for Everyman."

The Surrey Comet: "Mr. Arthur Walenn gave to the character of Everyman the deepest expression and impressiveness, at the same time avoiding that exaggeration which would tempt a singer of less culture."

The Richmond Times: "Of the soloists, the place of honour must certainly be given to Mr. Arthur Walenn, who, as Everyman, had so much to do. It was almost difficult, requiring great variety and expression, to ward off a suspicion of dullness that might otherwise have crept in. In Mr. Walenn's hands nothing of the kind happened; he has a bass voice of very pleasing quality, well under control, and was evidently thoroughly acquainted not only with the music itself, but with the spirit of the work."

South Wales Daily Telegraph: "HIAWATHA" (conducted by the composer).—Mr. Arthur Walenn was heard to real advantage. The first part was full of poetry and imagination, and in the 'Vision' ('True is all Iago tells us') he sang with a dramatic intensity which was little short of a revelation."

Tunbridge Wells Courier: "ELIJAH."—"Mr. Arthur Walenn afforded us an intellectual and musical treat in his embodiment of the idea of the Prophet Elijah. To enact a character of this kind, an arduous duty is imposed on the singer, who not only requires a voice of good power and range, but an artistic insight into the nature of the subject to be dealt with is imperative. That Mr. Walenn fulfilled these attributes is undeniable, and nothing but praise can be accorded him for a really superb delineation of the part."

Liverpool Daily Post: The "MESSIAH" at Liverpool.—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was very successful in sustaining the bass solos, both voice and vocalization being excellent."

A VISIT TO CHRIST'S HOSPITAL.

Newgate Street no longer furnishes a study in contrasts to the observant wayfarer. A new Newgate has arisen on the site of the grim, dungeonic prison, while 'over the way' one may look through the double grille in vain for Bluecoat boys at play. The old buildings of Christ's Hospital have gone, and the place thereof, in its Post Office extension, will soon provide a home for men of letters of a different stamp from such old Blues as Charles Lamb, Samuel Taylor Coleridge, and Leigh Hunt. It is difficult to realize the conditions of London life seven hundred years ago, when the Grey Friars made their abode on the north side of Newgate Street, but we get a that the monastery church—consecrated in 1325 and destroyed in the Great Fire of London—was a magnificent sanctuary, 'one of the grandest in the land': it measured 300 feet in length, 89 feet in breadth, and 64 feet in height, and was an absolute rectangle.

The foundation of Christ's Hospital was largely due to a sermon preached by Bishop Ridley before the boy king, Edward VI., at Westminster, wherein the good prelate 'made a fruitful and Godly exhortation to the riche to be merciful unto the poore, and also moved such as were in auctoritie to travaile by some charitable waye and meane to comfort and relieve them.' This sermon, and 'a subsequent 'rubbing in' at 'an audience' had the desired effect with his Majesty the King, who himself wrote 'a gracious letter' to 'the Maior of London, willing him to call unto him such assistance as he should thinke meete to consult of thys matter for some order to be taken therein.' Bishop Ridley, who practised what he preached, whiff of the sanitary conditions of that time in Stynkyng Lane, a thoroughfare which bordered the property. At the dissolution of the Grey Friars monastery in the reign of Henry VIII. the parishes of St. Nicholas in the Shambles and St. Ewines in Newgate Market were united, and the church was named Christ Church, from which the designation of the School, 'The Religious, Royal, and Ancient Foundation of Christ's Hospital,' is derived. Here it may be mentioned undertook to be 'the King's Messenger unto the Maior in this matter,' with the result that in November, 1552, during the Mayoralty of Sir Richard Dobbs, the House of the Grey Friars became the habitation of the great foundation popularly known as the Bluecoat School—'a Hospital for fatherless children and other poore men's children,' who could there find meat, drink, clothes, lodging, and learning, and 'officers to attende vppon them.' To quote the words placed under a portrait of the aforesaid Maior, Sir Richard Dobbs :

Christes Hospitall erected was a passinge dede of pittie
 What some Sr Richard Dobbs was maior of yis most

THE CHAPEL.

(Photographed specially for this article by Mr. R. J. E. But.)

Amid all the changes that have taken place in the School during the three and a-half centuries of its existence, the dress of the boys has remained practically the same; the small blue worsted cap formerly worn was discarded about fifty years ago, since which time the bare head in and out of doors has been the rule. Concerning the quaint dress of the boys old Stow may be quoted. He says :

On Christmas Day [1552, the year of the foundation], in the afternoon, while the Lord Mayor and Aldermen rode to Paul's, the children of Christ's Hospital stood, from St. Lawrence Lane end in Cheap towards Paul's, all in one livery of russet cotton, three hundred and forty in number; and in Easter next they were in blue at the Spital [i.e. the Spital sermon], and so have continued ever since.

The dress now worn by the boys consists of a blue gown or coat with a narrow red-leather girdle round the waist, clergyman's bands at the neck, black breeches and yellow stockings. The gown has given the 'Bluecoat' designation to the School, by which it is popularly known. It is beyond the scope of this article to give a history of Christ's Hospital. In this connection the reader may be referred to an exhaustive, deeply interesting, and illustrated volume entitled 'Annals of Christ's Hospital' (Methuen, 1901), admirably compiled by the Rev. E. H. Pearce, M.A., vicar of Christ Church, Newgate Street, and himself a distinguished old Blue and Grecian. We may therefore forsake ancient history—but with a recurrence thereto if occasion require—and follow the School to its new home at West Horsham, in Sussex, where for the past three years it has been located, amidst breezy and healthy surroundings.

On arriving at Christ's Hospital station the visitor has no difficulty in observing 'the eruption in red brick,' as the new School buildings have been described; but he has only to walk in and about the walls thereof to become impressed with their imposing effect. On his way to the Great Quadrangle he will pass the 'tuck shop,' a well patronized institution, the profits of which are devoted to the Games' Fund. The main buildings of the Great Quadrangle are the Chapel, Big School (Speech Hall), and the Dining Hall. The first-named has been dedicated as Christ Church in order to preserve the ancient connection of the School with the sanctuary in Newgate Street. It is a spacious edifice accommodating 1,000 persons. Any assertive 'newness' in the Chapel will be toned down as time goes on and as additional decoration is forthcoming. Much has already been done in this direction owing to the generosity of past scholars and Governors of the House. The mosaic work in the chancel is composed of fragments excavated from a site near the Temple of Jerusalem. The organ, built by Mr. Alfred Kirkland and costing £2,000, is also a gift. Here is its specification :

Big School contains the Hill organ, since rebuilt, which formerly stood in the Great Hall of the old buildings in London. Here the School concerts are given and orations delivered on Speech Day. The spacious Dining Hall has accommodation for seating all the 820 boys and the majority of the masters. The oil paintings which adorned the walls of the Great Hall in Newgate Street have been removed to the Horsham Dining Hall. Chief among them is the large picture by Antonio Verrio (1639?—1707), eighty-seven feet in length, and having for its subject the granting of the Charter to the Royal Mathematical School by Charles II. This picture, painted at the instigation of Mr. Pepys, appears in the reproduction of the Pugin-Rowlandson illustration on page 577.

It is a pleasant and interesting experience to join the boys—over 800 in number—and masters at their mid-day meal in this noble Dining Hall. As a preliminary thereto one of the sights of the place is enjoyed—the marshalling and marching in of the boys to the strains of their 'Housey' band, of which we give a photograph. Each 'House' is preceded by its pennant flag, and the boys find their places at the dinner tables in perfect order. Detachments of boys from the 'Houses' march off to discharge the duties of 'trades,' i.e., laying the tables and waiting upon school-fellows. Sitting at the high table on the dais one cannot fail to be impressed with the long rows of boys and the babel of sounds. A Grecian—one of the senior boys who will proceed to one of the Universities—mounts the old pulpit, removed from Newgate Street; a knock from a hammer, and every one stands, a rapid diminuendo of conversation sinking into absolute silence at the second knock of the hammer, and in perfect stillness the Grecian says Grace. Then the hubbub breaks out afresh and no time is lost in attacking the savoury viands provided for those hungry young gentlemen. Without giving the actual menu of this particular day, there can be no hesitation in saying that the present fare is of a very different kind from, and far more nutritive than that provided in the year 1678. Here is the ancient menu for a week, taken from Mr. Pearce's informing 'Annals':

Sunday, noone—boyled beefe and poradge with 5oz. of bread.

att night—Roast mutton [The Public

THE DINING HALL.

(Photographed specially for this article by Mr. R. J. E. But.)

In the London days of the School the masters were non-resident; they had no influence on the out-of-school life of the boys, who, when lessons were done, were left in charge of the Warden and beadles. Some of the masters in London, however, voluntarily helped with games, and by so doing exercised considerable influence on the out-door life of the boys. When the migration to West Horsham took place a very salutary and important change was made whereby a system of Houses was introduced. These Houses are substantial buildings fitted with all modern appliances. The dormitories are models of airiness, cleanliness, and light, as are also the day rooms where the boys prepare their lessons and pass their leisure hours when not in the playing fields. Each House is under the control of two resident

THE REV. A. W. UPCOTT, M.A.,

(Photograph by the Biograph Studio, 109, Regent Street, W.)

House Masters, with one Matron for every two Houses. The boys make their own beds, clean their own shoes and, as already stated, take their turn in waiting on their schoolfellows at meals; thus, as Mr. Robert H. Hamilton, the Secretary to the Head-master, says of a boy's preparation for self-dependence in after life: 'He is, from his entry into the School, bred up in habits of self-protection and self-service . . . and he never feels, nor is he encouraged to feel, that such useful labours are beneath a schoolboy's dignity, with the result that when he goes forth into the world, he is fitted to rough it in almost any climate, and very rarely fails to fall on his feet. He is not pampered. In the old days of the School his joys and privileges were certainly very few, and, even now, with the enormous betterment which has taken place both in his food, his play, and his daily life, he has yet good cause to realize that he is under discipline.' How wise this is, and what a splendid equipment for a boy who has to fight the battle of life.

The houses—sixteen in number—are named after past worthies of Christ's Hospital. Among them are George Peele, the dramatic predecessor of Marlowe and Shakespeare; Middleton, the first Protestant Bishop of Calcutta; Samuel Taylor Coleridge, and his no less famous schoolfellow Charles Lamb, 'the gentle Elia'; Thomas Barnes, The Times editor; and Sir Henry J. S. Maine, eminent as the author of 'Ancient Law.' In going along the cloisters and viewing the buildings it is interesting to find that portions of the old buildings have been removed from London and incorporated with those at West Horsham. Among these links of the past is the stonework of the arches which bridge the eastern and western approaches to the Great Quadrangle, and some of the statues which adorn the several niches provided for their reception. The old iron gates, through which so many thousands in the past peered curiously at the Bluecoat boys in their Newgate Street playground, have very properly found a place at the East Lodge. In addition to the buildings already named, mention must be made of the splendid Science Schools, the Infirmary, the Sanatoria, the Swimming Bath—to visit these confirms the impression that everything possible is being done to promote the health, education, and happiness of the boys committed to the charge of the Head-master and his able assistants. The buildings—estimated to have cost, inclusive of all charges, the sum of £500,000—are from the plans of Sir Aston Webb and Mr. Ingress Bell: the foundation stone was laid on October 23, 1897, by King Edward VII., then Prince of Wales, and the change from London to the country was made in the spring of 1902. The whole estate covers 1,270 acres.

Music has been a recognised subject in the curriculum of Christ's Hospital from the very beginning. A list of officers chosen at the Foundation (in 1552) includes for Musicke,	whose yerely fee was £2 13s. 4d.

The name of the first holder of the office is not known, but Mr. Pearce, in his chapter 'The Music School' (to which we are indebted for much information under this head) is of opinion that John Watson, the 'Teacher to write, whose yerely fee was £3 6s. 8d.,' doubled the part of the 'schoole-Maister for Musicke.'

It does not seem as if the Governors held the profession of music in high repute, if we may judge from a Minute of the Court dated March 8, 1588, which reads thus:

It is agreed by the consent of this Court that from henceforth none of the children harboured and kept in this Hospital shall be put apprenticed to any musyssonar other than such as be blinde, Lame, and not able to be put to other service.

SPEECH DAY AT CHRIST'S HOSPITAL IN THE OLDEN TIME.
(By Pugin and Roelandson, from 'The Microcosm of London.

A Court Minute, passed eleven years later, is much pleasanter reading:

Mr. Sebastian, of Paulls, is appointed to have Hallawaie the younger out of this House to be one of the singing children of the Cathedral Church of Paulls in this Citie.

Who was Mr. Sebastian, of Paulls?

An entry in the Court Book of March, 1606, records:

There is granted to one William Meacocke, one of the singing men in Christ Church the yearly stipend of xls. for ye instructing of diverse of ye children of this house in the art of Musick as Robart Browne, late Blinde (?) deed enjoyed.

A year later, upon Meacocke's promotion to the choir of St. Paul's, John farrant (or Farrant) was appointed, and so much better did he discharge his duties than his predecessors had done that at

of the poor children, and to the intent to encourage skilful teachers to do their best in the instructing them in the Heavenly Science of Music, he was willing for God's service and their advancement to add £12 per annum to the master's stipend, in the hope 'that God will put it in the heart of some good man' to still further increase the £16 to £20. The said master was to 'teach the art of music to 10 or 12 only of the said children' and to 'train them up in knowledge of prick-song'; he had also to instruct them in writing and teach them their catechism; 'and whereas the children in general go to burials, one half of the singing children, at the discretion of the master, must be left behind, that his school may not be empty, 'unless it be a special or double burial.' As no one seems to have come forward with the additional £4, Mr. Dow added it himself

(Photographed specially for this article by Mr. R. J. E. But.)

the end of eighteen months, upon his application for 'a rise,' his salary was doubled! but with the proviso that he Shall alwayes instruct eight of ye children of this house in Musicke and shall accompany ye children of this house to ye Burials of all such persons whereunto ye children of this house shall be required.

We now come to a musical benefactor to the School in the person of Mr. Robert Dow (or Dowe). An indenture dated February 8, 1609, begins by reciting that the Governors of the Hospital 'being desirous that the poor children of the said House might be instructed . . . in the knowledge of pricksongs have lately entertained one John Farrant, being learned in music for that purpose, and have agreed to allow him yearly the sum of foure pounds,' an amount that he (Dow) felt to be very small. It then goes on to refer to good Mr. Dow thus: 'having a pityful commiseration to the master's salary, making it a condition, however, that he should teach three or four of the dozen children 'to play upon an instrument, as upon the Virginalls or Violl, but especially upon the Virginalls, thereby to adorne their voice and make them worthy members both for the Church and the Commonweale'; and 'for the better furtherance thereof the said Robert Dow hath provided and bought two pair of Virginalls and a Bass-Violl and hath set them up within the School-house. The total cost of the 'Virginalls, Violls and Books,' &c., was 'ten pounds six shillings and sixpence. And more thirteen shillings and fourpence for mending and tuning the Organs in Christ Church.' In addition to being present at both services in Christ Church, the singing-master was 'to play the Psalms sung by the people, thereby to keep them in time and tune to the better setting forth of the praise of almighty God.'

In connection with Mr. Dow's generous desire to improve the music-teaching at Christ's Hospital, it may not be without interest to refer to the opinion of one John Howes—for some years the 'Renter, and Gatherer of Legacies' for Christ's Hospital, and moreover the first historian of the Foundation—on the subject of teaching music to children. Writing in the year 1587, in the form of 'A ffamylar & friendly discourse dialogue wyse setting foorth a number of abuses comytted in the governemete of the poore wthin this cittie,' John Howes states the duties which, in his opinion,

Who will deny that worthy John Howes, writing more than three hundred years ago, was in advance of his time on the subject of music-teaching in schools?

To return to Mr. John Farrant, or ffarand—who could not have been the John Farrant, organist successively of Ely, Hereford and Salisbury Cathedrals. He seems not to have pursued the even tenor of his ways. 'Diverse complaintes of y^e ill caryage and behavior,' 'neglecte of his dutie in not singing in y^e church as he ought to doe,' 'outrageous dealinge and misdemeanours in BIG SCHOOL.

(Photographed specially for this article by Mr. R. J. E. Bud.)

it is incumbent on the governors of such institutions to discharge. He says, inter alia :

I also thinck it convenient that the children should learne to singe, to play vpon all sorts of instruments, as to sounde the trumpett, the cornett, the recorder or flute, to play vpon shagbolts, shalmes, & all other instruments that are to be plaid vpon, either wth winde or finger, bycause nature yelds her seuerall gifts and there is an aptnes of conceavinge in some more than in other some, and yett every child apt to learne the one or the other, those qualitties cannot be greatly chargeable because they are the gifts of God in nature, and they are qualitties that every honest minde taketh great pleasure and delight in, and no doubt if the children be well taught, plyde, & followed it wilbe a redy meane to preferre a number of them havinge theis qualitties.

y^e church,' were some of the charges brought against him. He was subsequently 'arrested for debte' and wished to resign his office, not on account of his debts, but 'in regard hee is very hard of hearing and his sight doth decay and his whole body is so weake and feeble.' The Governors granted a pension of £11 per annum in addition to 'fourtie shillings for provision of wood and coles'; 'likewise for his lodging that he should have a little room joyning y^e Kitchin, and y^e Kitchin itselfe to dresse his meate during his life.'

We now come to a very important name in the roll of music-masters of Christ's Hospital.

Mr. Pearce records ('Annals,' p. 140) 'His [Farrant's] successor, Ravenscroft, came and went.' This bare statement has naturally excited the curiosity of Mr. H. B. Dickin, one of the assistant-masters and a former Grecian—he also being greatly interested in the music of the School—with the result that from the Records he discovered that the Christian name of Mr. Ravenscroft was Thomas! and that he held office from 1618 to 1622, by which time he had 'resolved of another course for himself.' The question naturally arises: Was this Thomas Ravenscroft the Ravenscroft? There is very strong evidence whereby this question can be answered in the affirmative. In his well-known Psalter, published in 1621, occurs (twice) a tune by him named 'Christ Hospitall Tune.' This we give in facsimile, in the form, but very slightly reduced, as it appears in the original publication:

Psalm 72. CANTVS. Tbo. Rauens. B. of M.

Ord glue thy Iudgements to the King, therein instruct him well:

And with his sonne that Princely thing, Lord let thy iustice dwell.

Christ Hospitall Tune. TENOR, or Playn song.

Ord glue thy Iudgements to the King, therein instruct him well:

And with his sonne that Princely thing, Lord let thy iustice dwell.

A further instance of the attention given to instrumental music is furnished by a Governors'

Now, as Mr. Dickin has pointed out, 17th century church musicians did not give 'fancy' names to their tunes: therefore what could be more natural than that the music-master of the School should name one of his tunes after the place where he followed his profession? The inference is very strong that the Thomas Ravenscroft, editor of so important a contribution to English church music as 'The Whole Booke of the Psalmes' (1621) and other significant works, and the Thomas Ravenscroft, music-master at Christ's Hospital, should be one and the same person. No biographer of Ravenscroft has, however, drawn attention to this interesting discovery. As Mr. Dickin, with pardonable pride, says: 'We can have no doubt that our Ravenscroft was the Ravenscroft, and that his Psalter was largely compiled in the intervals of teaching "Blues" the elements of Prick-song.'

The close connection that existed for upwards of three centuries between Christ's Hospital and Christ Church, Newgate Street, is shown in a bequest of a Mr. Parker in 1613 whereby the parishioners were enabled to spend £10 per annum in training a 'Blue' to 'serve and be employed in playing of the organs of the said church,' in fact, the founding of an organ scholarship. A Vestry Minute of 1624 throws an interesting light on the manner of carrying out Mr. Parker's intentions:

At a Vestrie holden the xviiith day of January Anno Dni 1624 amongst other things it was ordered that whereas Mr. William Parker about eight years past of his free bounty for the p'petuall maintenance of an Organist in this Church gave Two Hundred poundes in Minute in January, 1684, when it was moved 'That the Musick Master might be oblidge to teach some children upon the Violin, and that once a fortnight on a Wednesday night the boyes see taught might sing (? play) in parts with the organe with as many other children as can be taught to sing in part, which was well liked, and Sir Matthew Andrews said he would give one violin and Esqr. Tench two.'

There is no need to give further details concerning the past music-makings of the School when Mr. Pearce's interesting pages are available. It may however be mentioned that from 1810 to 1844, Robert Glenn, a brother-in-law of Samuel Wesley, was music-master; to him succeeded George Cooper, who held the office from 1844 to his death in 1876; and from that time to the removal to Horsham good work was done by the Rev. George Bennett and Mr. Arthur Fox. As early as 1673 the Great Hall contained an organ built by Dallam. Renatus Harris added a 'chaire-Organ' in 1697, which gave place to the Hill instrument about eighty years ago.

To turn from the past to the present, there can be no doubt that Music at Christ's Hospital is not only in a very healthy condition, but that its potentialities are considerable. This is borne out by the mere fact that, whereas three years ago, when the School was removed to Horsham, only seventeen boys learned the pianoforte, now seventy-seven boys are taking lessons, in addition to the fourteen boys who are studying the organ or violin. Is not this great increase, in so short a time as three years, full of significance? It is certainly a circumstance full of encouragement to all concerned. The Music Staff is constituted as follows:

ORGANIST AND DIRECTOR OF MUSIC.

MR. ROBERT WILKINSON, Mus.B. (Oxon.), F.R.C.O., and formerly a student at the Royal College of Music. He was appointed when the School was removed from London to West Horsham in 1902.

MR. H. B. DICKIN, M.A. (Cantab.). A former Grecian.

MR. A. E. BEVAN, A.R.C.M. A pupil of the late Mr. Dannreuther at the Royal College of Music.

MR. W. JACKSON BYLES (Violin). A former student of and leader of the orchestra at the Royal College of Music.

MR. H. BAMPTON. Bandmaster.

It is satisfactory to learn that vocal music receives due attention. Mr. Wilkinson tells us that 'all boys in the 2nd and 3rd Forms have to attend singing classes during school hours, as do also the boys in the Preparatory School, and that every boy's voice is tested upon his entering the School.'

A MEMBER OF THE BAND.

(Photographed specially for this article by Mr. R. J. E. Bud.)

The Chapel Choir consists of 112 voices, including 11 masters, while the Concert Choir is slightly larger. Weekly practices are held as follows:

Monday —Altos.	Thursday —Trebles.
Tuesday —Trebles.	Friday —Full.
Wednesday—Tenors and Basses.	Saturday —Probationers.

these in addition to extra practices for concerts as occasion requires.

The Chapel Services are fully choral. The Cathedral Psalter is used, and an Anthem, or setting of the Canticles, is usually sung on Sundays. Among the Services that have been sung at West Horsham are Goss in A, Smart in F, Stanford in B flat, Parry in D, Lloyd in F, Gadsby in C, and Harwood in A flat, while the Anthems include: 'Blessed be the God and Father' (Wesley), 'God is our Hope and Strength' (Greene), 'Hallelujah' (Beethoven), 'O gladsome light' (Sullivan), 'Turn Thy face' (Attwood), 'Send out Thy light' (Gounod), &c. During the winter months organ recitals are frequently given on Sunday afternoons.

The orchestra, who practise weekly, are at present rehearsing Tschaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' Suite. The parts are nearly all supplied by boys—two of the masters assisting with violoncello and double-bass. The School band (brass and reed instruments), numbering upwards of forty performers, plays daily in the Quad. (weather permitting) while the boys march in to dinner; this band has a daily practice at 12.30. The choir, band, and orchestra are given an extra half-holiday once every term—and they deserve it!

Four or five concerts are given during the year. At the Christmas concert all the solos are, as far as possible, performed by the boys themselves; at other concerts the masters frequently sing or play solos. Here is the programme of the last Christmas concert, given on December 17, 1904:

PART I.
March—Romaine	Gounod.
THE BAND.
Selection from Judas Maccabeus	Handel.
Horn Solo—Lied	Franz Abt.
Song—La charmante Marguerite	Old French.
(a) Entr'acte from Rosamunde	Schubert.
(b) Aus Aller Herren L'änder (Russisch)	Moszkowski.
THE ORCHESTRA.
PART II.
Part-Song—Phillis	Hubert Parry.
Pianoforte Solo	{ (a) Invention in F major	Bach.
	{ (b) Fogli volanti (No. 2)	Kölling.
Vocal Trio—Rest thee on this mossy pillow	Henry Smart.
Organ Solo—Barcarole	Sternedale Bennett.
Two-part Song for	{ O Lady, leave thy silken thread	Aherman.
Treble Voices
Violin Solo—Rigaudon	Monsigny.
Song—The year's at the spring	Hartog.
Carol—From far away	J. B. Dykes.
Duet for two Pianofortes—Allegro from Sonata in D	Mozart.
Part-Song—Drake's Drum	E. D. Rendall.
School Song—Votum	H. Collingwood Banks.
GOD SAVE THE KING.

In addition to the works named in the above programme, the following have been performed during the last three years:

Selections from 'The Messiah'	Handel.
'God, Thou art great'	Spohr.
'Hear my prayer'	Mendelssohn.
'The Revenge'	Stanford.
2nd Concerto for Organ and Orchestra	Handel.
'It comes from the misty ages'	Elgar.
Symphony in D	Haydn.

besides a large number of unaccompanied part-songs including Benet's 'All creatures now,' Ravenscroft's 'In the merry spring,' and Brahms's 'Vineta.'

It is exceedingly interesting to learn that a new Music School is shortly to be built at a cost of £4,500. This much needed addition to the equipment of the music curriculum is to consist of—

- A Small concert room.
- A Band practice room.
- 6 Small practice rooms for the Band.
- 12 Small rooms for pianoforte and violin practice.
- 2 Teaching rooms.

No less gratifying is it to hear that the Head-master, the Rev. Arthur W. Upcott, M.A., 'is himself a musician, and that he has done a great deal to promote the advancement of music in the School.' As a boy at Sherborne School, he used to take the organ at the services there; moreover,

'he is always ready and willing to lend voice and other aid in anything musical.' In response to our request, Mr. Upcott has very kindly furnished the cadence to this chit-chat on the famous School over which he presides, by contributing the following note on music in public schools and its influence on a boy's education:

'It is impossible, I think, to attach too high importance to the position of Music in school education, provided always that it is not allowed to interfere with a boy's more serious preparation for the duties of life. Apart from the inestimable value, from a social as well as a practical point of view, of a sound musical training to a boy who possesses a natural talent for music, there is the indirect influence that good music will constantly exercise even upon the 'unmusical' boy, an influence of which he may be almost wholly unconscious at the time, but which will be surely of music upon boys' minds. There are two classes of music which seem specially to appeal to boys, the melodious and the dramatic. As an example of the former, I would select the second part of Gluck's "Orpheus," as admirably suited for a boys' choir; as an example of the latter, Schubert's "Song of Miriam." Church services and anthems are always a difficulty, because many of the works of the old English "classic" composers are rather heavy food for boys, while those of modern composers are often trivial and commonplace. But I think it not impossible to make a judicious selection from both.

'In the school Chapel there is the constant difficulty of deciding between the claims of choir and congregation. Some would have a perfectly trained choir and an attentive but silent congregation; others would prefer to hear every one "joining in." I think it is possible to find a "half way," or better, a "three-quarter way" meeting point—three-quarters of the musical part of the service being such as all can take part in, and a quarter, say, rendered by choir alone in the very best possible way. By such an arrangement you may get 'the quarter' to set a standard towards which the 'three-quarters' will unconsciously be drawn.

'Two other practical suggestions I should like to make in this direction: First, I think it might be possible to teach a large number of the broken voices not in the choir to sing the plainsong in Tallis's Festal Responses instead of the unmusical and distressing fashion of trying to sing in unison with the treble part. Secondly, I should like to hear all the 'historical' Psalms (such as cv., cvi., cxiv.) sung in unison to some simple melodious plainsong or Gregorian, reserving the Anglican chants for other Psalms. I say melodious advisedly, some of the Gregorian tones being almost repulsively dreary and unmusical. To avoid confusion, the ordinary Anglican pointing should be used. Unison singing of these Psalms brings out their narrative character, and the effect is broad and solemnizing. But let the accompanist be careful not to introduce strange harmonies, unless he is quite sure that they will be subordinate to the singing. A weird change of harmony unexpectedly introduced often produces a sudden check in the rhythmic roll of voices, and the effect is deplorable.

'I venture to offer to all school organists the suggestion that they should make the most of the great opportunity daily given them in their voluntaries of educating the boys, and familiarizing them with the great masterpieces of music. I know that many organists object to all "arrangements" as strictly unmusical, and insist upon playing only music "written for the organ." I submit that an organist who acts upon this rule is sacrificing a grand opportunity of musical education to a pedantic fad. I once had a clever organist who wrote out for himself arrangements of Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and of some of the trios in Schubert's Marches. Boys and masters would "stay behind" in Chapel to listen to these recognised by him in maturer life. And nowhere can this influence be more easily and more potently brought to bear than in the careful ordering of the musical part of the Chapel services.

'The greatest care should, I think, be taken in the selection of music, whether secular or sacred, to be studied or heard by the boys. It is a great mistake to spend too much time and pains upon ephemeral part-songs and glees, or upon the work of some modern composer simply because he happens to be the favourite of the hour. I would have the groundwork securely laid in the tried masterpieces of Gluck, Bach, Handel, Schubert, Beethoven, Schumann and Mendelssohn. Dates of composition should always be given, in order to impress the 'historical' development lovely and haunting melodies, and the better they became known, the larger grew the number of listeners. Surely no pedantry should stand in the way of familiarizing boys with such treasure stores of art and melody!

'Lastly, I would have weekly or fortnightly musical "half hours" in the evenings or the end of long winter afternoons. I tried the experiment of such at Canterbury before I came to Christ's Hospital, and the results were most encouraging. None but good classical music was allowed; generally there were two or three short instrumental pieces, and two or three vocal; encores were forbidden; boys and masters came, quite informally and voluntarily, always in goodly numbers. When we get our music school at Christ's Hospital we propose to continue them here, but a properly adapted concert room is almost indispensable.

'I fear that my "note" has far outrun its due limits; I can only plead in excuse twenty-five years' constant interest in the promotion of school-music.'

For valued help in the preparation of this article, due acknowledgment must be made to the Head-master for having kindly read the proof and for his contribution; to Mr. H. B. Dickin, M.A., an Assistant-master and one of the musical staff; to Mr. Robert Wilkinson, Mus. B., Organist and Director of Music; to Mr. William Lempriere, Secretary of the Benevolent Society of Blues and Senior Assistant-Clerk of Christ's Hospital; and last, but not least, to Mr. Robert J. E. Bué, B.-ès-L., one of the French masters, for the photographs he has specially taken for this article.

DOTTED CROCHET.

ROUBILIAC'S STATUES OF HANDEL.

Handel was accorded the rare distinction of having a statue erected to him during his lifetime. The sculptor who executed this remarkable representation of the great composer was a Frenchman, Louis François Roubiliac, or, as he Anglicised his name, Roubiliac. Born at Lyons in 1695, he gained 'Le 2^e Grand Prix de l'Académie de Paris' in 1730. In or about that year he settled in England and found employment with Thomas Carter, of Knightsbridge, a monumental mason, who probably made use of him as a 'botcher of antiques.' One day Roubiliac found in Vauxhall Gardens a pocket-book, containing several valuable bank-notes, belonging to Horace Walpole's brother, Edward, who, in appreciation of his honesty, thenceforward became Roubiliac's patron and protector. He then obtained some employment as assistant to Sir Henry Cheere at his stoneyard at Hyde Park Corner, famous for the production of statuary and leading figures for gardens.

Cheere introduced his French assistant to Jonathan Tyers, the proprietor of Vauxhall Gardens (opened in 1732), who commissioned Roubiliac to execute a statue of Handel as an additional adornment to that place of amusement. Hawkins says that Tyers 'made his gardens a place of musical entertainment for every evening during the summer season; to this end he was at great expense in decorating the gardens with paintings; he engaged a band of excellent musicians; he issued silver tickets for admission at a guinea each; and, receiving great encouragement, he set up an organ in the orchestra, and in a conspicuous part of the gardens erected a fine statue of Mr. Handel, the work of Mr. Roubiliac,' and this, as a recent biographer has stated, became 'the chief glory of that popular pleasure resort by the Thames.'

The statue appears to have been completed in the year 1738, at which time Handel was fifty-three years old. The London Daily Post and General Advertiser of April 18, 1738, thus records the event:

We are informed from very good Authority; that there is now near finished a Statue of the justly celebrated Mr. Handel, exquisitely done by the ingenious Mr. Raubiliac (sic), of St. Martin's Lane, Statuary, out of one entire Block of white Marble, which is to be placed in a grand Nich, erected on Purpose in the great Grove at Vaux-hall Gardens, at the sole Expence of Mr. Tyers, Undertaker of the Entertainment there; who, in Consideration of the real Merit of that inimitable Master, thought it proper that his Effigies (sic) should preside there, where his Harmony has so often charm'd even the greatest Crouds into the profoundest Calm and most decent Behaviour; it is believed, that the Expence of the Statue and Nich cannot cost less than Three Hundred Pounds; the said Gentleman likewise very generously took at Mr. Handel's Benefit Fifty of his Tickets.

A subsequent issue of the London Daily Post (May 2, 1738) further states:

Last night the Entertainment of the Spring-Gardens, Vaux-hall, was opened, and there was a considerable Appearance of Persons of both Sexes. The several Pieces of Music play'd on that Occasion had never been heard before in the Gardens; The Company express'd great Satisfaction at the Marble Statue of Mr. Handel, who is represented in a loose Robe, striking the Lyre, and listening to the Sounds; which a little Boy, carv'd at his Feet, seems to be writing down on the back of the Violoncello. The whole Composition is in a very elegant Taste.

A 'Sketch of the Spring-Gardens, Vaux-Hall, in a Letter to a Noble Lord' (i.e., Earl Baltimore) thus records the first location of the statue:

Being advanc'd a little way up this second side of the Quadrangle, we come to a spacious semicircle of elegant Pavilions, in a different Style from the above mention'd [i.e., the south side]. In the Area, before this Semi-Circle stand lofty Trees; and, in the center of it, is a beautiful Marble Statue of Mr. Handel, in the Character of Apollo, playing on the lyre; with a Boy underneath, taking down the Notes. The rising Genius shewn in this Piece of Sculpture at its being first set up, gave Occasion to the following Verses:

Drawn by the Fame of those embower'd Retreats,
See Orpheus, risen from th' Elysian seats!
Lost to th' admiring World three thousand Years,
Beneath great Handel's form he reappears.
Sweetly this Miracle attracts the Eye:—
But hark! for o'er his Lyre his Fingers fly.

ROUBILIAC'S MONUMENT OF HANDEL IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

Equally eulogistic is a quatrain in these words :

That Orpheus moved a grove, or rock, or stream,
 By music's power, will not a fiction seem ;
 For here as great a miracle is shown—
 A Handel breathing, though transformed to stone.

It is said that the block of marble used for the statue was the largest at that time to be had in England. After having occupied its Vauxhall Gardens site for fifty years, and charmed many visitors—even including Handel himself—to those 'delightful, pleasant groves,' the statue came into private hands. In 1830 it was sold by auction at Christie's for the sum of £210, its description in the catalogue reading :

Roubiliac. The very celebrated original sitting figure of Handel, in marble, which was for so many years publicly admired in the Gardens at Vauxhall. This noble piece of sculpture, well calculated as an architectural embellishment to any public music hall, is to be viewed at Mr. Newton's, upholsterer, in Wardour Street.

In 1854 the statue was purchased by the Sacred Harmonic Society for the sum of £105, in whose possession it remained until the disbanding of the Society in 1880, when it became the property of the late Mr. Henry Littleton, of Novello & Co.; it is now in the possession of his son, Mr. Alfred Henry Littleton. A photograph of this interesting and life-like representation of the composer of the 'Messiah' forms one of our special supplements. With this before him there is no need to furnish the reader with a description of this masterpiece; we may add that so admirable was the likeness to the composer that a person who had only seen the statue, upon accidentally meeting Handel, at once recognized him.

The Handel statue at once made the fame of Roubiliac. At his studio in St. Peter's Court, St. Martin's Lane, important commissions came to him rapidly. Among the most famous of these are the following: Sir Isaac Newton, in the ante-chapel of Trinity College, Cambridge, given in 1755 by Dr. Smith, Master, and the author of 'Harmonics'; also, in the Library of the same College, the ten busts of distinguished alumni, including Bacon, Coke, and Newton. His full-length statue of Shakespeare was commissioned in 1758, at a cost of £315, by Garrick, who placed it in a special temple at Hampton: the statue has now found a worthy location in the Entrance Hall of the British Museum. In connection with this Shakespeare monument, John Thomas Smith, in his delightful and informing book 'Nollekens and his times,' says that the block of marble proved to be so full of veins and rendered the face so hideous, that Garrick declared he could not put up with it, as people might ask: 'What! was Shakespeare marked with mulberries?' A new block was then procured, 'to the great pleasure of Garrick.'

Westminster Abbey contains six specimens of Roubiliac's creations. The most popular monument in that stately fane is the Nightingale, which portrays, with grim ghastliness, Death, fleshless and shrouded, menacing with his dart the figure of a young wife (Mrs. Nightingale) who is sinking in her husband's arms. Among the other monuments are those of the Duke of Argyle, and Vice-Admiral Sir Peter Warren—realistically represented with the small-pox marks on his face. The well-known and finely executed memorial to Handel above the composer's grave in Poets' Corner—of which a view is given on page 584—is said to have been Roubiliac's last achievement: thus his artistic career began and ended with Handel. The inauguration of this monument is thus recorded in the London Chronicle, or Universal Evening Post, of July 13 to 15, 1762:

Last Saturday [July 10] was opened in Westminster Abbey near the Poets Corner, the monument in memory of the late George Frederick Handel, Esq. He is represented pointing to the back of the monument, where David is playing on the harp. In Mr. Handel's right hand is a pen, writing part of the Messiah, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' &c., and the following inscription George Frederick Handel, Born February 23, 1684, Died April 14, 1759.

Allowing for the old system of reckoning, the year of Handel's birth is really 1685. The face of Handel—said to have been modelled by Roubiliac from a death mask—is reputed to be one of the best portraits of the great composer.

The General Advertiser of January 11, 1752, contains the following reference to a matrimonial adventure of Roubiliac's:

A few Days since was married Mr. Roubiliac, an eminent Statuary in St. Martin's Lane, to Miss Crosby, of Deptford, a celebrated beauty, with a Fortune of Ten Thousand pounds.

This was repeated by Fielding in the Covent Garden Journal, but there seems to be no further reference to the marriage, if ever it took place.

Roubiliac died, at his house on the east side of St. Martin's Lane, on January 11, 1762. He was buried in the Church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, 'under the window of the Bell Bagnio.' The burial register thus records the interment on January 15, 1762:

LEWIS FRANCIS ROUBILIAC.
Buried No. G. 4. m.
Prs and Cands - - £2. 8. 8.

His funeral was attended by Bartolozzi, Hogarth, and Reynolds. Notwithstanding the fact that Roubiliac was in constant work and that he received large sums for his commissions, he died in poor circumstances. Indeed, so seriously was he in debt that his creditors received only 1s. 6d. in the pound.

The method of work and personality of Roubiliac may be gathered from Smith, in his biography of Nollekens, who says: 'Roubiliac seldom modelled his drapery for his monumental figures, but carved it from the linen itself, which he dipped into warm starch-water, so that when he had pleased himself, he left it to cool and dry, and then proceeded with the marble; this, my father assured me, he did with all the drapery in Nightingale's monument.' Flaxman severely, if not unjustly, criticised Roubiliac's methods. A fairer estimate of the distinguished sculptor's work is that furnished by Mr. Austin Dobson, in the article on Roubiliac in 'The Dictionary of National Biography': 'As a sculptor he bears the stamp of his French training in a certain restless and theatric treatment of his subjects. But although his style is mannered and somewhat affected, it is also full of grace, spirit, and refinement.'

As an instance of Roubiliac's enthusiasm for his art, Smith gives the following anecdote, as related by a mason formerly employed at Westminster Abbey. 'One day, during the time he was putting up Mrs. Nightingale's monument, Roubiliac's servant, who had a message to deliver, found his master with his arms folded and eyes riveted to the kneeling figure at the north-west corner of Lord Norris's monument. The man, after he had three times requested an answer, was seized by the arm by his master, who softly whispered, "Hush! hush! he vil speak presently!"'

The following story may conclude these notes on the famous sculptor. A gentleman who had stayed one night at Slaughter's Coffee-house [in St. Martin's Lane] until past twelve o'clock, discovered that he had forgotten the latch-key of the house where he lodged; and as he had promised his landlady not to disturb her other lodgers after the midnight hour, Roubiliac prevailed upon him to take the other rubber, and then to sleep in a spare bed 'much at his service.' The gentleman accepted the sculptor's kind invitation, and Roubiliac showed him into the room and wished him good-night. But upon beginning to undress, the guest was horror-stricken to find the corpse of a black woman laid out upon the bed! He screamed out 'Roubiliac, Roubiliac!' When the sculptor came into the room, he said: 'Oh, dear! my good fren, I beg your pardon! I did not remember poor Mary vas dare: poor Mary! She die yesterday vid de small poc! Come, come, you must take part vid my bed—come; poor Mary vas my hos-maid for five six year—more!'

The portrait of Roubiliac reproduced on page 585 is in the National Portrait Gallery. Painted by his Swiss friend, Adrien Carpentiers, it represents the sculptor modelling the statue of Shakespeare. This portrait was exhibited at the Spring Gardens Exhibition, near Charing Cross, in May, 1761, the year preceding Roubiliac's death.

BEETHOVEN.

Except that he was the father of a great genius, little can be placed to the credit of Johann van Beethoven. Born about the end of 1739 or the beginning of 1740, at Bonn, he there passed his life and died at the early age of fifty-three. He and his father, Ludwig van Beethoven—after whom the composer was named—were both musicians in the Court band of the Elector of Cologne, at Bonn, Johann being a tenor singer, not overburdened with this world's goods. Like most poor men he took unto himself a wife: the bride a widow, several years his junior. She had formerly been a cook, thus the mothers of both Haydn and Beethoven had practised the culinary art. Ludwig, the composer of 'the immortal Nine,' was their second child.

BEETHOVEN'S FATHER.

Sir George Grove, after referring to the mother of Beethoven as 'a woman of soft heart and easy ways, much beloved by her son,' says that 'the father was a severe, hard man of irregular habits, who evidently saw his son's ability, gave him the best instruction that his poverty would allow, and kept him to his music with a stern, strict, perhaps cruel hand.' Johann Beethoven's stipend at the Chapel was the miserable pittance of 300 florins a year, and this appears to have been his only means of subsistence. He taught his son both the violin and clavier, and when the boy was nine years old he was handed over to Pfeiffer, a tenor singer who lodged with the Beethovens. The progress of the clever little Ludwig in music was in inverse ratio to the 'going from bad to worse' of Johann. Breuning once saw the boy rescuing his drunken father from the hands of the police, and this was probably not the only occasion. 'At length,' as Sir George Grove tells us, 'a decree was issued ordering a portion of the father's salary to be paid over to the son, who thus, before he was nineteen, became the head of the family.'

Gottfried Fischer, the son of a baker at Bonn, and ten years younger than Ludwig, has recorded some anecdotes of Beethoven's father. He wore a brown overcoat and a round hat, and had a fine pig-tail. Before singing at Court he used to take a fresh raw egg in the morning, or else two plums, as these he considered to be good for the voice. On one occasion, meeting Fischer in the street, he said, 'Gottfried, where are you going?' 'I am going home from school,' the boy replied. 'Only study well,' said Johann, 'and you will be able to do anything.' One more story, and we must pass on. To Cecilia, the little daughter of Fischer, he once said: 'Cecilia, our patroness of music, I should like you to give me a kiss.' The child indignantly refused, saying: 'I am not a girl who is fond of kisses; you have a wife, kiss her.'

MENDELSSOHN.

Abraham Mendelssohn (born December 11, 1776) was a very different type of man from Johann van Beethoven. The second son of Moses Mendelssohn—known as the German Socrates by reason of his great eminence in philosophical writings—he formed a connecting link between two great men, a circumstance which caused him to say: 'Formerly I was the son of my father, now I am the father of my son.' Very little is known of the youthful period of Abraham Mendelssohn's life except that he was brought up in a cultured home where poverty and refinement were, as they so often are, blended in perfect harmony. We read that 'as the evening approached a circle of friends and acquaintances assembled nearly every day at the Mendelssohns' house [in Berlin]. A pleasant custom prevailed in that any person who had once been introduced into the house could subsequently come, uninvited, whenever he liked and remain as long as he felt disposed.' Delightful friendships were thus formed; animated conversation was carried on; the suppers were of necessity simple, but the hospitality exceedingly warm and pleasant. It is interesting to know that 'there were scarcely any remarkable men of Berlin, or distinguished strangers visiting that city, who in consecutive generations were not guests at the houses of Moses Mendelssohn, his son Abraham, and his grandson Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy.'

Having adopted a commercial career, Abraham Mendelssohn occupied the post of cashier in the counting-house of M.M. Fould, at Paris: this was in 1803, when he was twenty-eight years old. During a journey from Paris to Berlin he fell in love with Leah Salomon, an intimate friend of his sister Henrietta's, who resided at Paris. All objections on the part of the young lady's mother against Leah's 'marrying a clerk' were overcome, and December 26, 1804, saw the beginning of an exceptionally happy married life. Having resigned his post at Paris, Abraham entered into partnership with his brother Joseph and thus founded the eminent banking firm of Mendelssohn, with its headquarters now at Berlin. At first the business was located at Hamburg, where three children were born to them,—Fanny, Felix and Rebecca—but in 1811 a removal was made to Berlin, where the happy years of their childhood were spent. Although of Jewish descent—his father Moses Mendelssohn suffered severely by reason of his Hebrew faith—Abraham Mendelssohn decided to have his children brought up as Protestant Christians, and both he and his wife embraced the Christian faith. In order to distinguish himself from other members of the family, he added the name of Bartholdy to his patronymic, which thenceforth became Mendelssohn-Bartholdy.

The personality of Abraham Mendelssohn has been so well described by the late Sir George Grove that no apology is necessary for quoting his words:—

‘He was a man of strong character, wise judgment, and very remarkable ability. These qualities are strikingly obvious in the success of his method for the education of his children, and in the few of his letters which are published; and they are testified to in a very remarkable manner by his son in many passages of his letters, and in the thorough deference which he always pays to the judgment of his father, not only on matters relating to the conduct of life, but on points of art. Though not, like Leopold Mozart, a technical musician, and apparently having no acquaintance with the art, he had yet an insight into it which many musicians might envy. “I am often,” says his son, “quite unable to understand how it is possible to have so accurate a judgment about music without being a technical musician, and if I could only say what I feel in the same clear and intelligent manner that you always do, I would certainly never make another confused speech as long as I live.” Or again, this time after his death, “not only my father, but . . . my teacher, both in art and in life.” Though apparently cold in his manners, and somewhat stern in his tone, and towards the end perhaps unduly irritable, Abraham Mendelssohn was greatly beloved by his wife and children. Felix, in particular, is described as “enthusiastically, almost fanatically, fond of him,” and the letters show how close was the confidence which existed between them.’

A very interesting incident in the life of Abraham Mendelssohn was his sojourn in London during the summer of 1833, at the urgent request of his son Felix, who found great delight in visiting ‘that smoky nest,’ as he called the Metropolis. It was his first visit to England, and his letters contain many pleasant jokes about his son’s partiality for our country. He says: ‘Felix in his enthusiasm calls the shorn sunburnt yellow meadows “green,” the black and gray horizon “blue,” which I do not.’ Again: ‘This morning at fourteen minutes past nine the sun was just powerful enough to give a yellow tinge to the mist, and the air was just like the smoke of a great fire. “A very fine morning!” said my barber (here called hairdresser). “Is it?” I asked. “Yes, a very fine morning!” and so I learned what a fine summer morning here is like. Now about noon, the mist has gained the victory, and along with sultry heat the light is that of a Berlin November afternoon about four o’clock. . . . Felix is gone to St. Paul’s to play the organ; when he comes back I am sure he will say that nowhere are there such glorious summer days as in London!’

Some further extracts from Abraham Mendelssohn’s letters written from London in 1833 may be quoted by reason of their interest:

Yesterday morning (the day after our arrival) I first went with Felix to Doxat’s. On our way we passed St. Paul’s, and I was surprised to find this mighty building in the midst of the city, having always imagined it in quite a different part of the town. But now I can explain to myself why that part of it which rises so high into the air is disproportionately large compared to the lower part of the building. In the city there is no room left except high in the air! From here we walked a long distance to go to Moscheles’ [at Chester Terrace, Regents Park], who had asked us to dinner; the invitation had reached us through Neukomm at the rehearsal. I passed Oxford Street, Regent Street, Portland Place, Regents Park, and must confess that in the splendour and taste of the buildings, elegance and cleanliness of the streets, good pavements, &c.—in short, in everything that impresses your senses without producing an effect on your mind—I have not seen anything to be compared to the wonders of that one hour’s walk. But when I think of the grand aspect of the Tuileries, the Place Louis XV., the Champs Elysées, the Boulevards and Quais which encircle it all, and the certain effect which that point on the globe has day by day for years together never failed to produce on me, I can only say London is the richest town and Paris the greatest town I ever saw. London, to be sure, is the largest also; London in the proper sense of the name (not being enclosed in walls) has now 1,400,000 inhabitants, and is surrounded in all directions and at small distances by independent towns, some of which have 30,000 or 40,000 inhabitants. These towns, as Klingemann justly remarks, are anxiously watching the gigantic jaws which will inevitably swallow them very soon.

What would Mendelssohn’s father have thought of the vastness of London to-day? His observations on the English Sunday are interesting:

To-day is Sunday, four o’clock in the afternoon, and I am still in slippers. The street is perfectly quiet, and not only do I think this stillness very pleasant, but the whole tenor of the London Sunday appears to me perfectly explained by its strict necessity; whereas hitherto the prejudiced and stupid accounts of travellers and authors have made me consider it ridiculous and incredible. Sunday is as indispensable to the Londoners as fallow-time is to the fields, winter to the vegetation, night to day. Sunday is not kept only because a law commands it; but that law is here more than anywhere else the evident expression of the general wish, the urgent want. If the London people lived one year without the Sunday they would all and each turn mad or imbecile; and the more straining, fatiguing, and thoroughly exciting the life of all classes of the population in London is during the six week-days, the more strictly will the great mass keep Sunday without any compulsion.

But I forget that I am writing from London, where every line makes a letter more expensive, and must try to be shorter. You will be pleased, however, to know how truly beloved and highly esteemed Felix is here. Old Mr. Horsley [the glee composer] wanted to pay me a great compliment to-day by saying that he must call me happy to be the son and the father of a great man. 'Where is the cat?' thought I; and I might have turned angry if I had not many times already had my joke about it and about myself for standing like a dash between father and son.

I converse in Italian with Horsley, for he speaks neither German nor French, and of Italian at least we are equally ignorant. Heaven knows what we have said and how we have understood one another. As regards my English, I do indeed call out, 'How do you do, sir?' 'Waiter, a mutton chop,' and other similarly profound phrases, but I shall not have forgotten my German when I get home, and I have enough vanity left not to speak English to ladies. How shall I manage next week? I have accepted two dinner-engagements, at the Attwoods' and Horsleys'—no 'parties,' but family dinners, and I must speak English. Whether it comes out of chest, head, or throat, it cannot come out of my brains, for it is not in them.

If by special favour you obtain a card of admission to Lord Leveson Gower's gallery, and the weather is fine, you see, as I shall hereafter describe to you, a beautiful arrangement of pictures, for half of which we might give our museum three times over. Amongst others there are three Raphaels, so undeniably genuine that X. would declare them to be Murillos, and the author of our museum-catalogue (what on earth is his name?) would make them out to be juvenile works of Pimperleppaccio's.

I have just become lighter by half a guinea (weighing 3½ thalers), to hear Cramer play at his concert; but I mind it less than 17. 14s. (about 12 thalers) which I paid at Dollond's for a very simple pair of tortoise-shell spectacles, through which I see just as much as through Petitpierre's two thaler ones, viz. as much as without them—nothing. I therefore know nothing of all the beauties Felix fell in love with at the morning concert, nothing but that they all wore bonnets and filled the whole inner space of the hall, three or four hundred Venuses in a heap. Cramer's playing is neat, elegant, soft and refined; his concerto, although nothing remarkable, was pleasant to hear.

Quicker even than the steamer on the river and the horses in the street the guineas run out of one's pocket here; there is no stopping them, and I am surprised at the equanimity with which I see them glide out of my purse into that big gulf whence they never return. What a fool is a poor Berlin citizen here! For what I have spent here on carriage hire I could purchase the whole of the public carriages of Berlin. So I have become quite close-fisted. Not a penny shall the tailors make out of me here; and I go on wearing my green wig with wonderful obstinacy, although two hairdressers have already lavished on it all the abuse in the English language. I pretend not to understand anything, and answer, 'Very well.'

An organ performance by Felix at St. Paul's Cathedral is thus pleasantly recorded:

Sunday, June 23, 1833.

You know that merchants who pay fifty per cent. are among the most honest people, and so my conscience to some degree acquits me when I reflect that each time I wanted to give you an account of my doings I have put down nearly one half of my subject. It is now six o'clock in the afternoon; I got up at eight in the morning, and until now have not found time to begin this letter, which must be interrupted again as soon as Felix has finished shaving. This morning he played the organ at St. Paul's, and, as the bellows-blowers had gone, Klingemann and two other gentlemen supplied their places. Felix played an introduction and a fugue, then extemporised, then played one of Attwood's Coronation anthems with him, for four hands, and lastly three pieces by Bach. It sounded very well; the church was empty, only two ladies [the Misses Mounsey], frequenters of the Philharmonic, stole in and listened unseen.

From St. Paul's we went to a regular Sunday-quartet-party which takes place at a private gentleman's house. We chanced upon a quartet by Onslow; two of Onslow's quartets had been played already. They wanted to perform Felix's octet, but I begged for his quintet, and they played it, and gave the octet over and above.

The 'private gentleman' referred to in the above letter was Mr. Alsager, of The Times, an enthusiastic musical amateur who resided at Queen Square, Bloomsbury. At his house Beethoven's great Mass in D was first performed in England on December 24, 1832.

At the house of Vincent Novello, in Frith Street, Soho, he attended a musical party at which Malibran sang and De Beriot played the violin. On that occasion Malibran charmed all her hearers and so did Felix Mendelssohn. To quote in the words of his father: 'He extemporized to everybody's delight, and to my satisfaction, on the airs she (Malibran) had just sung. After that she gave us two more Spanish songs, and lastly, with the two daughters of the house, accompanied by Felix, the trio from 'Il Matrimonio segreto' exquisitely!' One of the 'two daughters of the house' was Miss Clara Novello, now the Countess Gigliucci.

During his stay in London, Mendelssohn's father was very anxious to visit Nelson's old ship the Victory, in Portsmouth Harbour, and he did. On entering the coach which conveyed him thither, he unfortunately grazed his shin-bone, with very serious results, so serious indeed that Sir Benjamin Brodie was called in. For several weeks the patient was a prisoner at the Mendelssohn lodgings in Great Portland Street, at the north-west corner of Ridinghouse Street, a house that was only rebuilt this year. Friends were exceedingly kind to him, and Felix proved to be a most devoted nurse.

But we may let the old gentleman speak for himself in a letter written on August 9, during the period of convalescence :

I am writing in my old room again, and have walked downstairs without difficulty or exertion, so I may hope for a speedy end of this Intermezzo semi serio. On examination of my cupboard I found, half a pudding, a pie, a very fine bunch of grapes (presents from my landlady), six pots of Scotch marmalade, and one pot of other preserve (Misses Alexander), two paper-bags full of cakes (Madame Moscheles), a roast fowl (Madame Goldschmidt), a bottle of delicious port wine without brandy (Misses Alexander), and a ditto of excellent claret (Madame Goldschmidt), all which demonstrates that if some people starve here others do not. But seriously, when those two most awful calamities, poverty and disease, are united—as they are to such an extent—what boundless and horrible misery it must be ! I hope that my reflection on it will not pass away without bearing its fruit—a reflection which has most vividly occupied my mind of late, and especially so when I heard a few days ago that the wife and two children of an Irish labourer had died of hunger here, whilst I, a stranger, am receiving kindness and attention from all sides. Next to God, and more even than to my doctor, I owe my recovery to one whom, away from you, I like best being indebted to, and that is Felix. I can never tell you what he has done for me, what treasures of love, patience, perseverance, grave kindness, and tenderest care he has lavished on me ; and much as I am obliged to him for the thousand marks of kindness and attention I received at other hands for his sake, the best ever came from himself, and my best thanks are due to him.

The accident which befell Abraham Mendelssohn in London and his 'reflection' on it did not 'pass away without bearing its fruit,' as on his return home he made arrangements at a Berlin hospital to provide for the gratuitous nursing of a sick person.

His death came as a terrible blow to his son Felix, who says, in a letter addressed to Pastor Julius Schubring : 'My father was so good to me, so thoroughly my friend, that I was devoted to him with my whole soul. And during my long absence I scarcely ever passed an hour without thinking of him ; but as you knew him in his own home with us, in all his kindliness, you can well realize my state of mind. The only thing that now remains is to do one's duty, and this I strive to do with all my strength, for he would wish it to be so if he were still present, and I shall never cease to endeavour to gain his approval, as I formerly did, though I can no longer enjoy it.' How great the contrast between the paternal relationships of Beethoven and Mendelssohn !

Consideration of the fathers of Berlioz, Wagner, and Brahms may be deferred to next month, or some future occasion.

In a book, 'made in Germany,' entitled 'The New Opera Glass : containing the plots of the most popular operas,' we find the following information under Goetz's 'The taming of the refractory' (!) :

Fourth Act : Room in Petruccio's house. Petruccio bursting for anger about all things ; nothing can satisfying him. Katharina is nearly broken in the hearth ; but she loves him and her refractory ist justly going away. Petruccio also loves her and after some quarrels their hearths are finding together to a happy life.

in Music' (Second Book of Ayres.)

The Blue Book ('Return') of the British Museum for the year ending March 31, 1905, has now been issued. From this we learn that no fewer than 6,934 Musical Publications were added to the collection ; of these 6,693 were received under the provisions of the Copyright Act, 200 by Colonial Copyright, and 41 were acquired by purchase. The most important accessions to the collection of printed music during the year were the following :

Responses of the Office of the Dead with music, printed by Johann Luschner, Monserrat, 1500. The second book containing music printed in Spain. Forty-three copies of this work were printed on vellum ; the present copy is the only one of these known to be still in existence.

A fragment of a ballad in the musical type used by John Rastell and with his device. The ballad, which is undescribed, may have been entitled 'Away Mornynge' ; it was probably printed about 1520.

Two musical works ; the alto part of a collection of 'Laudi,' entitled 'Il deuoto pianto della Gloriosa Vergine,' and the alto part of Verovio's 'Canzonette spirituali,' engraved by Simone Verovio, inventor of the process of engraving music on copper-plates, at Rome, 1591-1592.

Dowland, John : 'First book of Songs.' Printed by Humphrey Lownes, London, 1613.

'Premier—second—livre de Sonates composées par Mons. [Henry] Eccles, Anglois.' Paris, 1720-1723.

[Two other accessions are referred to in the 'Church and Organ Music' column.]

The additions to the manuscript music include thirty-one volumes of compositions, mostly autograph by Sir Henry Bishop ; and two treatises on music in Latin and Italian by John Hothby (fl. 1470), an English Carmelite settled at Ferrara ; these were written in Italy about 1500.

What's in a name ? In certain instances a great deal ! Some names have become so familiar that any change in them, even in the direction of accuracy, would be unwelcome. The poet, painter, composer, and conductor, Hoffmann, who at an early period recognised the genius of Beethoven, and whose fantastic tales inspired Schumann is well-known ; also the three initial letters 'E. T. A.,' prefixed to his surname and placed on his tomb in the Jerusalem cemetery, Berlin. They stand for Ernst Theodor Amadeus, but the civil authorities have discovered his name registered as Ernst Theodor Wilhelm, and it is suggested that the 'A.' on the tomb should be replaced by a 'W.' ; but this would be following the letter rather than the spirit. The 'A.' (the initial letter of Amadeus) tells of Hoffmann's love for Mozart ; so great was his admiration of that composer, that he substituted Mozart's second christian name in place of 'Wilhelm.'

The ceremony attendant upon the conferring of University degrees differs considerably in the New World from similar functions at Oxford and Cambridge. Our readers may be interested in the following 'Order of Exercises' at Yale University in June last, on which occasion Sir Edward Elgar received the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa.

ORDER OF EXERCISES.

- i. OVERTURE TO 'RUY BLAS' Felix Mendelssohn.
- ii. PRAYER.
- iii. PSALM LXV. York Tune.

[Music printed, in key F.]

NOTE.—At the opening of the first College erected in New Haven, in 1718, the congregation united in singing the first verses of Psalm LXV., in Sternhold and Hopkins, as follows:

Thy praise alone, O Lord, doth reign in Sion Thine own hill: &c.

- iv. ANNOUNCEMENT OF PRIZES.
- v. PRESENTATION TO THE PRESIDENT AND FELLOWS BY THE DEANS OR DIRECTORS OF THE RESPECTIVE FACULTIES OF CANDIDATES FOR DEGREES UPON EXAMINATION; WITH THE CONFERRING OF DEGREES, in the following order:
Bachelors of Arts;
Bachelors of Philosophy;
Bachelors of Fine Arts;
Bachelors of Music;
Bachelors of Laws;
Bachelors of Civil Law;
Bachelors of Divinity;
Masters of Arts;
Masters of Law and Doctor of Civil Law;
Masters of Science;
Mechanical Engineers;
Masters of Forestry;
Doctors of Medicine;
Doctors of Philosophy;
- vi. INTRODUCTION AND OPENING CHORUS FROM 'THE LIGHT OF LIFE' - Edward Elgar.
- vii. PRESENTATION TO THE PRESIDENT AND FELLOWS BY PROFESSOR WALKER OF CANDIDATES FOR HONORARY DEGREES; WITH THE CONFERRING OF DEGREES.
- viii. EIN' FESTE BURG' - Martin Luther.
- ix. BENEDICTION.
- x. 'POM' AND CIRCUMSTANCE,' A MILITARY MARCH - Edward Elgar.

Then follows the names of the recipients of degrees. It will be observed that the ceremony partook to some extent of a religious service; and amid all the go-aheadness which one associates with American life in all its energised vitality, it is interesting to find that the metrical Psalm of Sternhold and Hopkins, sung to the 17th century tune 'York,' continues to find a place at Yale University 'Commencement.'

Sir Edward Elgar's 'The Apostles' is announced to be performed at Düsseldorf in April next, under the direction of Professor Julius Butts.

The Liverpool Daily Post of August 5 contained the following interesting comment upon the article on St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, which appeared in our last number. The 'oldster on 'Change' is, without doubt, Sir Edward Russell, the veteran editor of the Liverpool Journal.

An oldster on 'Change the other day was moved to reminiscence by an article in this month's MUSICAL TIMES, which does honour to

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS PARISH CHURCH,

St. Margaret's, Westminster. His talk was that the article is most interesting historically; that it is admirably illustrated; that the church in its present state since the restoration and the removal of the galleries in 1878, and the old church as it was before then, with the Speaker's pew in front of the gallery below the organ and the clock at the west end, is well given in two views; that in one of these the great window, which Canon Hensley Henson is now engaged in resetting, appears; that there also is a good exterior view, which reminds one of Canon Hensley Henson's dictum that it is that there is also a fine account of the notable organ of the church, and a beautiful portrait of Mr. Reginald Goss-Custard, the distinguished organist. Of all the illustrations, the oldster who brought up the subject was most interested in that which represented the church in the state in which it was when before the House of Commons on the fast-day during the Crimean War, in 1855. He said that the pulpit and the galleries reminded him of that day when nearly the whole congregation was in black, so many of the nobles and Parliamentarians of the time having lost relations in the trenches; that he remembered touching his hat to Lord Palmerston as the throng left the church; that his impressions of Melvill's discourse had always remained very vivid; that he had sometimes wondered whether this was merely the remembrance of youth and the excitement of the occasion, and

WHETHER THE ELOQUENCE WAS SO DISTINGUISHED as he supposed; that lately, having conversed on this subject with a Canon, his friend, who also had good Melvillian recollections, this gentleman had gone to his library shelves and produced an old 'Penny Pulpit' volume, in which, with 'Golden Lectures' by Melvill, was given this very sermon of 1855; that he and his reverend friend went into the garden and sat on a bench while the Canon, with just the right elocution, read the great Melvill discourse; that it proved to be really great; that its eloquence was massive and free, with a noble purity and emphasis and diction; and that the scheme of the sermon was fine, while its spiritual impact was most solemnly stirring.

Herr Wilhelm Backhaus, the well-known pianist and professor of the pianoforte at the Royal Manchester College of Music, is to be congratulated upon having won at Paris the Rubinstein prize of £200 for pianoforte playing. Rubinstein founded two prizes, each of £200 in value, one for performer-pianists, the other for composer-pianists. On this occasion the jury, consisting of eminent directors of conservatoires and various professors, under the presidency of Leopold Auer, of the St. Petersburg Conservatoire, did not consider any of the compositions submitted to them to be worthy of the award.

The death, at the age of seventy-eight, of Mr. Charles Boosey is recorded with regret. Mr. Boosey, who died at Bickley on July 24, was the head of the old-established and well-known firm of music-publishers in Regent Street.

Sir Edward Elgar is to receive the honorary freedom of the city of Worcester. This distinction has not hitherto been conferred, except upon the present Earl Beauchamp. The freedom is to be given to Sir Edward at a special civic function to be held during the Worcester Musical Festival.

The preliminary draft programme of the Norwich Musical Festival has now been issued. This, the twenty-eighth triennial meeting, will be held on October 25, 26, 27 and 28. The principal works are as follows; those marked * are announced to be conducted by their respective composers, and those indicated thus † have been composed for the Festival:

ORATORIOS, &c.: Messiah; Hymn of Praise; *Te Deum in B flat (Stanford); and *The Apostles (Elgar).

CANTATAS, &c.: *†Pied Piper of Hamelin (Parry); *†St. Agnes (Mancinelli); *John Gilpin (Cowen); *Two-part songs for female voices, in canon (Corder); *†Five Bohemian Poems, for baritone and orchestra (Holbrooke); *Five ballads, for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra (Coleridge-Taylor).

ORCHESTRAL: Symphony in E minor, No. 5 (Tchaikovsky); *Ballad for orchestra 'La belle dame sans merci' (Mackenzie); *Overture 'La mort d'Arthur' (Bridge); *Introduction and allegro in G minor and major for strings (Elgar); *Tone poem 'In the East' (Arthur Herve); *Overture 'Everyman' (Walford Davies); *Welsh Rhapsody (German); in addition to violin concertos by Bach and Max Bruch.

No one can question the variety offered in the above scheme, and additional interest will be aroused by the fact that thirteen composers will conduct their own works. The conductor-in-chief is Mr. Alberto Randegger, who has held that office with distinction for twenty-four years, and who will conduct his ninth Norwich Festival on this occasion. Dr. Bunnett will occupy his usual place at the organ, and the chorus is being trained by Dr. A. H. Mann. The experiment of engaging the London Symphony Orchestra is one that is sure to be productive of good results, while the list of solo vocalists is all that can be desired.

Some important 'suggestions' as to teaching singing in schools have been issued by the Board of Education. The document is given in full with comments in the September issue of the School Music Review.

A list of visitors, dated August 19, 1835, and preserved in the town museum of Carlsbad, contains the following information—of course in German:

BISHOP KEN'S HYMNS.

Two recent additions to the library of the British Museum are of special interest to church musicians. An octavo tract of sixteen pages contains:

Three | Hymns, | by the Author of the Manual of | Prayers for Use of the Scholars of Winchester
Col | ledge.

The 'Three Hymns' are those for Morning, Evening—in its original form, 'Glory to Thee, my God, this night'—and Midnight, of which the author was Bishop Ken. The above title appears at the head of the first hymn, but on the opposite left-hand page is printed the following ADVERTISEMENT.

The Author, finding imperfect, and surreptitious Copies of these Hymns printed, without his Knowledge, and much against his Will, was perwaded to publish them in his own Defence; Otherwife he should not have fent things so very inconsiderable to the Press.

The colophon reads:

London, Printed for Ch. Brome, at the Gun, at the West End of St. Paul's Church, 1694.

Following this is a short list of publications by Bishop Ken which includes, 'Prayers for the Use of all them that go to the Bath for cure.'

The bringing to light of this very rare tract corrects the statement in the Rev. Dr. Julian's 'Dictionary of Hymnology' regarding the first appearance of Bishop Ken's hymns—1694, instead of 1695—and shows that they were originally published separately, and not as part of an edition of the 'Manual of Prayers for the use of the Scholars of Winchester College.' The above fresh information will correct and amplify the article on the 'Evening Hymn' which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of November, 1903, page 722. Considering the world-wide fame of and affection for the hymns 'Awake, my soul, and with the sun' and 'All praise to Thee, my God, this night,' it seems strange that they should ever have been thought 'so very inconsiderable,' but Bishop Ken was doubtless a very modest man.

The British Museum has also acquired a copy of the very rare first edition of Sternhold and Hopkins's 'Booke of Psalms' (complete) printed by John Day in 1562. The book, however, is unfortunately imperfect, as it lacks thirty leaves, which have been supplied in facsimile. A perfect copy of this early Psalter is in the John Rylands Library, Manchester.

ST. MARGARET'S CHURCH, WESTMINSTER.

The Boyce Anthem that was composed for and sung at the re-opening of the above church in 1758 is, appropriately enough, 'I have surely built Thee an house.' Mr. John S. Bumpus—to whom we are indebted for this information—has in his possession Philip Hayes's autograph score of the volume of Boyce's anthems which he (Hayes) edited for the composer's widow in 1790. The volume—oblong quarto and bound in rough calf—not only contains the above well-known anthem, but at the foot of the first page is written in pencil: 'Made for y^e opening of St. Margaret's, Westminster.' The foregoing therefore furnishes an interesting addition to the article on that interesting church in our August issue, page 509.

RAVENSCROFT'S PSALTER OF 1621.

The mention of Thomas Ravenscroft in the article on Christ's Hospital, on page 580, furnishes an opportunity of referring to the important Psalter which he issued nearly three hundred years ago. Its title-page, which we give in exact facsimile—i.e., not reduced in size—may speak for itself:

RAVENSCROFT'S PSALTER, 1621.

The book, however, has a second title-page identical with that given above, except that it contains the following additional words:

That all Clarkes of Churches, and the Auditory, may know what Tune each proper Psalme may be sung unto.

The Preface opens with the following quaint ascription:

To all that have Skill, or Will unto Sacred Musike, I wish CONCORD among themselves, with GOD, and with their owne Consciences.

The raison d'être of the book is set forth by worthy Thomas Ravenscroft in friendly terms. He begins:

Harmonical Brethren, I have here undertaken with no small labour, and charge, to bring the Tunes of the Psalmes, Hymnes Evangelicall and Songs Spirituall, (as they are usually sung throughout Great Brittain) into one entire volume; which are so Composed, for the most part, that the unskillfull may with little practice, be enabled to sing them in parts, after a plausible manner.

He then goes on, very wisely, to say:

In my opinion, 'tis too Laborious a taske for any Man to study the attainment of the Hebrew Musically Accents; For the Tunes used in David's Time are too farre removed from our understanding. For albeit the Hebrew Musically Characters are placed sometimes above the Letter, sometimes beneath, yet the Knowledge of what was signified by those Notes and Characters, was only continued by Tradition, and is now utterly lost, though many at sundry times (as appeareth by their wrytings) have gone about to revive it: But having no better subject to worke upon, then their owne weake conjectures, they have but a little prevailed.

After referring to the Characters used in the 'Rushian Church,' and the 'Latine Church,' and to 'Guido Aretinus'—a learned man, the first that invented the uniforme of the Scale'—&c., Ravenscroft says:

The five lines are used for Symphonaskes or Parts Compounded of 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 voices &c.

The sixe lines are used for Instrumentall Musicke, as Organs, Harpes, Lutes, &c.

But whatsoever the Tunes were in David's time, there is no question but they were concordant and Harmonious, which could not be, had they not bene divided in parts. For if ye looke into I Chro. chap. 15. 16 verse, ye shall see how the Prophet David at the Reduction of the Arke, as likewise Salomon his Sonne at the Dedication of the Temple, I Chro. chap. 6. 31 verse, distinguished all their Musicke in parts, and appointed such to be Masters and Overseers of it, as were most eminent for their knowledge in that kinde; as Chenaniah the chiefe Levite, to have the chiefe place, which was to be Master of the Song. An office, which consisted not only in the direction of the Quire; but likewise in the trayning up of others to sing, that there might be still a supply of able persons for that service: Asaph the next, and so Heman his Brother, likewise Jeduthun and Ethan, all of them the most renowned chanters of those Times, and such as successively in one anothers absence, were to direct the due performance of that charge, as that not only the voyce of the Singers, but likewise the sound of the Instruments agreed so well together, that they seemed to be but one Sound, and one Voyce.

He then refers to St. Paul's Epistle to the Colossians (chap. iii., v. 16) as a proof that 'this method' was not 'confined onely to the Old Testament.' Continuing, he says—and his words are words of wisdom, with full application in the present day:

I have therefore endeavoured for the fitting of every Heart to that Psalme, which it shall most affect, to place speciall Tunes, proper to the nature of each Psalme, (not imitating Art so much, as the naturall inclination, but joyning one with another,) and am bold to admonish the Singers that they observe three Rules.

1. That Psalmes of Tribulation be sung with a low voice and long measure. Psal. 9 &c.
 2. That Psalmes of Thanksgiving be sung with a voice indifferent, neither too loud, nor too soft, and with a measure neither too swift nor too slow. Psal. 18 &c.
 3. That Psalmes of Rejoycing be sung with a loude voice, a swift and jocund measure. Psal. 33 &c.
- In all which, the observing of Time, Tune, and Eare, will produce a perfect Harmony.

In reading this—allowing for the quaint phraseology—one might well imagine that these sapient observations had been written by a present-day enthusiast instead of by a pioneer of expressive singing who lived three centuries ago. In terms no less charming than fraternal, Ravenscroft thus concludes his Preface:

Accept Kindely, what I have laboured earnestly, and use it to thy comfort. Thus I end, humbly wishing to all true Christian hearts, that sweet consolation, in singing prayes unto God here upon Earth, as may bring us hereafter, to beare a part with the Quire of Angels in the Heavens.

Your well according, and best wishing Brother

THO: RAVENSCROFT.

Preceding a little dissertation entitled 'Of the Praise, Vertue, and Efficacie of the Psalmes,' Ravenscroft gives 'The names of the Authors which Composed the Tunes of the Psalmes into 4. parts.' Here is the list:

Thomas Tallis
John Douland Doctor of Musicke
Thomas Morley Bachelor of Musicke
Gyles Farnaby Bachelor of Musicke
Thomas Tomkins Bachelor of Musicke
John Tomkins Bachelor of Musicke
Martin Peirson Bachelor of Musicke
William Parsons
Edmund Hooper
George Kirby
Edward Blanks
Richard Allison
John Farmer
Michael Cavendish
John Bennet
Robert Palmer
John Milton
Simon Stubbs
William Cranford
William Harrison
Thomas Ravenscroft Bachelor of Musicke

Whether the foregoing musicians—truly a goodly company—who harmonized the tunes were, in any instances, the composers of them, is a matter for conjecture, as Ravenscroft himself does not furnish this information; he simply gives the names of those 'which Composed the Tunes of the Psalmes into 4. parts.'

A page of the book is devoted to 'An Index of such Names of the Tunes of the Psalmes, usually sung in Cathedral Churches, Colegiats, Chappels, &c. As also, the forraigne Tunes usually sung in Great Brittain.' These are given under the following heads:

English Tunes	Low Dutch Tones
Northern Tunes	High Dutch Tones
Stottish (sic) Tunes	Italian Tones
Welch Tunes	French Tones

in addition to 'English Tunes' imitating the High-Dutch, Italian, French, and Netherlandish Tones.

The spelling of some of the places in the Index and above the tunes themselves is somewhat different from present-day use, especially the 'Stottish Tunes,' e.g., Exceter, Carleile, Dumfermeling, Dundy, and Glascow. The melody of the tunes is always in the 'Tenor, or Playnsong,' as will be seen in the facsimile on page 580 (by-the-way 'Christ Hospitall Tune' is the only tune in Ravenscroft's Psalter named after a building, all the rest bear names of cities or towns). The cantus and tenor parts are always on the left-hand page of the book: the medius and bassus find their places on the opposite page; under every tune is printed the remaining verses of the psalm or hymn.

Here we find the first appearance of the tune St. David's, set to Psalms 43 and 95, in the following melodic form:

ST. DAVIDS TUNE. TENOR, or Playnsong. Tho. Rauenf. B. of M.

Vdge and reuenge my canfe O Lord, from them that eu ill be:

From vick ed and de ceit full men O Lord de liu er me.

A specially interesting feature of Ravenscroft's Psalter—of which a second edition was issued in 1633—is that it contains the first appearance of Tallis's Canon in its present four-line form. It is headed:

A Psalm before Morning Prayer. T. Tallis.

Cannon 2 parts in one.

The 'cannon' begins in the 'Tenor, or Playnsong,' thus:

Praife the Lord O ye Gen tiles all, which hath brought you in to his light: O praife him all peo - ple mor - tall, as it is moft vvorth ie and right.

In taking leave of this interesting old-time Psalter, with the lessons that may be learned from Ravenscroft's ideals of singing 'with understanding,' we hope as opportunity offers to similarly sample other books that have contributed to the uplifting of praise by the great congregation.

'MYLDE STEVEN.'

Mr. J. Edis Tidnam, organist of Stroud Parish Church, writes:—

In the course of a holiday ramble in Norfolk lately I came across the following curious inscription on a brass in St. Mary's Church, Holme-next-Sea, about three miles from Hunstanton. This church was rebuilt by Henry Notyngnam in the reign of Henry IV., 1399-1413, and the brass on the south side of the chancel arch to his memory contains the following three rhyming couplets:—

Herry Notinham and hys Wyffe lyne her yat maden this churche steppell and quere;
two vestments and bells they made also.
Christ Him saue therfore ffor Wo, and to bringe her saules to bliss of heven sayth pater and aue with mylde Steven.

'Myldre Steven' means 'mild' or 'soft' voice. The word 'steven' is Anglo-Saxon for voice. An instance of its use will be found in the ballad 'Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne' (Percy 'Reliques'), which contains this stanza:

When Little John hearde his master speake,
Well knewe he it was his steven;
'Now shall I be loosed,' quoth Little John,
With Christ his might in heven.

CHANT ADAPTATIONS.

The Rev. T. T. Levett, Frenchgate, Richmond (Yorks), writes:

Having read with much interest your article in the June number of THE MUSICAL TIMES on 'Great Composers and Chants,' I am venturing to send you the enclosed. It is obvious from it where the late James Turle obtained his well-known Chant in F (No. 287 in the Cathedral Chant Book); and yet I have never seen his indebtedness to Beethoven in this case acknowledged. I should be interested to know if any of your readers are aware of how much of it is Beethoven's and how little Turle's.

A WEST END ORGAN IN ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

Mr. John S. Bumpus writes in reference to the above article which appeared in our August number:

Your article on the Harris organ at the West End of St. Paul's puts me in mind of the series of Sunday afternoon services held in the Cathedral during the time of the Great Exhibition of 1851. The Choir being too small for the vast congregations which attended during those months, the afternoon service was transferred from the Choir to the westernmost part of the Nave, which was temporarily fitted up for these occasions, and an organ was placed in the gallery over the West door. I suppose there was the usual choir of eight to ten men and a dozen boys, and these would not have been sufficient to fill the space under the dome. Several people I know remember these services very well.

Messrs. Bishop & Son, who supplied the temporary organ at St. Paul's Cathedral, have sent us, in reply to our request, the following information concerning that instrument:

DEAR SIR,—The temporary organ that was used for the Sunday afternoon services in 1851 at St. Paul's Cathedral was an old instrument built by Gray and removed from St. George's Church, Ramsgate. It was on hire in the Cathedral from April, 1851, to November of that year, and from the entries in our books it appears to have been first put in the gallery at the West End and subsequently removed to a platform below.

At this date we cannot find anyone amongst our old workpeople who actually remembers the circumstances, but the acoustic properties of the Cathedral were such that the desired effect was not gained with the organ in the West gallery.

The instrument had a great organ of about nine stops, tenor C swell, and an open diapason on the pedal of, we believe, only nineteen notes. The pipes of the pedal organ were originally the unison notes carrying down the open diapason to GG. The organ remained in our hands for sale some few years after it was returned from hire, and ultimately went to a church in Surrey.

Yours faithfully,

BISHOP & SON.

The newspapers of the day record that the first service held in the Nave of St. Paul's Cathedral was on the afternoon of Sunday, June 22, 1851.

As Mr. Henry Gadsby, like Sir John Stainer, was a chorister of St. Paul's Cathedral in the year 1851, we asked him if he could give any reminiscences of that West End organ. He has kindly replied as follows:

I well remember the services at the West End of St. Paul's Cathedral in 1851, but being at that time a boy of nine years of age I am afraid I cannot give you much information. But an incident which occurred during the singing of the anthem one Sunday afternoon remains impressed on my mind. The anthem was 'God is our hope' (Greene), in the final chorus of which the Succutor gave one tempo and one of the Vicars-choral another. The sight of these two gentlemen each beating time against the other, and the cantoris singing a different time from the decani, was something to be remembered—at least it has never been forgotten by

Yours truly,

HENRY GADSBY.

Balanced swell pedal.

The organ—opened by Mr. W. W. Starmer on August 5—has been erected by Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Harris as a memorial to Clement Harris and to his sister Evelyn Mary Moore. The late Mr. Clement Harris was born at Wimbledon on July 8, 1871. He was educated at Harrow, and studied music at Frankfurt—the pianoforte under Uzielli and harmony under Knorr; he subsequently became a pupil of Madame Schumann. His published compositions include songs, pianoforte pieces, and an important orchestral work entitled 'Paradise Lost.' A most amiable and charming personality, Mr. Harris was a great Wagnerian enthusiast, a virtuoso on the pianoforte, and a highly-gifted composer. He was killed at the battle of Pentepigadia, fighting for Greece, April 23, 1897.

Mr. Alfred Hollins gave, on July 28, an organ recital at the church of Our Lady of Loretto and St. Michael-the-Archangel, Musselburgh, with his usual success, especially his masterly improvisation on the theme of the Fort Augustus chimes, which he treated most skilfully as an air with variations and final fugato. In the course of the recital the choir sang, under the direction of Dom Gregory Ould, who has edited the music, the 'Angelus ad Virginem,' a plain-song hymn on the Annunciation, in the Seventh or Mixolydian mode. A note in the programme refers to this composition, written about A.D. 1260, thus: 'This beautiful hymn tells in dramatically simple language, almost, in fact, in the words of the first chapter of St. Luke's Gospel, the story of the Annunciation and Incarnation of the Son of God. Its direct diction and the grace of its melody made it so deservedly popular in medieval England that Chaucer, in "The Miller's Tale," makes his country-folk gather round the house at Osney wherein the poor Clerk of Oxenford made melody o' nights.'

The organ in Lincoln's Inn Chapel, built in 1856, is being renovated and largely reconstructed with the addition of several new stops.

The birth-year of the late Mr. H. S. Irons is 1834, not 1838, as inadvertently stated on page 534 of the August issue.

SAMUEL REAY.

Mr. Samuel Reay died, we regret to record, at Newark-on-Trent, on July 21, at the ripe age of eighty-three years. Born at Hexham, March 17, 1822, he began his musical career as a chorister of Durham Cathedral, and studied under William Henshaw, the organist. He afterwards became a pupil of James Stimpson, then organist of St. Andrew's Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, whom he succeeded in the organistship. His various organ appointments were: North Shields Roman Catholic Chapel; St. Hilda's, South Shields; St. Michael's, Houghton-le-Spring; St. Andrew's, Newcastle; St. Thomas's, Barras Bridge, Newcastle; St. Peter's Parish Church, Tiverton; St. John's Parish Church, Hampstead (in succession to Father Willis); St. Saviour's, Paddington (the first organist of that church); St. Stephen's, Paddington; St. Peter's College, Radley (in succession to Dr. E. G. Monk); and the Parish Church, Bury, Lancashire. In 1864 he settled down at Newark-on-Trent as Song-Schoolmaster—an ancient foundation of the 16th century—and organist of the Parish Church; these combined offices he held for thirty-seven years, until his resignation in July, 1901.

As a composer Mr. Reay became widely known by his part-song 'The dawn of day.' This, with similar products from his pen, was written for a private choral society conducted by him at Tiverton, but at its first performance in London by Henry Leslie's Choir, it at once obtained fame. Another part-song by him, 'The clouds that wrap the setting sun' (which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES some years ago), was considered by the late Sir Joseph Barnby to be a composition of exceptional merit. Mr. Reay also wrote some very singable hymn-tunes, which have found their way into various hymnals, and he graduated Mus. B. at Oxford in 1871.

Mr. Reay claimed to have been the first organist who played Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March' at a nuptial ceremony. On this point he may speak for himself in a letter he wrote to THE MUSICAL TIMES of March, 1896, of which the following is an extract:

Referring to the query in your January issue as to whether Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March' was first performed at a nuptial ceremony in this country on the occasion of the wedding of the Princess Royal in 1858, I think I am able to throw some light on the subject.

At the foot of an organ arrangement I made of the march from a pianoforte duet copy of the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, just then published by Messrs. Ewer & Co., and within a day or two of the date mentioned, is the following record:

'Arranged for the organ by Samuel Reay, and played for the first time on such an occasion at the marriage of Mr. Tom Daniel and Miss Dorothea Carew, at St. Peter's Church, Tiverton, June 2, 1847.'

As both bride and bridegroom belonged to well-known and influential families, and the function had attracted an overflowing gathering of all sorts and conditions of people (the bride especially being greatly beloved), is it not just possible that the performance of the 'Wedding March' on this occasion may have had something to do with bringing it into fashion as a nuptial piece?

An entry on June 25 of the same year reminds me that on that day I made an arrangement of the lovely Notturmo from the same music, which I played very shortly after on the great Birmingham organ, when officiating there during an absence of my old friend and master, James Stimpson, for so many years the distinguished organist of the Town Hall.

The remains of Mr. Reay were interred, amid many manifestations of respect, in Newark cemetery on July 24, the first part of the service being held in the fine cathedral-like Parish Church of which he was formerly chief musician.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED IN THE YEAR 1844.

THE MUSICAL TIMES is the oldest English journal devoted to music and musicians; moreover, its existence has exceeded that of any other musical journal ever issued in this country. Started in June, 1844, it first appeared in the form of a modest sheet of eight pages: but in the intervening sixty years it has, like Topsy, "grewed," to about seventy pages every month.

Biography has been a special feature during recent years. Upwards of seventy Biographical Sketches, with special supplement portraits, have appeared since July, 1897. These articles have been received with much favour not only at home and abroad, but in Britain beyond the seas. English and foreign musicians of eminence, contemporary and bygone, have been included in this large gallery of MUSICAL TIMES Biographical Sketches: the subjoined list of names speaks for itself.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES WITH SPECIAL PORTRAITS THAT HAVE APPEARED BETWEEN JULY, 1897, AND AUGUST, 1905.

Illustrations have become an important and almost indispensable adjunct of present-day periodicals. This much-appreciated feature has of late been considerably developed in the pages of THE MUSICAL TIMES. The articles on English Cathedrals, London Churches, Colleges, &c., by "Dotted Crotchet," have furnished scope for the pictorial embellishment of the descriptive matter relating to these interesting subjects. The following places of interest have been included in the survey:

CATHEDRALS.
BANGOR.	NORWICH.
CHESTER.	OXFORD (CHRIST CHURCH).
CHICHESTER.	PETERBOROUGH.
DURHAM.	SALISBURY.
ELY.	TRURO.
EXETER.	WELLS.
LICHFIELD.	WINCHESTER.
LINCOLN.	YORK.

LONDON CHURCHES, &c.
ST. GILES'S, CRIPPLEGATE.
ST. ANNE'S, SOHO.
ST. ANDREW'S, HOLBORN.
ST. MARGARET'S, WESTMINSTER.
CHAPEL ROYAL.
FOUNDLING HOSPITAL.
CHARTERHOUSE

COLLEGES.
TRINITY, CAMBRIDGE.
KING'S, CAMBRIDGE.
ST. JOHN'S, CAMBRIDGE.
CHRIST CHURCH, OXFORD.
NEW, OXFORD.
ST. MICHAEL'S, TENBURY.
WINCHESTER.

This illustrated series will be continued, and also the articles on important musical libraries, public and private.

The survey under the heading Church and Organ Music has been greatly extended. The aim has been to provide matter that shall be both interesting and of practical helpfulness to those who officiate in "Quires and places where they sing."

The old-established characteristics of THE MUSICAL TIMES have been brought up to date. The "Occasional Notes" cover a wide range of subjects, and records of music-makings in various centres of musical activity are supplied by the leading writers on music abroad and in the Provinces. In the "Answers to Correspondents" section, no pains are spared in furnishing satisfactory replies to the questions asked, even though the interrogations be, as they often are, posers.

Reference may be made to the music—anthems or part-songs—appearing month by month, and to other well-known features of this old-established journal. THE MUSICAL TIMES has a large circle of friends and well-wishers in various parts of the world; and the many gratifying tokens of appreciation that are constantly being received, not only by letter but by frequent quotation in the Press, act as a stimulus to the Editor to increase the brightness of its pages and to make the paper more acceptable in the future even than in the past.

THE MUSICAL TIMES is published on the 1st of every month. Price 4d. Annual Subscription, post-free, 5s.

'THE BAY OF BISCAY'

This year of grace 1905 not only commemorates the centenary of Nelson and Trafalgar, but the famous nautical song 'The Bay of Biscay.' In our July issue, in some notes on Braham's 'The death of Nelson,' we drew attention to the fact that it originally formed part of a comic opera entitled 'The Americans.' Curiously enough 'The Bay of Biscay' was also first introduced in a musical piece having a foreign title—'The Spanish dollars, or the Priest of the Parish.' This was written by Andrew Cherry for the benefit of Incledon, the tenor singer, at Covent Garden, May 9, 1805. The plot—such as it is—of the piece mainly consists of a ship's crew having been cast upon the Irish coast. Scene 2 is headed 'an open country,' and the song is prefaced by the following dialogue, Joe MacMizen, impersonated by Incledon, being the captain of the foundered vessel:

Joe MacMizen.—We have escaped a bit of a squall, to be sure.

Sailor.—Squall!—Hurricane, you mean.

Joe.—Poo!—a cap-fall—nothing—a street-puddle in a shower to what I have weathered:—Why there was in our last voyage from St. Helen's, I remember in the Bay of Biscay, at the dead of a pitch-dark night, the wind blew great guns, the thunder roll'd, flash went the lightning, when the mainmast gave way with a most tremendous crash; we clapt stops upon the cables and secured 'em by ring-bolts upon the deck; the cable parted—the ship hung by the stream and kedg, and drove broadside on; a wave carried away our stern-boat, unshipt our rudder, and washed overboard our quarter-boards, binnacle, and round-house; there we lay—our men drenched with wet, and fainting with fatigue—till Providence hush'd the winds, becalmed the seas, hove another sail in sight, that took us up, and gave us strength and fortitude to proceed on our voyage.—When then should sailors despair, since the Breath that agitates, can lull the boisterous ocean.

SONG.

Loud roar'd the dreadful thunder, &c.

It is obvious from the foregoing extract that the song was sung on shore and not afloat—certainly not in the Bay of Biscay. But when Braham sang it he changed the environment of the song—from the peaceful shore to the stormy sea—by interpolating some notes in verse 4:

VERSE 4.

When heav'n all bounteous ev-er, Its bound-less mer-cy sent. (A sail! a sail! a sail!) A... sail in sight appears,

In order to pile up the agony the little tenor used to kneel on one knee at the words 'A sail.' At one of the Hereford Festivals he followed his usual custom, but entirely wrecked the effect he intended. It so happened that 'the platform was constructed with a rather high barrier on the side towards the audience, so that the little tenor was completely lost to sight. The audience, in alarm, thinking he had slipped down a trap door, rose like one man, and when Braham got up again, he was received with shouts of laughter.' May we not say that 'he was drowned in hilarity'?

'The Bay of Biscay' was composed by John Davy, a native of Upton Helions, near Exeter. A pupil of William Jackson, of Te Deum in F fame, he subsequently came to London, where he found employment in the orchestra of Covent Garden, and as a teacher of music. Upon his creative gifts becoming known, Davy was engaged to supply music to many dramatic pieces. 'The Spanish Dollars' (1805) is one of them, and contains the famous song 'The Bay of Biscay,' the only strain which has kept alive the name of its composer. In his latter days Davy seems to have fallen on bad times. He died, without a relative to tend him in his last illness, at May's Buildings, St. Martin's Lane, on February 22, 1824, 'in extreme indigence,' so the Harmonicon records, 'without leaving even sufficient to defray the expenses of his funeral.' We are indebted to the kindness of Mr. R. Bennett, clerk of St. Martin-in-the-Fields Parish Church, for supplying us with the following information concerning Davy's death and burial:

John Davey died Feb. 22 and was buried Feb. 28, 1824, in the churchyard here. He lived in May's Buildings, and died of consumption at the age of sixty-three. Interment fees £1. 15. 2, David Morgan, curate, officiating. In Oct. 1830 his remains were removed to Catacomb F at the east end of the churchyard, which was then bricked up.

It will be observed that the name in the burial registers of St. Martin's is spelt 'Davey.' The age (sixty-three) there given at the time of death does not agree with the year (1763) of his birth as stated in various biographical dictionaries.

WORCESTER FESTIVAL NOVELTIES.

The two 'first performances' at the meeting of the Three Choirs are works composed by the respective organists of Worcester (where the Festival is to be held) and Gloucester Cathedrals. Both composers—Mr. Ivor Atkins and Dr. A. Herbert Brewer—are to be warmly congratulated upon having chosen subjects that are free from that morbidness and depressing gloom which seem to fascinate young creative artists of the present day.

MR. IVOR ATKINS'S 'HYMN OF FAITH.'

In his cantata entitled 'Hymn of Faith,' Mr. Atkins has been fortunate in securing the co-operation of Sir Edward Elgar, who has 'arranged the words from the Holy Scriptures,' not the only instance, though by no means usual, of one musician collaborating with another. As the title of the work implies, the key-note of the cantata is Faith—'the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen,' and the working out of this idea has been skillfully accomplished in the 'arrangement' of the words.

Following a custom that was more or less established by Mendelssohn in his 'Elijah,' Mr. Atkins has employed the leitmotiven in the selection of two ancient themes as shown in the following example, which opens the work:

No. 1. (a) Moderato e solenne. $\text{♩} = 72$. (b) $\text{♩} = 60$. espress.

The first of these (a) is an ancient plain-song intonation of four notes; the second (b) is derived from the old ecclesiastical melody 'Vexilla regis prodeunt,' which is associated with J. M. Neale's translation of the hymn 'The Royal banners forward go' ('Hymns Ancient and Modern,' No. 96, old edition). Another theme, no less strong in its 'Faith' assurance, is strenuously announced by the orchestra thus:

whereupon enters the full chorus in unison tones of triumphant assertiveness:

The succeeding words are treated in responsive phrases, leading off with the altos in a melodious strain:

This opening chorus—which includes a beautiful and tender setting (voices unaccompanied) of the words 'Faith, the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen'—is well contrasted and full of interest, the music showing unsuspected strength in the composer, which deserves full acknowledgment.

A mezzo-soprano solo and chorus forms the next section. It opens (after a short recitative) with the words 'Unless the Lord had been my help, my soul had almost dwelt in silence,' which are sung to a pastoral accompaniment of appropriate tranquillity—key E flat, rhythm 12-8. In due course the soloist utters the words, 'For he that doubteth is like the surge of the sea driven by the wind and tossed,' a statement that rouses the chorus to exclaim in tones of no uncertain sound, 'But we are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation.' Thereupon, inspired by this confident assertion of the chorus, the soloist calls upon 'the people'—as Mendelssohn in his 'Elijah' insisted upon calling the chorus—to

The remainder of the work—which occupies twenty-five minutes in performance—reaches the same high level of contrastive effect, skilful musicianship, sustained interest, and artistic sincerity. Laid out for mezzo-soprano solo, chorus, and orchestra, Mr. Atkins's 'Hymn of Faith' is one that does him credit: it is a work that, by reason of conciseness, subject-matter, and opportunities for the chorus, should often be heard in church and concert-room after its production within the walls of Worcester Cathedral.

DR. HERBERT BREWER'S 'A SONG OF EDEN.'

In going to Milton for the words of his 'A Song of Eden' Dr. Brewer is on safe ground. Other composers have found in 'Paradise Lost' themes for the exercise of their creative gifts. We can recall that John Christopher Smith, Handel's amanuensis, composed an oratorio 'Paradise Lost'; for his oratorio 'The Intercession,' Matthew Prior King selected the words from Milton's immortal epic, a song from which, 'Eve's lamentation,' obtained extraordinary popularity; John Lodge Ellerton also composed an oratorio, 'Paradise Lost'; and, coming to later times, there is a setting by Rubinstein, the 'Paradis perdu' of M. Dubois produced at Paris in 1878, and 'Das verlorene Paradies' by Enrico Bossi.

Dr. Brewer, in setting lines from Books v. and vii. of Milton's great poem, has cast his composition—which occupies about fourteen minutes in performance—in the form of a choral and orchestral work; the accompaniment being scored for strings, the usual wood-wind, two horns, two trumpets, three trombones, drums, and organ (ad lib.). The following trio of themes from the work may be quoted:

The opening lines—from Book vii. of 'Paradise Lost'—strike the right note for the opening service of a Musical Festival, for which 'A Song of Eden' has been composed:

Now Heaven in all her glory shone, and rolled
Her motions, as the great First Mover's hand
First wheeled their course; Earth, in her rich attire
Consummate, lovely smiled.

These words, after having been declaimed in a stately phrase, are followed by lines selected from Book v. set in solemn chords for voices unaccompanied:

These are Thy glorious works, Parent of good,
Almighty! Thine this universal frame,
Thus wondrous fair; Thyself how wondrous then!
Unspeakable! &c.

Then follows an orchestral interlude of 52 bars, in which most of the themes are employed—in fact, thematic material is much in evidence, but as the themes are acceptable no objection can be raised to their ingenious and apposite use. For instance, on p. 11, at the words 'Fairest of stars, last in the train of Night,' Dr. Brewer introduces the 'Star' theme from his oratorio 'The Holy Innocents.' Ex. 3 is an instance of constructive workmanship, by reason of its frequent and varied appearance—a fragment here, and a rhythmic variant (3-4) there, and at the end, the second part of No. 1 (of which the first four bars only are quoted) is worked with it.

Technical workmanship, however skilful it may be, will not vivify an art-creation. So experienced a musician as Dr. Brewer is well aware of this. He has endeavoured, and we think with success, to obtain variety, and to make his music acceptable both to players and singers. In the choral portions of his work he has aimed at making the voice parts interesting as well as singable, and the important matter of declamation—too often neglected by composers because they are prone to orchestralize their voice parts—has received careful attention. 'A Song of Eden' is not only a work that will afford full scope to choral interpretative excellence, but it is the product of an earnest-minded musician.

TWO OLD-TIME* ANTHEMS.

Haste Thee, O Lord. Composed by John Shepherd.

Withdraw not Thou Thy Mercy. Composed by Thomas Attwood. Edited by John E. West.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

There is some doubt concerning the identification of the composer of the anthem 'Haste Thee, O Lord.' John Shepherd was organist of Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1542; but there was another John Shepherd, a gentleman of the Chapel Royal in 1606, and Tudway says the anthem is by Thomas Shepherd of the time of James I. Whoever the composer may be, his work deserves rescue from oblivion, for it is a stately and dignified composition in four parts, and an admirable example of its period.

Thomas Attwood's setting of 'Withdraw not Thou Thy mercy' was composed in January, 1827, and its revised form should give it renewed life. It opens with a solidly written chorus in four parts, to which succeeds a soprano solo of some length, after which comes the closing section of the anthem, laid out for first and second sopranos and chorus, and written in the composer's best style.

Musical Studies. By Ernest Newman.

[John Lane.]

The reputation which Mr. Ernest Newman has gained of being an erudite and cultured writer on music is fully endorsed in this volume of collected essays. It is true that they have already appeared in various magazines and journals; but—as the preface states—they have all been greatly altered and practically re-written. Therefore these Studies may be regarded as recording the ripest judgment of the author on the musical subjects of which he treats, no less than furnishing additional evidence of his literary skill.

The six essays forming the book are more or less on subjects which give rise to controversy; but no one can read Mr. Newman's pages without being impressed by his earnestness and the lucidity with which he expresses the truth that is in him. As a specimen of Mr. Newman's style we may quote from his first essay, an excellent study on 'Berlioz, romantic and classic': 'We are face to face, then, with a personality which, whether we like it or not, is of extraordinary strength and originality. If we are to realise what kind of force he was, and how he came to do the work he did, we must study him both from the standpoint of history and from that of physiological and psychological science. Musical criticism is apt to become too much a mere matter of wine-tasting, a bare statement of a preference of this vintage or a decided dislike for that. We need to study musicians as a whole, as complete organisms hanging together by virtue of certain peculiarities of structure. If a man does not like Liszt's music he compares it disparagingly with Wagner's—as if this placing of people on the higher or lower rungs of a ladder were the be-all and the end-all of criticism.' The last sentence in the book, which concludes an essay on 'Strauss and the music of the future,' must be quoted for its epigrammatic nature: 'The "Symphonia domestica" I take to be the work of an enormously clever man who was once a genius.' Mr. Newman will certainly not lack readers.

PART-MUSIC BY BRAHMS.

The Angel's Greeting. Mary and the Boatman. Mary's Wandering. The Hunter. A Prayer to Mary. In praise of Mary. Mary Magdalene. (Op. 22.) Text translated from the German by Paul England. Music by Johannes Brahms. [Novello & Company, Limited.]

With the exception of the last in the above list, each of the songs refers to the Virgin Mary. The character of the first is explained by its title. In the second Mary safely swims a river rather than entertain the admiration of the boatman. Mary's searching for her Son forms the subject of the third. 'The Hunter' relates the Annunciation, and 'A prayer to Mary' and 'In praise of Mary' are devotional. The incident referred to in the life of Mary Magdalene is her journeying to the sepulchre and her being greeted there by the risen Saviour. The naïveté of the original text has been preserved to a judicious extent by Mr. Paul England, and the music is typically Brahms in its earnestness and solidity.

PART-MUSIC FOR MALE VOICES.

Love in my bosom like a bee. Words by Thomas Lodge (1590). Music by F. Cunningham Woods.

The old soldier's dream. English words by W. G. Rothery. Composed by Peter Cornelius.

Sweet bird of hope. Words by T. W. Wheeler. Music by H. M. Higgs.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

Male-voice choirs should make early acquaintance with the above additions to Messrs. Novello's 'Orpheus' series. The title 'Love in my bosom like a bee' suggests an uncomfortable sensation, but this will be dispelled on listening to Mr. Cunningham Woods's music, which is melodious and interesting and reflects the quaint spirit of the words. The work is written for alto, tenor, and first and second bass.

'The old soldier's dream' is more ambitious in character, and the part-writing is more complex. It is laid out in six tenor and three bass parts, the first, third and fourth tenors forming a first choir, and the remaining voices a second choir. Variety and contrast are thus obtained, and in certain passages there occur some remarkably rich harmonic effects.

'Sweet bird of hope' is a less exacting composition. It is designed for alto, tenor, and first and second bass, and independence is shown in the form, in employment of rhythm, and in the part-writing. The music offers several opportunities for expressive singing, and would form excellent practice for the cultivation of elasticity of style.

Cherubini: memorials illustrative of his life. By Edward Bellasis. Second and enlarged edition.

[Birmingham: Cornish Brothers, Limited.]

Cherubini seems to have lost ground since the year 1874, when the first edition of this biography of the Florentine master was published. With such exceptions as the 'Anacréon' and 'Les deux journées' overtures, his name has all but disappeared from concert programmes, yet as a composer he was held in the highest esteem by such masters of music as Haydn, Beethoven and Berlioz. He lived during an eventful period—1760 to 1842—in the development of modern music, and as he passed the last fifty-four years of his long life in Paris, the incidents of his career are by no means lacking in interest. Moreover, he was a most prolific composer,—for a year (in 1787) he held the post of composer to King George III.—his creative output covering the whole range of music. At the opening of the Conservatoire de Musique at Paris, in 1795, he was appointed one of the three 'Inspecteurs des études,' and in 1822 Director of the institution; thus many students must have come under his influence. The story of Cherubini's life has been well told by Mr. Bellasis, who has compiled a memoir that may be read with interest and profit. The book contains four portraits of the composer, facsimiles of two drawings by him,—one of them very quaint—a portrait of Hummel, a view of Cherubini's tomb at Père-la-Chaise, where he was buried, and of the monument at Santa Croce, Florence, his native place. Excellently got up and with subject-matter of so much interest, the volume is one that should find its way into the libraries of many musicians.

PART-SONGS.

The sun is bright. Words by Longfellow. Music by H. Elliot Button.

Spring. Words from Shakespeare. Music by J. Müller. [Novello & Company, Limited.]

Longfellow's jubilant lines on the approach of Spring—one of which, 'There are no birds in last year's nest,' has well-nigh become a proverb—have been allied to gracious and vivacious music by Mr. Elliot Button, whose part-writing shows knowledge of what is chorally effective.

Mr. Müller has selected the familiar lines, 'When daisies pied,' from 'Love's labour lost,' and his first strain is happily suggestive of the rhythm of the old English country dance. The spirit of gaiety and railleury is well preserved throughout the song until the crisp and humorous close is reached.

MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

THE ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD, MOUNTAIN ASH, AUGUST 7 TO 11.

It was the turn of South Wales this year to arrange for this remarkable gathering. Mountain Ash rejoices in the possession of a magnificent permanent pavilion calculated to accommodate 10,000 people, and was in every way well prepared for the event. At the opening meeting on Bank Holiday, Lord Tredegar, the chairman, stated that he heartily endorsed the circular issued by the London Orchestral Association urging the more frequent employment of British professional musicians as against the alien element. At the brass band contest held on that day the Ogmores Temperance Band and the Ferndale Band gained prizes. On the second day Lord Aberdare presided and endorsed Lord Tredegar's plea for protection for native executants. Penillion singing attracted forty-one competitors; there were thirty tenor soloists, forty-nine contralto soloists, thirty-five pianoforte players, three amateur orchestral bands—in which section the Newport Orchestral Band, under Mr. Bartholomew, was the victor—and twenty-two children's choirs out of thirty-five that had entered. There was a general tendency on the part of the children to sing sharp, but some of the performances were excellent. The first-prize fell to the Waunarlwydd choir in one section, and in the boys' choir section to Siloa Aberdare School (Mr. E. J. Clements). During the day the attendance was not very good, and at the evening concert there was comparatively only a small audience. The chief choral competition was held on the third day. This class was open only to choirs of from 175 to 200 voices. The test-pieces were 'The Challenge of Thor' (chorus from Elgar's 'King Olaf'), 'Now the impetuous torrents rise' (Jenkins), and Sullivan's 'O gladsome light.' Five choirs competed, only one of which, Portsmouth, under Mr. W. E. Green, was from England. It is gratifying to record that the English choir had an excellent reception. Brynmanman Choral Society (Mr. E. Evans) gained the first position, Mid-Rhondda (Mr. E. Hughes) the second, and Cardiff Harmonic (Mr. R. Williams) the third. During the day about fifty soloists and forty pianists were heard. At the evening concert a new orchestral suite by Mr. D. Christmas Williams was enthusiastically received. The Eisteddfod Choir, under Mr. T. Glyndwr Richards, performed the 'Walpurgis Night' (Mendelssohn) and various selections. On the fourth day numerous soloists, violinists, and harpists were heard. It was declared that not one of the part-songs sent in for the composition prize was worthy enough to deserve the £10 prize offered. Three congregational choirs out of seven that entered came, but none of them sang satisfactorily. At the second chief choral competition there was not much public interest. Only six of the ten choirs which had entered came forward to sing, and again the singing was declared to be unsatisfactory. At the evening concert the 'Messiah' was performed to a large audience. On the last day the musical interest centred in the male-voice choir contest. The audience was only fairly large. For the 'glee-singing' class, the test-piece in which was German's 'O lovely May,' an accompanied part-song, three parties came, and tenor and baritone soloists galore were heard. Then came the seven male-voice choirs that had entered for the £50 prize offered in this section. The test-piece was the dramatic chorus, 'Homeward Bound,' by D. Christmas Williams. The decision of the adjudicators, although probably inevitable, was not of the kind at all popular at Eisteddfodau. The Resolven Choir (Mr. T. H. Evans) and the Rhymney Choir (Mr. Daniel Owen) were declared equal, and the sum of the first and second prizes was divided between them. Mr. Merlin Morgan's London Welsh Choir had a great and well-deserved reception. The chief musical adjudicators throughout the Eisteddfod were Sir Walter Parratt, Mr. Edward German, and Mr. D. Evans. On the whole the attendance of the public was not so great as usual, and probably a call will be made on the guarantors. The loss is, however, considerably lessened by the fact that many of the prizes offered for various subjects were withheld because of want of merit. Next year's Eisteddfod will be held at Carnarvon, North Wales.

NEWCASTLE-EMLYN, AUGUST 16.

Another Eisteddfod on a large scale took place at Newcastle-Emlyn, South Wales, on August 16. It is a striking evidence of the popularity of these events in the Principality that, notwithstanding the previous week's great event at Mountain Ash, which appealed to much the same musical constituency, about twelve thousand people it was estimated flocked to the later event. The competitions were held in a huge tent. The musical section of the programme attracted some first-rate choirs. Six choirs had entered for the chief class, the sole prize in which was £100, but only four competed. The Llanelly Choral Society were the victors. Three male-voice choirs came to compete for the £50 prize, with the result that the Cynon (Aberdare) male-voice choir, under Mr. R. P. Evans, who gave a very fine performance of the long and difficult test-piece 'Homeward Bound' (D. Christmas Williams), were declared the winners. Beside the choral competitions there were classes for solo voices and for pianoforte. The timetable was erratic. Events were suddenly called on and as suddenly postponed, but there was always at least outward good temper. The adjudicators were Dr. McNaught and Mr. J. T. Rees.

The dedication of the new Pro-Cathedral, Calgary—the first church of cathedral proportions erected in the North-West Territories—took place on Sunday, July 30. The Bishop of Calgary and the Rector (the Very Rev. Dean Paget) were assisted by the Bishop of Iowa, who preached the sermon. The musical part of the ceremonial was under the direction of Mrs. Annie Broder, and included the dedication hymn 'Urbs beata,' Gadsby's anthem, 'Except the Lord build the house,' and Bennett's Te Deum in D. The evening service was Ferris Tozer in D and C. H. Lloyd's anthem 'Sing unto the Lord,' accompanied by organ and orchestra. The singing of 'Onward, Christian soldiers' and Stainer's Sevenfold Amen concluded an impressive service.

Foreign Notes.

AMSTERDAM.

Dr. Henri Viotta, conductor of the Wagner Society of this city, who recently gave two admirable programmes of 'Parsifal,' has resolved to repeat that work every year. In the autumn he intends to give 'Tristan und Isolde.'

BONN.

Robert Schumann died at Endenich, near this city, July 29, 1856, and his mortal remains (also those of Clara Schumann) rest in the Bonn cemetery. The fiftieth anniversary of the composer's death is to be celebrated here next year, under the direction of Dr. Joseph Joachim, than whom no one more fitting could be found. Dr. Joachim was the faithful friend of the Schumanns; he followed both to the grave, and after the death of Robert Schumann was largely instrumental in making the composer's works known, thus helping to kill prejudice which for a long time prevented the just recognition of his genius.

DÜSSELDORF.

Spohr's 'Faust,' produced at Frankfurt in March, 1818, for a long while enjoyed great popularity, but it was at length thrown into the shade by Gounod's opera of the same name, a work which, though coldly received at first, soon achieved a success which has continued down to the present day. And now a third 'Faust' is announced. It is by Cyrill Kistler, composer of the music-dramas 'Kunihild,' 'Eulenspiegel,' 'Baldurs Tod,' which, we believe, have not been given out of Germany. This 'Faust,' the libretto of which is based on the first part of Goethe's drama, is to be produced at Düsseldorf. As no other name is mentioned, we may conclude that the composer has written his own libretto, as in the case of his other operas.

PARIS.

The season at the Opéra Comique recommences on September 5. Two novelties are announced: 'Les Chansons de Miarka,' by M. Alexandre Georges, and 'Les Pécheurs de Saint-Jean,' by M. Widor.—A statue to the memory of Benjamin Godard, the composer, is to be erected in the Square Lamartine. The sculptor is V. Champeil, grand prix de Rome.

ROME.

Maestro Ernesto Boezi has been appointed organist of the Giulia Chapel. He studied with Mustafa, former Maestro di capella at the Vatican, and he has not only achieved reputation as an organist, but has displayed gifts as a conductor. In 1892 his opera 'Don Paez' won the Sonzogno prize, and it was produced in the following year at the Fenice, Venice. Boezi is at the present time professor of the organ at the National School of which Mascagni is director.

The musical season of 1905-6 was preluded, as in many past years, by the commencement of the Promenade Concerts on August 19 at Queen's Hall. There is little to be said about the programmes so far, except to note the fact that no English music found a place on the opening night. One item of special interest up to the time of going to press may however be noted—a suite of Russian airs by Max Bruch, performed for the first time in England on August 22, and the appearance of the child violinist Sybil Keymer, who played Mendelssohn's Concerto very cleverly. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted with his usual enthusiasm.

The Musicians' Company have founded two additional scholarships—to be known as the Ernest Palmer Scholarships—at the Guildhall School of Music, entitling the holders to free tuition during a period of two years. Male candidates must have been chorists at either St. Paul's Cathedral or Westminster Abbey. Full particulars may be obtained from the Clerk to the Musicians' Company (T. C. Fenwick, Esq.), 16, Berners Street, W.

Mr. Arthur Collingwood has been appointed conductor of the Aberdeen Choral Union.

Answers to Correspondents.

R. W.—(1) You will find some catches in the 'School Round Book' (Novello). (2) Messrs. Augener publish some old dances for pianoforte and violin, by Bach and other composers. (3) The song 'Should he upbraid' is a paraphrase of Petrucchio's speech just before the entry of Katharina ('The taming of the shrew,' Act 2). It was, however, composed by Sir Henry Bishop for a revival of 'The two gentlemen of Verona' at Covent Garden Theatre, of which he was 'composer and musical director,' in 1821, and first sung by Miss M. Tree in that play, not 'The taming of the shrew.' (4) We do not know of any old recorder music, 're-edited for organ or pianoforte.' (5) Owners of 16th and 17th century musical instruments are naturally reluctant to lend such fragile and precious possessions for lecture purposes, especially if they would have to be sent long distances. Your local dealers in pianofortes, &c., may be able to give you some information in this matter.

G. S.—(1) When the canto fermo begins on the dominant and forms any part other than the bass, the initial chord should be tonic harmony in strict counterpoint. (2) Yes, the rule given on p. 127 of 'A Course of Harmony,' by Bridge and Sawyer, holds good. (3) In regard to adding florid counterpoint to a chorale, Bridge (Counterpoint primer) says, although 'counterpoint on a chorale is of a somewhat more free character than that written on a C F in semibreves,' yet 'the student is strongly advised to conform to the rules of strict counterpoint as far as is consistent with strength in the harmonies, and a smooth and dignified flow of parts.'

D. L. K.—Your tune is not without promise of something better in future. As, however, you ask for 'a candid opinion' and that you say 'do not spare my feelings,' we venture to point out a few eccentricities in the constitution of your bars—here a minim short, there a minim too many, in addition to other notational peculiarities which no doubt time and experience will rectify.

VIOLINIST (India).—The Kreutzer violin studies (Peters' edition) may be played at about these speeds: No. 8, dotted crotchet = 72; No. 13, crotchet = 88; those by Kayser (Book I.): No. 9, crotchet = 112; No. 10, crotchet = 96. Clearness must not, however, be sacrificed to speed. Many thanks for your words of appreciation.

H. H.—In the chorus 'Then did Elijah,' from Mendelssohn's oratorio, many conductors prefer a natural pronunciation of the second syllable of 'whirlwind,' as in speaking, and we think they are right.

W. H. S.—The only Musical Festivals to be held in England during the year 1906 are those of Birmingham and Hereford. You should lose no time in submitting any works to the respective committees, as they make their selections early.

'A THIRTY YEARS' SUBSCRIBER.'—Consult Hermann Smith's 'Modern organ tuning' (W. Reeves, 3s. 6d.) in regard to the 'relative strengths of upper partials in the tones of organ pipes.'

CANORUS.—No; but you would have no difficulty in procuring a suitable portfolio from any stationer. We are glad to hear that you 'value the collection [MUSICAL TIMES portrait supplements] very much.'

A. B.—(1) The 'recognised' versicles and responses at Cathedrals are the Ferial and Tallis. (2) See 'A Manual of Plain Song,' edited by Messrs. Briggs and Freere.

PRECISE.—By no means give 'the treble note singly.' The choir should be trained to start together, after a soft key-chord has been played on the organ.

S. E. L.—The best of the 'dumb piano' species is the Virgil Clavier, of which particulars may be obtained from the Virgil Piano School, 12, Princes Street, Hanover Square.

J. P. H.—The article on The Charterhouse appeared in December, 1903. The publishers can supply you with a copy.

VOCE.—See Dr. Hulbert's primer on 'Breathing for voice production' (Novello).

B. A. A.—'Quasi sognando' means 'rather dreamily.'

NOW READY.

THE COUNCIL SCHOOL HYMN BOOK

A COLLECTION OF HYMNS, WITH PRAYERS, FOR USE IN COUNCIL SCHOOLS

COMPILED TO MEET THE PARTICULAR NEEDS OF THE NEW EDUCATION
AUTHORITIES ESTABLISHED BY THE ACT OF 1902.

In preparing the work the Editors have been guided by two main considerations:—

1. To include only such Hymns as express the central truths of religion and are suitable to the minds and capacities of children.
2. To maintain such a literary standard as will bear comparison with the best books used in the general work of the schools.

The Hymns chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

In regard to the music of The Council School Hymn Book two editions are being prepared: (i) in the ordinary hymnal form for the purposes of accompaniment, and (ii) with the melody only of the tunes, but with the staff and tonic sol-fa notation combined for the use of the children in the schools. No less care has been bestowed upon the music than upon the hymns, all the tunes having been selected for their suitability and attractiveness.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

PRESS NOTICES.

CHRISTIAN WORLD.

Outwardly unpretentious, "The Council School Hymn Book" will be eagerly scanned by those who know how important it is to preserve sanity and wholesomeness in hymns that are often sung by children. But briefly, the aim of the editors has been to avoid sectarianism and doggerel; and they have succeeded so well as to prompt the wish that this book could displace those in use at the average Sunday school.

SCHOOL GUARDIAN.

We are agreeably surprised with this book, which from its title would seem to us to profess to be an undenominational hymn-book, but several hymns which we expected to find excluded from such a hymn-book are included. We only hope that its excellence will not prejudice it in the eyes of those who want to wear down the teaching in Council Schools to the low level of the world.

THE BOOKSELLER.

We do not think that a better hymnal for use in public elementary schools than the present could be wished or hoped for. The editors, it is sufficiently clear, were bound in such a publication to exclude strictly denominational hymns, and to select those only which express the central truths of religion. This they have consistently done throughout, and have at the same time admirably suited the varied collection to the capacities of the young. Such classics as "The spacious firmament on high" (Addison), "Hark! the herald angels sing" (C. Wesley), "Let us with a gladsome mind" (Milton), and other more modern hymns, of which the inclusion has been permitted by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, the Rev. J. Page Hopps, and Miss Betham-Edwards, among other writers; and the prayers at the end of the collection (and chosen on the same principle) for the opening and closing of school, and for certain special occasions, will be found well adapted to their object.

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

The contents have been selected by the standard of their religious truth and suitability to the mental capacity of children. At the end are forms of Prayer for the opening and closing of school, &c.

ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

A handy compilation for elementary schools, containing a great many familiar pieces by writers of various faith—Anglican, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Congregational, Quaker, and Unitarian.

BRISTOL TIMES AND MIRROR.

"The Council School Hymn Book" contains well and widely-chosen hymns, which express the central truths of religion, and are within the comprehension, and suited to the capacities, of children. At the end are prayers for the opening and closing of school, which have been selected on the same principle as the hymns. The collection is an admirable one, and deserves to be generally adopted.

WESTERN MORNING NEWS.

Whoever were the compilers of this book, they have discharged their task very well. The 150 hymns selected express the central truths of the Christian Faith, and with one or two exceptions are just suited to the comprehension of the children for whom the selection is intended. As should be, catholicity is the note of the book; cheek by jowl we find John Bunyan and John Keble; Walsham How and J. Montgomery; T. Kelly and F. W. Faber; J. Page Hopps and R. S. Hawker; C. Wesley and J. M. Neale; Bishop Wordsworth and John Milton; Baring-Gould and Isaac Watts. How's Diamond Jubilee Hymn, "O King of kings" appropriately finds its place, and perhaps Kipling's "Recessional" might have been included also. The short prayers at the end of the book are drawn up on the same broad principle as the hymns, and some special ones are added for "Our Country," "before and after holidays," for times of "dangerous sickness," and for those connected with the school who are in "trouble or sorrow." Altogether the compilation is a model of what such a book should be, and it richly deserves the widest use in the Council schools of the land.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The editors of "The Council School Hymn Book" had a somewhat difficult task before them in preparing a collection likely to meet with general acceptance. They appear to have succeeded admirably, judging by their book published by Novello & Co. In the pages will be found pieces well adapted for the public elementary schools, since while the literary standpoint aimed at is high, the central truths of religion contained in the hymns are conveyed in language suitable to the young.

THE SCOTSMAN.

A useful little compilation for elementary schools. It is handy, well edited, and well printed, and has no particular denominational tendency.

Price (limp Cover), 6d.

THE

PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—STAFFORDSHIRE CORRESPONDENT, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City.' 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneity, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance. The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs.

SCHOOL MUSIC

ALFRED R. GAUL

THE ELFIN HILL

A FAIRY OPERETTA.

"'The Elfin Hill' is founded on one of Hans Andersen's charming stories, and the libretto has been written in dainty and graceful language by Miss Baldwin. The operetta opens with a short overture describing moonlight on the Dovrefeld Mountains, and Mr. Gaul has been particularly happy in infusing the Norse spirit into that portion of his music which deals with goblin life in Norway. When the goblins become visitors in fairyland, the character of the music changes; lightness is its predominant feature, perhaps the choicest fragment being a fairy dance. This latter, together with a very characteristic dance of elves and a shadow dance, were beautifully executed."—Birmingham Gazette.

"Mr. Gaul has written nothing finer, nor more melodious and captivating in this branch of composition specially adapted for High Schools for Girls. Taking the Cantata as a whole, it is a delightful work, replete with artistic workmanship, and, above all, melodious and expressive."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"This charming work was composed for the pupils of King Edward VI.'s High School for Girls, Birmingham, and bears all the best marks of the composer's characteristically graceful style. The libretto is of a high order of merit, and worth the music, which from first to last is attractive and without a dull page."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"By the production of these Trios our townsman, Mr. A. R. Gaul, has made a valuable addition to the many beautiful and useful compositions he has formerly given to the public. Mr. Gaul's music is unfailingly charming, the voice-parts being so disposed that they may be easily learnt, and the accompaniments are as characteristic as they are pretty. Each separate piece is so good that we cannot make reference to special favourites. Young ladies who take pleasure in part-singing will find variety in the collection, and both in the home circle and in the school class Mr. Gaul's new work is sure to be heartily welcomed."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A feature of the concert of more than local interest was the production of a new work by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke—"Byron," a poem for chorus and orchestra. The choral portion may be omitted, but it has an obvious practical use in recommending the work to the attention of Festivals and Choral Societies. The choral portion is indeed vocal and effective, and contains some fine climaxes. There is distinction in the themes, and they are woven into a beautiful texture, glowing with colour. The climaxes are finely wrought. The choral portion is exceedingly tender and expressive.

LEEDS MERCURY.

Mr. Holbrooke's contribution to the recent Leeds Festival showed that in him we have a young composer of the highest promise, and his later work "Byron" emphasises the fact. The orchestral treatment forms the most happy feature. There are some broad choral effects, with poignant chords, that make for the end desired. The work has idea and interest, and it was performed under the composer's direction in a way that served to warmly recommend it. Needless to add, it was well received, and the composer-conductor warmly recalled.

PALM MALL GAZETTE.

Leeds has again gone forth to honour a new work by the young composer Joseph Holbrooke, entitled "Byron," and performed by the Choral Union, the whole having been done under the conductorship of the composer. The success of the work was great; and we are not in the least surprised, because Mr. Holbrooke is assuredly a musician who has come to make a great name in modern English music. . . . Our belief is great in Mr. Joseph Holbrooke.

MUSICAL WORLD.

We have examined the vocal score of his "Byron" poem, and are delighted with it. The colouring, always good, is subservient to the idée fixe of the words by Keats. The chorus is most judiciously written, for "Byron" breathes the presence of a poet as well as a musician.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Great interest was attached to the concert which was given in the Town Hall on December 7, by the first performance of a new work by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke—"Byron." The orchestration has many beautiful themes, which are interwoven with a masterly mind, and form a texture at once noble and interesting. The choral portion is particularly dainty and tender, and was sung with a fine grandeur of tone. Mr. Holbrooke must have been delighted with the cordial reception it received, especially from the choir, &c.

"Every musician knows that the Prelude to Act III. of 'Tannhäuser,' called 'Tannhäuser's Pilgrimage,' as played in the opera and at concerts is not identical with that originally composed. . . .

By the application of his blue pencil Wagner reduced a movement of 155 bars to one of 62 bars. The cancelled portions included so much matter dealing in the most powerful manner with the terrible climax to the pilgrimage—viz., the curse pronounced upon Tannhäuser by the Pope—an event scarcely hinted at in the later version, that we are justified in looking upon the composer's first conception of the Prelude as an entirely different piece and a much more faithful epitome of 'Tannhäuser's Pilgrimage.' . . .

Wagner did not make the change because he was displeased with the music qua music, but because he feared that his audience might fail to appreciate the significance of certain 'recitative-like orchestral phrases' descriptive of occurrences which are only referred to subsequently. . . . in the course of Tannhäuser's narrative. Perhaps another reason was that he did not think it wise to tax his hearers' patience by introducing an orchestral piece of 155 bars, in slow time throughout (Andante assai lento, crescendo = 56), so late in the course of the opera. Now that every Wagnerian knows his 'Tannhäuser' by heart, there should be no reason why the original version of this Prelude should not prove a most interesting addition to the répertoire of orchestral concerts. It seems a much more impressive and suggestive piece than the shortened version, and, moreover, it will be one of the very few remaining Wagner 'novelties' that we are ever likely to hear!—From an article, 'A Wagner Novelty,' by A. J. J., in THE MUSICAL TIMES, October, 1892.

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND,

D.Mus., Oxon.

This book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F.R.C.O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to prepare the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

INTRODUCTION

AND ALLEGRO

FOR STRINGS (QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 47.)

Full Score, 12s.; Quartet Parts, 4s.; Orchestral Parts, 7s.
Pianoforte Duet Arrangement (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenacity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naive little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here, in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER

SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS

FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY.

RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, FINAL AMENS,
VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER,
APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services and the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster,
Mr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns, and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

Separately, from the above:

THE RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS. Price 6d.
THE CANTICLES. Price 4d.

The King, Aug. 19, 1905, says: "Mr. Henry Beaumont is an oratorio tenor of eminence, and in this direction few English tenors are so widely popular as he, or so much in demand. His voice is wonderfully reminiscent of Sims Reeves; there is the same timbre, the same expression."

The Buxton Advertiser, Aug. 30, 1905, says: "Mr. Beaumont is one of the best, if not the best of oratorio tenors, and his voice reminds one very forcibly of the late Mr. Sims Reeves. He received the heartiest of welcomes, and sang with all that verve we are accustomed to in him."

The Derbyshire Advertiser and Journal, Dec. 30, 1904, says: "To say that Mr. Henry Beaumont is a tenor recalling with credit to himself Mr. Sims Reeves and Mr. Joseph Maas is a high compliment, but it is not undeserved."

Address, 11, Warwick Road, Maida Vale, London, W.

MR. VIVIAN BENNETTS

having relinquished some of his onerous duties at St. Paul's, has more time to accept Oratorio and Concert ENGAGEMENTS in London and the Provinces, and also to receive a limited number of Pupils.

Address, 7, Matheson Road, West Kensington, W.

MR. HENRY PLEVY

(TENOR).

"HIAWATHA."—LEIGHTON BUZZARD.—"Mr. Plevy rendered the song of Chibiabos in a truly artistic fashion, his effort being rewarded with unstinted applause. It was sung with an absolutely pure tone that could not fail to gain a great reception for the vocalist."—Leighton Observer.

"HIAWATHA'S DEPARTURE."—EALING.—"Displayed a powerful voice of resonant quality, and was heard to great advantage in the declamatory parts of his role. 'He had seen, he said, a water,' was a number in which Mr. Plevy was quite at his best."—Middlesex County Times.

"MESSIAH."—FAVERSHAM.—"Displayed a very clear voice and faultless articulation... 'Comfort ye' and 'Every valley' were capitally rendered by him, and indeed, his work throughout was that of a talented vocalist."—News.

"Has a voice of exceedingly pleasant quality... was responsible for highly appreciative interpretations of 'Every valley' and 'Thou shalt break them,' and accomplished every one of his numbers with great clearness and expressiveness."—Mercury.

MR. WILLIAM WILD
(TENOR).

(Pupil of Andrew Black, Esq.)

Of the "Sir Charles and Lady Hallé South African Concert Tour," 1905; London (Queen's Hall) Concerts, and principal Provincial Choral Societies; Manchester (Gentlemen's) and Richter Concerts. Also of the Constantinople Choral Society's Concerts.

"The impersonation of Rinaldo has been sustained by Mr. William Wild, whom the Choral Society of Constantinople had especially engaged from England for this production. He possesses a fine tenor voice of sufficient strength, and above all, uses it very artistically."—Stamford Journal, March 19, 1904.

"Mr. William Wild, who has been specially engaged by the Constantinople Choral Society, is the possessor of a fine tenor voice of a very sweet quality, and entirely under command. His rendering of the important tenor solos was brilliant, while his artistic merits are enhanced by his modest demeanour."—Levant Herald and Eastern Express, March 21, 1904.

"The tenor, Mr. William Wild, who had come especially from London to sing 'The Crusaders,' proved a great acquisition to the Society. His voice is a pure and very sweet tenor, over which he has complete control. In his solo work and in connection with the chorus, he showed himself a true artist, and it is to be regretted that engagements in England prevented him from giving the public more opportunities of hearing him in this city."—Le Monteur Oriental, March 26, 1904.

MR. ARTHUR WALENN
(BARITONE).

Now Booking for Next Season.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S "EVERYMAN."

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, RICHMOND, May 3. Of this Concert—The Herald says: "Mr. Arthur Walenn's fine baritone voice was heard to much advantage in the exacting solos for Everyman."

The Surrey Comet: "Mr. Arthur Walenn gave to the character of Everyman the deepest expression and impressiveness, at the same time avoiding that exaggeration which would tempt a singer of less culture."

The Richmond Times: "Of the soloists, the place of honour must certainly be given to Mr. Arthur Walenn, who, as Everyman, had so much to do. It was always difficult, requiring great variety and expression, to ward off a suspicion of dullness that might otherwise have crept in. In Mr. Walenn's hands nothing of the kind happened; he has a bass voice of very pleasing quality, well under control, and was evidently thoroughly acquainted not only with the music itself, but with the spirit of the work."

South Wales Daily Telegraph: "HIAWATHA" (conducted by the composer).—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was heard to real advantage. The first part was full of poetry and imagination, and in the 'Vision' ('True is all Iago tells us') he sang with a dramatic intensity which was little short of a revelation."

London Daily Courier: "ELIJAH."—"Mr. Arthur Walenn afforded us an intellectual and musical treat in his embodiment of the idea of the Prophet Elijah. To enact a character of this kind, an arduous duty is imposed on the singer, who not only requires a voice of good power and range, but an artistic insight into the nature of the subject to be dealt with is imperative. That Mr. Walenn fulfilled these attributes is undeniable, and nothing but praise can be accorded him for a really superb delineation of the part."

Liverpool Daily Post: "The 'MESSIAH' at Liverpool."—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was very successful in sustaining the bass solos, both voice and vocalization being excellent."

MR. HENRY SUNMAN

(BASS).

Licentiate (Artist) of the Royal Academy of Music, of the Gloucester, Cheltenham, and Tewkesbury Festivals, &c.

"ST. PAUL" (SWINDON).—Of the artists Mr. Henry Sunman was undoubtedly the favourite with the company. From the beginning he created a good impression, and in each of his efforts his exceptional abilities were demonstrated. "Cumme them all" was rendered with much verve, while the aria, "O God, have mercy," brought into prominence the resonant qualities of his voice in a striking manner. His association with Mr. Plevy in a couple of duets was also productive of good results."—North Hills Herald, April 14, 1905.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

'To think that if those two little boys hadn't been playing on the oboe when Handel was driving a donkey up the Haymarket this Society might never have existed!' In these words did a benevolent, deaf old gentleman relate to Sir Arthur Sullivan the origin of the Royal Society of Musicians. He had attended one of the anniversary festivals and listened, or tried to listen, with intense interest to all that was sung or said. He was delighted with everything—the dinner, the music, and the speeches; but what impressed him most was the romantic story of the origin of the Society as he had understood it from the lips of the chairman—'Handel driving a donkey up the Haymarket,' and so on.

The dear, deaf, delighted diner had, by reason of his infirmity, 'got hold of the wrong end of the stick.' The Society came into existence thuswise. In the year 1738 Michael Christian Festing, a distinguished violinist, Weidemann, a flautist and music-teacher of King George III., and Vincent, an oboeist, were standing at the door of the Orange Coffee House, in the Haymarket, when they saw two interesting boys driving milch asses. Upon inquiry those two donkey-drivers proved to be the orphans of Kytch, a celebrated oboeist, who, after a dissolute life, was one morning found lying dead in St. James's Market. As John Parry, a former Honorary Treasurer of the Society has said: 'With a feeling that reflects honour on their memories, those three musicians entered into a subscription to rescue the children of their departed brother professor from such a degrading situation; and on consulting with several other eminent musicians on the necessity of raising a fund to alleviate the distress of their indigent brethren, their widows and orphans, they established, on April 19, 1738, the benevolent institution now known as the Royal Society of Musicians.'

A rare pamphlet, in the possession of Dr. W. H. Cummings, the Honorary Treasurer of the Society, is entitled:

The Laws and Resolutions of several General Meetings, for the future Regulation and Management of the Fund for the support of Decayed Musicians and their Families. London. 1761.

Under the heading 'The Society's Laws,' dated May 8, 1738, we gather the following information:

Whereas a Subscription was set on foot the Beginning of the last Month, for establishing a Fund for the Support of Decay'd Musicians, or their Families; which Subscription having already met with uncommon Success, the Subscribers have had two General Meetings, in order to form themselves into a regular Society, by the name of THE SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS, and have elected Twelve Governors for the present Year, and also agreed to the following Resolutions.

'Law I.' reads:

That every Subscriber to this Charity do pay, at least, Half a Crown a Quarter; the first Payment to be made on, or before, Midsummer-day next.

'Law II.' also refers to finance, and orders that all moneys are to be paid into 'the hands of Mr. Andrew Drummond, Banker.' In this connection it may be mentioned that Messrs. Drummond are to this day the bankers of the Society; thus an exceedingly pleasant business connection has been maintained unbroken for the long period of 167 years.

The 'Declaration of Trust'—an indenture dated August 28, 1739—has the following preamble:

Whereas in the month of April in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and thirty-eight a subscription was set on foot for establishing a Charitable Fund for the support of decayed musicians or their families which subscription having met with uncommon success there were very soon after (pursuant to notices published in the public newspapers) two general meetings had of the then subscribers in order to form themselves into a regular society, by the name of THE SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

THE ARMS OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

No fewer than 226 musicians subscribed to this document, thereby becoming members of the Society. Among the names are those of George Frederick Handel, Esq.,—the only name having the affix 'Esq.'—Arne, Beard, Boyce, Courteville, Henry Carey, Festing, Dr. Greene, William Hayes (of Oxford), Pepusch, Edward Purcell, John Robinson, Thomas Rosingrave, John Ravenscroft, Christopher Smith and his son J. C. Smith. Handel was not only an original member of the Society, but one of its warmest supporters. At his death, in 1759, he bequeathed £1,000 to its funds, the clause in his testamentary dispositions reading:

I Give to the Govenours or Trustees of the Society for the Support of decayed Musicians and their Families one Thousand pounds to be disposed of in the most beneficial manner for the objects of that Charity.

A still greater legacy did Handel leave to the Society and, indeed, to the sacred cause of charity in its widest sense, in his immortal art-creations. At the Handel Commemoration Festival held in 1784 in Westminster Abbey, the greater part of the proceeds were given to the Society, whereby its assets were increased by the princely sum of £6,000; five subsequent festivals in the Abbey—1785, 1786, 1787, 1790, and 1791—brought an additional £10,000, thus making a grand total of £16,000 to this charity alone, resulting from the performance of Handel's oratorios.

Dr. Burney, in his invaluable 'Account' of the Handel Commemoration held in 1784, thus refers to the Society, of which, by-the-way, he was an early member: 'No charitable institution can be more out of the reach of abuse, embezzlement, or partiality; regulated with more care, integrity, and economy; or have its income so immediately derived from the activity and talents of its own Members.'

To return to chronological order, mention must be made of an interesting and intimate connection between the Society and an older and similar benevolent institution, 'The Sons of the Clergy.' In 1739, the year after the formation of the Royal Society of Musicians, the Governors 'resolved nem. con. that they would supply an able Band of Music at the Rehearsal and Anniversary of the Sons of the Clergy [held in St. Paul's Cathedral] for the sum of £50 and, upon payment of that Sum annually to their Charitable Fund, that they would never increase the Demand upon any future Occasion.' This arrangement, which lasted till within living memory, made it necessary that the orchestral members of the Society should give their services at the Sons of the Clergy Festival. So stringent was this rule that, at a general meeting held in 1753, it was resolved, on the motion of the chairman (Dr. Greene) who, be it noted, was also conductor of the Sons of the Clergy Festival—that all persons appointed to perform at St. Paul's who absented themselves without giving satisfactory reasons 'shall be excluded the Society'! It has been well said that 'such a partnership between the charitable societies of two professions is of historical interest,' one worthy to be kept in remembrance.

On August 26, 1790, George III.—who always showed a very practical interest in music—granted a Charter to the Royal Society of Musicians. Subjoined are the preamble and some extracts from this important document:

GEORGE THE THIRD by the Grace of God of Great Britain France and Ireland King Defender of the Faith and so forth TO ALL TO WHOM these presents shall come greeting

WHEREAS THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS OF GREAT BRITAIN have for many years past held frequent meetings within our City of Westminster and come to several resolutions for the establishing a Fund for the support and maintenance of decayed Musicians and their families

WILMOT.

The Coat of Arms is reproduced on p. 637. Not only did George III. grant a Charter but, at a performance of the 'Messiah' given in aid of the Society in St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, in 1792, he presented £100 to the charity and, moreover, in 1804—when funds were sorely needed—his Majesty gave a further proof of his interest in its operations by the handsome donation of 500 guineas.

In 1791, the year following the granting of the Charter, Haydn visited England for the first time. He appears to have attended the annual dinner of the Society in 1792, for which festive occasion he specially composed a march for full orchestra. Strangely enough, although the band parts of this march were known—having been frequently played from since 1792—Haydn's autograph score of the composition seems to have disappeared. But, thanks to the persevering search of Dr. Cummings, it has recently been discovered. By his kind permission we are enabled to give a facsimile of this unpublished composition of the genial 'Papa's' as one of our special supplements to the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES.

During the visit of Weber to England in 1826—it will be remembered that he died in London during his sojourn here—he scored a march for wind instruments for the anniversary festival of the Society. This was the March in C from an early work—his Opus 3—originally written for pianoforte duet; but he composed an entirely new Trio for the occasion. This MS. was the last composition penned by Weber in his own hand. The autograph of this has also just come to light. Both scores have now been well bound in red morocco and stamped in gold with the arms of the Society. Weber was, however, too ill to attend the annual festival for which he had prepared the march. Other marches that have been specially composed for the Society are by Winter, Cipriani Potter, and Sir Henry Bishop. As a boy of twelve Franz Liszt played at the annual dinner held in 1824 (June 5). The Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review (vol. vi., p. 241) thus records the boy's pianoforte performance:

We heard this youth first at the dinner of the Royal Society of Musicians, when he extemporized for about twenty minutes before that judgmatial audience of professors and their friends.

In the following year (1825) an interesting performance is thus recorded in the same periodical:

At the dinner of the Royal Society of Musicians, on Thursday, the 21st of April, two youths from Germany, of the name of Schulz, and their father, performed on two guitars, and an instrument unknown as yet in this country, the Phys-harmonica. These talented boys are under the patronage of his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex. The eldest is apparently about 14 years of age, the youngest 12. They possess the feeling and have pursued exactly that line of study so much required in musicians at the present day—neat and expressive execution, joined to energy and refined taste. They seem to delight in their own performance, to feel every note they play: this is the true secret of the musical art. The first piece they performed was an introduction and variation upon Mozart's 'Away with melancholy.' The new instrument, the Phys-harmonica, here displayed its powers and effects. About the shape and size of a dressing case or writing desk, this little instrument, which has a small set of black and white keys similar to that of the piano forte, has an insignificant appearance; its construction however resembles the celestina—the sounds are produced by working a pulley and wheel with the foot, and the entire effect resides in the touch, by which the swell or crescendo and diminuendo are produced. The tone of the Phys-harmonica is similar to but much sweeter and purer than the oboe, and the effect during performance, when contrasted with the slight tinkling sounds of the guitars, resembled the peal of a distant organ. The music performed was evidently written for the effect of this combination, the variations to Mozart's air especially, which were in the very best style, and suited to the power of the boys. The youngest has uncommon facility and strength of execution, and gave the obligato passages allotted to him with the most judicious skill, and the delicacy and peculiar effects produced by the eldest called forth bursts of approbation from the professors, and indeed from the whole room. Altogether this was one of the most pleasing and unassuming exhibitions we have witnessed for a long time—no prodigies were attempted, no unnatural sacrifice of expression to execution, but a pure and effective style has been retained, that must ensure them the approbation of the public wherever they go.

Edouard Schulz (1812-1876), one of the boys just mentioned, was an excellent pianist, and became the favourite teacher of the English aristocracy. He bequeathed the sum of £1,000 to the funds of the Society, making the fourth legacy of a similar amount left by foreign musicians settled in London, the others having been Handel, Signora Storace, and Signor Begrez. Other £1,000 legacies have been those of John Crosdill and Miss C. E. Fenn; and in this connection mention may be made of the last legacy notified to the officers of the Society—that of £100 bequeathed by a non-member, the late Mr. Walter Macfarren. The name of the late Mr. Thomas Molineux must be held in grateful remembrance as a benefactor of the Society, his gifts amounting to the munificent sum of £2,000.

Two other distinguished foreign musicians honoured the annual dinner of the Society with their presence—Mendelssohn, as a youth of twenty, in 1829, during his first visit to England, and Berlioz. The Spectator of June 13, 1829, in a notice of the banquet, thus refers to the composer of the 'Scotch' Symphony:

Mr. Mendelssohn most kindly gave his assistance in an extempore fantasia on the pianoforte, in which he introduced, successively, subjects from the Sinfonias of Mozart, Haydn, and Beethoven; treating them with the skill and science of an accomplished musician.

At the Festival of 1848, on the occasion of his first visit to England, Hector Berlioz was toasted 'with unanimous and long-continued plaudits.' In returning thanks, in the French language, the distinguished guest 'paid several compliments to the musical taste and feeling of the English nation, and expressed himself highly flattered by his reception in this country, and gratified by the manner in which his works had been executed by our artists.'

Unusual distinction was accorded to the annual banquet of 1838, to celebrate the centenary of the foundation of the Society, in that—so it is said—ladies were for the first time invited to a public dinner. The centenary festival was held on April 19 at Freemasons' Hall, concerning which portentous event—the presence of the ladies—the Musical World of April 26, 1838, must be quoted:

Many well-disposed persons were much alarmed at the introduction of the fairer portion of the creation to the festive board, lest improper characters might gain admission; but every precaution was taken by the committee, from whom only tickets were to be procured, and the names of the parties were written on the face of the admission card. Lord Burghersh, who had kindly undertaken to preside, advocated the cause of the ladies most strenuously, in which he was warmly seconded by the honorary treasurer, Mr. Parry, who was looked upon as the conductor of the feast. Lady Burghersh too, in the kindest manner, consented to honour the festival with her presence, and also to invite several other distinguished persons to "support the Chair." No sooner was her Ladyship's intention made known, than the demand for tickets became great beyond calculation; but the committee only issued the exact number that could be accommodated in the Freemasons' Hall, which amounted to 375.

At half-past five o'clock Lord Burghersh took the chair; on his right hand were the Duchess of Richmond, the Duke of Cambridge, Lady Fitzroy Somerset, Colonel Jones, Miss Fitzroy Somerset, Lady Burghersh, Dr. Elliotson, Sir Robert Gill, &c., &c. The President and his friends were ushered into the Hall by the committee, consisting of thirty members of the Society, wearing white rosettes, and bearing white wands, amid the loud applause of the company, all standing up; the sight at this moment was exceedingly brilliant, for the tables had been elegantly ornamented, and the Hall was well lighted. The President's table ran across the upper end of the Hall, and there were five tables the whole length of the body, with a platform on one side, for the pianoforte. A temporary orchestra was erected under the gallery, for a band of wind instruments . . . which played after dinner two splendid marches composed for the Society by Haydn and Winter, in a style of excellence not to be exceeded.

After giving a detailed account of other music that was performed—in which De Beriot had a share—the report refers to the after-dinner oratory of that centenary feast:

Mr. W. Horsley [the glee composer] in proposing the health of Lord Burghersh, entered into a brief detail of the great good which the Society had done since its foundation a hundred years ago; and he paid the noble President many deserved compliments, both for his encouragement of the musical art and his readiness at all times to promote the interest of the Society whose cause he was advocating. Lord Burghersh returned thanks in a very well expressed address, and requested that it should not be forgotten that it was the Royal Society of Musicians that first set the example of inviting ladies to honour with their presence a public dinner; and his Lordship announced that H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge had kindly consented to preside next year. This announcement elicited many hearty cheers from the gentlemen present. His Royal Highness expressed himself highly pleased with the proceedings of the day, and assured the Society of his most anxious wish to promote its interest.

The pecuniary outcome of the evening's feast of good things amounted to the sum of £400, which included a donation of ten guineas from M. Thalberg. No dire calamity seems to have resulted from the presence of 'the fairer portion of the creation' at this festive board.

In addition to the annual Festival, oratorio performances—chiefly of Handel's 'Messiah'—have been given by the Society, often in consecutive years, whereby the funds have been greatly augmented.

During the first seventy years of the Society's existence the monthly and other meetings were held at various public-houses, including the 'Crown and Anchor Tavern,' Strand,—a famous musical hostelry—and, for many years, at the 'King's Arms,' Marylebone Street. In June, 1808, the Society purchased some freehold land in Lisle Street, on the north side of Leicester Square—land which, in 1649, belonged to the Earl of Leicester. Like all old thoroughfares in the heart of London, Lisle Street is not without interesting associations. Here David Hume lived and Edmund Kean passed a large portion of his strangely erratic boyhood. It is said that his uncle, Moses Kean, had a brass collar made to be placed round Master Edmund's neck, the said doglike appearance being inscribed with these words: 'This boy belongs to 9, Lisle Street, Leicester Square; please bring him home.'

The home of the Royal Society of Musicians is at No. 12, Lisle Street, where, for nearly one hundred years, its benevolent work has been carried on. A large and lofty room and other offices were specially built on ground that aforesaid served as gardens to the houses in Lisle Street. A view of the principal room is given on p. 639. Here are preserved many interesting and valuable treasures belonging to the Society. The portraits which adorn the walls are particularly noteworthy. Chief among them by reason of its stretch of canvas is a full-length representation by Gainsborough of George III., and presented by that music-loving monarch. There are oil paintings of Handel, by Hudson; Corelli, by Hugh Howard, the Irish portrait-painter; Henry Purcell, by Closterman (all three of these are included in the illustrations of the present article), and Geminiani, by Hudson. This quartet of portraits formerly belonged to Redmond Simpson, at one time an active member of the Society. He bequeathed them to the Antient Concerts, and for many years they adorned the walls of the royal box at the Hanover Square Rooms. At the dissolution of the Antient Concerts, and in accordance with the terms of Mr. Simpson's will, they passed into the possession of the Royal Society of Musicians. Other portraits belonging to the Society are those of Beethoven, with his autograph on presenting it to Charles Neate—the curious delineation of the great composer formed one of the special supplements to THE MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1901—C. E. Horn (the composer of 'Cherry ripe'), Pocock; John Parry, the elder; Sir William Parsons, and others.

A specially interesting document, duly framed and glazed for preservation, is a list, in the handwriting of Thomas Purcell, of Charles the Second's band of 'four and twenty fiddlers.' Of this we give a reduced facsimile on page 643. Thomas Purcell—uncle to the great Henry of that distinguished family—and Pelham Humphreys were associated as Masters of the King's Band, but Purcell was chief and leader of the 'four and twenty fiddlers,' either by virtue of seniority or special appointment. Dr. W. H. Cummings, in his 'Life of Purcell,' gives the royal warrant whereby Purcell and Humphreys were appointed to their joint office in the service of the 'merry monarch.' It reads thus:

CHARLES R., by the Grace of God, &c., to our trusty and well-beloved Sir Edward Griffin, Knight, Treasurer of our chamber, now being, &c. Whereas we have been pleased to take into our service as Composer in Ordinary for the Viols, Thomas Purcell and Pelham Humphreys, Gents., in the room of George Hudson, deceased, and for their entertainments in consideration of services done, and to be done, unto us, we have given and granted, and by these presents do for us, Our Heirs and Successors, Wee do give and grant unto the said Thomas Purcell and Pelham Humphreys for their wages and fee, the sum of fifty-two pounds, fifteen shillings and tenpence, by the year, during their natural lives, and the life of the longer liver of them, the first payment to commence from the feast of St. Michael the Archangel, 1672.

Given under our Signet at our Palace of Westminster, the Eighth day of August, in the year of our Lord God, One thousand six hundred and seventy-two (1672).

Ex. JOHN NICOLAS.

As the foundation of the Royal Society of Musicians had made no provision for the admission of female members, several ladies of distinction in the musical profession established, in 1839, The Royal Society of Female Musicians; but in order to avoid the expense of working two societies and to secure combined sympathy and support, the two organizations were happily amalgamated on April 2, 1866.

To turn from the past to the present, a few figures may, in conclusion, be given, showing the scope and operations of this old Society. The present membership is about 220. The funded property amounts to about £100,000, which yields some £3,000 per annum. Last year the sum of £4,753 was paid in claims, the difference in that amount and the annual dividends being made up by members' subscriptions (£800), annual subscriptions, &c. The amounts paid to invalided musicians vary from five guineas a month and upward; in cases where a family of children is involved the payment may extend to £150 per annum. Relief is also afforded to non-members. When King George III. was informed that the Society exceeded the limits of the Charter by relieving distressed musicians who had no legal claim upon its funds, His Majesty pointedly remarked: 'I am glad to hear it, for that is true charity.'

For valued help in the preparation of this article and permission to take photographs, &c., full acknowledgment is due to Dr. William H. Cummings, the Hon. Treasurer since 1876—an office he has worthily held with distinction to himself and of immense benefit to the financial status of the Society, and to Mr. Charles A. Lucas, the Secretary.

The musical landmarks of London are rapidly disappearing. St. James's Hall has gone, and last year the house in Great Portland Street (at the corner of Ridinghouse Street) where Mendelssohn lodged was rebuilt. And now we have to record the demolition of 'The Hoop and Horseshoe,' a public-house situated close to Tower Hill, in order to make a new northern approach to the Tower Bridge. In this house—from the front of which was suspended an iron hoop encircling a horseshoe—Richard Wagner, his little wife and his big dog, passed the first night that he set foot on English soil in the year 1839. He was then twenty-six, and with his belongings had arrived at the docks from Pillau, a Baltic port. The voyage, in a sailing vessel, was a terrible one, and lasted nearly a month. 'Three times,' he says, 'we suffered from the effects of heavy storms. The passage through the Narrows made a wondrous impression on my fancy. The legend of the Flying Dutchman was confirmed by the sailors, and the circumstance gave it a distinct and characteristic colour in my mind.' Sixty-six years ago 'The Hoop and Horseshoe'—the only tavern sign of that name in London—was a sort of private hotel, doubtless well patronized by those who came to the Metropolis by water. Wagner only stayed there one night; the next day he, Minna (his wife), and the dog changed their lodgings to the foreign quarter of Soho. In the removal the dog was lost, but was found again, to the great joy of its master.

THE FUNERAL OF LORD VISCOUNT NELSON IN ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, JANUARY 9, 1806.

From an engraving by Lewis, after a drawing made by Augustus Charles Pugin at the interment.

THE MUSIC AT NELSON'S FUNERAL IN ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

More than two months elapsed between the death of Nelson, which occurred on October 21, 1805, on board the Victory in Trafalgar Bay, and the interment of his remains, which took place in St. Paul's Cathedral, on January 9, 1806. After the body, preserved in spirits, had been brought to England in the Victory, it lay in state for three days in the Painted Hall, Greenwich. Thence the hero's remains were conveyed by water to Westminster, the procession up the Thames, which included seventeen State barges, of which eight belonged to the City Companies, being most impressive as it passed along London's silent highway. The funeral barge was rowed by sixteen seamen belonging to the famous ship on which Nelson fell.

After resting one night at the Admiralty, Whitehall, the body was conveyed to St. Paul's Cathedral for interment the next day (January 9). One hour before daylight on that eventful day 'the drums of the different Volunteer corps in the Metropolis beat to arms,' among them being the Grays-Inn Sharpshooters and the Hampstead Volunteers. The funeral cortège is referred to as 'one of the greatest processions ever witnessed.' Military bands were heard in mournful strains, and, as a relief to much dirge music, the band of the Old Buffs played 'Rule, Britannia' with drums muffled, alternating Arne's nautical air with the 'Dead March.' On approaching the cathedral the bands played the 104th Psalm, doubtless the triple minor tune from Ravenscroft's Psalter of 1621.

The funeral car was worthy of the occasion. It is described as having been 'decorated with a carved imitation of the head and stern of His Majesty's ship the Victory, surrounded with escutcheons of the Arms of the deceased, and adorned with appropriate mottoes and emblematical devices; under an elevated canopy, in the form of the upper part of an ancient sarcophagus, with six sable plumes and the coronet of a Viscount in the centre supported by four columns, representing palm trees, with wreaths of natural laurel and cypress entwining the shafts; the whole upon a four-wheeled carriage drawn by six led horses, the caparisons adorned with armorial escutcheons. The head of the car, towards the horses, was ornamented with a figure of Fame. The stern carved and painted in the naval style with the word Victory in yellow raised letters on the lanthorn over the poop.' A view of the funeral-car, showing its arrival at the cathedral, is reproduced (on p. 647) from a rare print kindly lent by the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's.

No less magnificent was the coffin, said to have been made from the mainmast of the L'Orient blown up at the battle of the Nile, and further, to have been constructed of 'stout mahogany, and exactly 6 feet 8 inches long, 26 inches broad in its widest part, and 19 inches deep; covered with rich, black Genoa velvet, divided in compartments and pannels, with no less than 10,000 double gilt nails.' On one of the various panels was the representation of a monument, at its base 'the British Lion, with one of his paws laid on a Gallic Cock'; another panel contained the figure of 'a Crocodile, an Attribute in consequence of the glorious Victory of the Nile'; and 'towards the foot was a Dolphin, the noblest Fish of the Seas, and was formerly claimed by the Heir of France.' The inscription on the coffin read thus:

Deposito.

THE MOST NOBLE LORD HORATIO NELSON

Viscount and Baron Nelson of the Nile,
& of Burnham, Thorpe, in the County of Norfolk
Baron Nelson of the Nile, and of Hilborough, in the said County.

Knight of the Most Honble. Order of the Bath.
Vice Adm^l. of the White Squadron of the Fleet & Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Ships and Vessels in the Mediterranean

Also Duke of Bronte, in Sicily;
Knight Grand Cross of the Sicilian Order of St. Ferdinand, and of Merit.

Member of the Ottoman Order of the Crescent & Knight Grand Commander of the Order of St. Joachim. Born September 29, 1758.

After a series of transcendent & heroic Services, this Gallant Adm^l. fell gloriously in the moment of a brilliant & decisive Victory over the combined Fleets of France & Spain, off Trafalgar,
21 October, 1805.

The huge congregation—estimated at 10,000 people—in the cathedral included two future Kings of England in the persons of the Prince of Wales, afterwards George IV., and the Duke of Clarence, who became William IV., in addition to their five royal brothers. The scene in the stately sanctuary is described in The Times, as 'too dear and sacred to Britons to be forgotten,' while the Morning Post said 'nothing could be more sublimely awful, nor more solemnly affecting.' Darkness had come on before the last rites had been concluded, and the dull light of a winter's day gave place to the weird illumination of a large number of torches in the Choir and temporary galleries, while in the dome, said to be illuminated for the first time, was suspended a huge 'temporary lanthorn' containing 130 lamps. Highlanders lined the nave and the circle under the dome, 'with their firelocks clubbed.' Some idea of the coup d'œil of this great ceremony may be gathered from the reproduction (on p. 645) of a rare print in the library of St. Paul's Cathedral, and kindly lent by the Dean and Chapter specially for this article.

The music that was performed at the obsequies of Trafalgar's hero was specially prepared for the occasion and published in a folio volume entitled:

NELSON'S FUNERAL CAR ARRIVING AT ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL ON THE DAY OF THE INTERMENT.

This included the Burial-Service music of Croft and Purcell, Dr. Greene's anthem 'Lord, let me know mine end,' Attwood's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F (composed in 1796, the year of his appointment to St. Paul's), Handel's funeral anthem 'His body is buried in peace,' and Thomas Purcell's single chant in G minor, called in the above publication the 'Grand Chant' to which Psalms 39 and 90 were sung. John Page, the editor of the music and formerly a tenor singer, is best known by his 'Harmonia Sacra,' a collection of seventy-four old cathedral anthems (3 vols., 1800); he also edited a collection of glees, entitled 'Festive Harmony' (4 vols., 1804), and other publications.

The first part of the service was held in the Choir, the body being subsequently conveyed to an opening in the floor of the church immediately under the dome. In this connection the account in the Gentleman's Magazine may be quoted:— 'There was an excellent contrivance for letting down the Body into the grave. A bier was raised from the oblong aperture under the Dome, for the purpose of supporting the coffin, by invisible machinery, the apparatus being totally concealed below the pavement. This contrivance prevented all those disagreeable circumstances which too often occur at the funerals of the Great.'

The event was one of those rare occasions when every member of the cathedral staff, including twelve minor canons, attended, with the Dean (also Bishop of Lincoln) at their head. The six vicars-choral were Dr. Robert Hudson (aged 73), Dr. Edward Ayerton (aged 72), Israel Gore, John Sale (Almoner and Master of the Boys), Thomas Attwood (also organist), and John Page; while Masters W. H. Cutler, Rogers, Michelmore, J. B. Hart, Chipp, Blackburn, G. C. Sale and Holmyard were the 'young chorists.' Master Chipp was doubtless the famous drummer of after years, and Blackburn most likely became the organist of Clapham Parish Church, the John Blackburn who, according to the late Sir George Grove, always pronounced the name of Bach as 'Bawk.' The choir of St. Paul's was reinforced by the choirs of the Chapel Royal and Westminster Abbey, this combined force occupying 'a gallery on the east side of the organ.' The soloists were Master Roberts, of the Chapel Royal, and Master Cutler, of St. Paul's.

Thomas Attwood, by virtue of his office, presided at the organ, apparently the only instrument that was used to accompany the service, although the military element was well represented in the cathedral. The Gentleman's Magazine states:— 'On Mr. Attwood's skilful manipulation of this fine organ (perhaps the best instrument of the kind in Europe) it is unnecessary to dilate; his talents are well known, and were never more strenuously or successfully exerted.' During the procession to the grave—in which only St. Paul's of the three choirs formed a part—'there was performed on the organ a grand solemn dirge composed specially for the occasion by Attwood.' Here it is:

DIRGE.

Composed expressly for this occasion by T. Attwood, Composer to his Majesty, and Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral.

Largo assai.

Coda.

The last two notes of the Dirge—D and E flat—evidently led into the next vocal number of the burial service—'Man that is born of a woman,' by Dr. Croft.

One of the minor canons, the Rev. Mr. Pridden, had the chief share in the arrangements of the day. At that time Father Smith's organ stood on the screen at the entrance to the Choir, and as the organist sat on the eastern side of the case he could not possibly see, when seated at the keyboards, what was going on in the nave; therefore, he had to rely upon signals. To quote from the Gentleman's Magazine: 'One of Mr. Pridden's signals to the attendant on the organist (who was himself out of sight of the ceremony) was the holding up of a book; at one time, however, another gentleman near Mr. P. passing his hand (with such a book in it) over his face, it was mistaken for the signal, and the organ struck up about three minutes too soon. It had not, however, played above two or three bars before the mistake was corrected.'

The day's proceedings must have tested the staying powers of all who took part in the ceremony. The cathedral doors were opened at 7 a.m., the service did not begin till 4.30, the coffin being lowered into the crypt 'at thirty-three and a half minutes past five precisely,' as a journal minutely records the hour of sepulture. Although there does not seem to be any mention of Attwood's having played the Dead March in 'Saul,' it may be assumed that the immortal and heroic strains of Handel reverberated throughout the stately edifice as the vast congregation dispersed, strains that would bring to a fitting conclusion so great an event in the history of the nation.

DALLAM'S VOYAGE TO TURKEY.

The Dallams were famous organ-builders in England during the 17th century. They came from Dallam, a hamlet near Warrington, in Lancashire, but their patronymic had seven variants—Dallam, Dalham, Dallan, Dalls, Dallom, Dallum, and Dullom. Thomas Dallam, the head of the family from the organ-building point of view, was apprenticed to a member of the Blacksmiths' Company, of which he subsequently became a liveryman, therefore he may be regarded as a harmonious blacksmith. On October 12, 1626, he was fined £10—a large sum in those days—for neglecting, at the annual feast of the Company held on Lord Mayor's Day, to hold the stewardship to which he had been appointed. He paid £5 down and made an offer to pay the balance in instalments of £1, £2, and £2 during the three following years. In all probability this Thomas Dallam built the organ in King's College, Cambridge, of which an account appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of April, 1902, page 226. He also erected an organ in Worcester Cathedral in the year 1613. The dates of his birth and death are unknown. His sons were probably Robert Dallam (1602—1665), builder of organs in St. Paul's Cathedral, York Minster, Canterbury Cathedral, &c.; Ralph Dallam (died 1672), who built an organ for St. George's Chapel, Windsor; and George Dallam, who in 1686 added a 'chaire organ' to Harris's instrument in Hereford Cathedral. The Dallams were certainly men of mark in their day.

It is, however, Thomas Dallam with whom we have to do, and in a very interesting and little known connection: his making of a mechanical organ ordered by Queen Elizabeth as a present from her to the Sultan of Turkey, and the conveyance of the instrument to that mighty potentate by Dallam himself. It appears that a small company of English merchants, entitled 'The Company of Merchants of the Levant,' were desirous of opening up trade with Turkey. In order to smooth the way with the all-powerful ruler of the Ottoman Empire, Queen Elizabeth sent in 1593 to the Sultan Amurath III. the following presents:

'12 goodly pieces of plate, 36 garments of cloth of all colours, 20 garments of cloth of gold, 10 garments of satin, 6 pieces of fine Holland, and certain other things of great value'; and to his 'powerful wife,' the Sultana Safiye, good Queen Bess sent 'a jewel of her Majesty's picture set with rubies and diamonds, 3 pieces of gilt plate, 10 garments of cloth of gold, a very fine case of glasse bottles, silver and gilt, and 2 pieces of fine Holland.' Sultan Amurath was succeeded by his son Mahomed III., the eldest of his 103 children! It was to this monarch—who on his accession put nineteen of his brothers to death—that Queen Elizabeth ostensibly sent the mechanical organ built by Dallam, though it is more than probable that the Company of Levant merchants paid for it. A State Paper dated January 31, 1599—just a month before Dallam set out on his voyage—contains this information: 'A great and curious present is going to the Grand Turk, which will scandalise other nations, especially the Germans.' This 'great and curious present' was the organ which Dallam had built, and that he was about to take out in propria persona.

Not only did worthy Mr. Dallam build that wonderful organ sent by Queen Elizabeth to the Sultan, but he kept a voluminous and amusing diary of his voyage to Turkey and the object thereof. The original manuscript is in the British Museum (Add. MS. 17480); but the Diary, edited by Mr. J. Theodore Bent, is printed in vol. lxxxvii. of the Hakluyt Society's Publications (issued in 1893), from which, by the courteous permission of Mr. Basil H. Soulsby, secretary of the Hakluyt Society, we are permitted to quote.

Dallam preludes his Diary with a list of 'Nessecaries for my voyege into Turkie, the which I bought upon a verrie short warninge, having no fend to advise me in any thing.' From this list of 'Nessecaries' we extract the following items:

(Note by Mr. J. Theodore Bent.)

The 'pare of virginals,' which we have enumerated last, shows that Dallam was determined to make music on board for his 'exersize by the waye,' and to help while away the tedium of a long voyage; but the virginals had company in a quintet of trumpeters, reduced, however, at Deal to a quartet of players for reasons which we shall presently see. Now we may let Dallam speak for himself, only linking together the extracts from his entertaining Dairy with such comments as may be necessary.

'The shipp whearin I was to make my voyege to Constantinople, Lyinge at Graves ende, I Departed from Londone in a pare of ores, with my chiste and suche provition as I had provided for that purpose, the nythne of Februarie 1598 [1599], being Frydaye.'

'Comminge to Graves ende, I wente aborde our shipp, Called the Heckter, and thare placed my chiste, my bedinge, and a pare of virginals, which the marchantes did alow me to carrie, for my exersize by the waye. Other comoditis I carriede none, savinge one grose of tin spounes, the which coste me nyne shillings; and thirtie pounde of tin in bares, which coste me 18s. The shipe beinge verrie unreddie, and no cabbins appoynted for passingeres, I was constrainede to go into the towne for my Lodginge and Diette, till the thirtenthe Daye in the After nowne, at which time anker was wayed and we under sayle, untill we came to Deale Castell.

'Cominge to Deale Castell, thare we came to an anker, for the wynde sarved not to pass by Dover. Thar our ship stayed fouer dayes for a wynde. In the meane time we wente a shore into the towne of Deale, and also to Sandwiche, to make our selves merrie. When the wynde came fayer, it was in the nyghte, and diverse of us that weare passingeres, and also som saylers, weare in the towne of Deale, wheare som of our company had dranke verrie moche, espetially one of our five Trumpeters, who, beinge in Drinke, had Lockid his Chamber dore; and when he that came from the ship to call us went under his chamber wyndoe and caled him, he Came to the wyndoe and insulted him; whear upon we wente all awaye a borde our ship, and lefte that Dronkerde be hinde. Thar the wynde sarvinge well, we sayled merraly by Dover, and so a longe the Sleve.*

The monotony of being becalmed was relieved by the antics of porpoises and whales:

'March 20, 1599.—The wynde sarvinge well, we paste the Northe Cape [Finisterre], and entered the bay of Portingale. The 23 we Recovered the Soothe Cape. Than we weare becalmed for a time. The 24 thare came an Infinite company of porposis aboute our ship, the which did leape and Rone [run] marvalusly. The 25 we saw 2 or 3 greate monstrus fishis or whales, the which did spoute water up into the eayere, lyke as smoke dothe assend out of a chimnay. Sometime we myghte se a greate parte of there bodye above the water. The calme did yeat cantinue.'

At Algiers Dallam saw for the first time an incubator. He says:

'The toune or cittie is verrie full of people, for it is a place of great trad and marchandise. They have tow markeett dayes in the weeke, unto the which do com a great number of people out of the mountaines and other partes of the contrie, bringinge in great store of corne and frute of all sortes, and fowle, bothe wyld and tame. Thar be great store of partridgis and quales, the which be sould verrie cheape, a partridge for less than one penny, and 3 quales at the same price. Thar be also great store of henes and chickins, for they be hatchte by artificiall meanes, in stoves or hote housis, without the helpe of a hen. The maner of it I cannot at this time playnly discribe, but heareafter I may, yf God permitte.'

The ladies and 'churchis' of Algiers drew from him this comment:

'The Turkishe and Morishe weomen do goo all wayes in the streetes with there facis covered, and the common reporte goethe thare that they beleve, or thinke that the weomen have no souls. And I do thinke that it weare well for them if they had none, for they never goo to church, or other prayers, as the men dothe. The men ar verrie relidgis in there kinde, and they have verrie faire churchis, which they do call mosques.'

At Alexandretta, on the coast of Syria—the voyage being a very leisurely and indirect one—the 'Mr Guner, tow of his mates, Mr. Chancie, our Surgin, one of our Trumpeteres' and Dallam himself had an expedition on shore, which might have had serious consequences:

'We havinge entred into these woodes, thinkinge to kill som wyld foule, our myndes wear trabled to find oute som pathe waye, for feare of tearinge our cloese, and everie tow or 3 butlengthe* [boatlengths] we should finde a man caled a mountaineard, lyinge in a bushe, havinge in his hande ether a bowe and arrowes, or eles a peece, the which weapeins as we supposed they did carrie to kill wyld foule; but we havinge strayed some thre myles into the wildernes, we found a square playne, the which was nothinge but a quagmyer, and in the mydeste thar of was tow myghtie greate buffelawes, beastes bigger than our greate oxen. At the firste we saw nothinge but there heades, and they made a great noyse with their snufflinge, and, in the ende, went Runing awaye, which was a wonder to us, for had it bene an ox, or cowe, or horse of oures, theye would thare have bene drowned.

'Whylste we stood wondringe at this, we espied a greate companye, to the number of aboute 40, of the afore sayde mountayneares, the which weare gathered together, and goinge aboute to cathe us by inclosinge us aboute. This company beinge in

* Dallam's constant use of the word butt for boat sufficiently explains the following passage in Shakespeare, where butt is supposed to have been a misprint:

... where they prepared
A rotten carkase of a butt, not rigg'd,
Nor tackle, sayle, nor mast, that place, we knew not how to with stand, but only by flyinge away, and the woodes that weare betwyxe us and the seae weare so heie that we could not see the seae nor the maste of our shipe; but Runninge at a ventur throughe thicke and thine, thorns and bryeres, tearinge our close, at the laste we recovered a fayer playne, wheare we myghte se our shipe, and within a myle of the shore. Than weare we glade, and touke our ease, wheare we founde a fayre fountaine of verrie comfortable water, for we weare fastinge, and faynte with travell.'

At Rhodes (which he calls Roodes) Dallam, by playing upon his Virginals, embraced the opportunity of charming 'Turkes and Jues' who would fain have embraced him:

'Cominge to an ankere neare unto the wales of the towne, thare we founde in the Roode a gallioun of the great Turkes, the bigeste ship he hathe, aboute one thousand tun, a verrie carte, a ship of no strengthe; yeat was she Richly laden, and cam from Alicksandria. We weare no sowner come to an anker but the Turkes began to com aborde us, so that the verie firste day thar came aboard us not so few as five hundrethe Rude Turkes, and lykwyse everie day that we stayed thare they seased not.

'The nexte daye, beinge the 28 of this monthe, the Capitaine basha, governer of the towne, beinge gone abroad with there galles on some greate busines, the Chia his Debitie [deputy], who for the time was Capitaine, he, with the cheefest men of the towne, came aboard our ship, and she was trimed up in as handsom maner as we could for the time. Our gonroume was one of the fayereste Roumes in the ship, and pleasant to com into. In the gonroume I had a pare of virginals, the which our Mr. goner, to make the better showe, desired me to sett them open. When the Turkes and Jues came in and saw them, they wondered what it should be; but when I played on them, than they wondered more. Diveres of them would take me in there armes and kis me, and wyshe that I would dwell with them.'

After a voyage of over six months Dallam and his charge arrived at Constantinople. How 'all the glewinge worke' of the organ was 'clene Decayed' and other matters relating to the instrument and its presentation, the communicative organ-builder may speak for himself.

'The 17th [August] we wente aborde our ship for the presente, and carried it to our imbassadors house in the Cittie of Gallata, in the vines of Peara, and because there was no roome heie enough to sett it up in his house, he caused a roome to be made with all speed withoute the house in the courte, to sett it up in, that it myghte there be made perfitt before it should be carried to the surralia.

'The twentieth daye, beinge Mondaye, we begane to louke into our worke; but when we opened our chistes we founde that all glewinge worke was clene Decayed, by reason that it had layne above sixe monthes in the hould of our ship, whichte was but newly bulte, so that the extremetie of the heete in the hould of the shipe, with the workinge of the sea and the hootnes of the cuntrie, was the cause that all glewinge fayled; lyke wyse divers of my mettle pipes weare brused and broken.

'When our Imbassador, Mr. Wyllyam Aldridge, and other jentlmen, se in what case it was in, theye weare all amayzed, and sayde that it was not worthe iid. My answeare unto our Imbassador and to Mr. Aldridge, at this time I will omit; but when Mr. Aldridge harde what I sayede, he tould me that yf I did make it perfitt he would give me, of his owne purs, 15*li*, so aboute my worke I wente.'

'The 8 day [September], beinge Saterdag, we began to take Downe our instrumente, for that day the Grand Sinyor went from the surralia som six myles by water to an other surralia wheare the sultana his mother dothe live; for one monthe in the yeare it is tolerable for him to goo to that place, ether in Auguste or in September; at any other time he may not goo so farr from his owne Surralia, excepte he be garded with a hunreth thousande men. The 11th Daye, beinge Tusdaye, we Carried our instrumente over the water to the Grand Sinyors Courte, Called the surralya, and thare in his moste statlyeste house I began to sett it up.'

'Wythein the firste wales ar no housis but one, and that is the bustanjebasha his house, who is capitaine of a thousande jemeglanes, which doo nothinge but kepe the garthens in good order; and I am perswaded that thare is none so well kepte in the worlde. Within the seconde wales tharis no gardens, but statly buildinges; many courtes paved with marble and suche lyke stone. Everie ode or by corner hath som exelente frute tre or tres growing in them; also thar is greate abundance of sweete grapes, and of diveres sortes; thar a man may gather grapes everie Daye in the yeare. In November, as I satt at diner, I se them gather grapes upon the vines, and theye broughte them to me to eate. For the space of a monthe I Dined everie day in the Surralia, and we had everie day grapes after our meate; but moste sartain it is that grapes do grow thare contenually.

'Cominge into the house whear I was appoynted to sett up the presente or instrumente; it semed to be rether a churche than a dwellinge house; to say the truthe, it was no dwellinge house, but a house of pleasur, and lyke wyse a house of slaughter; for in that house was bulte one litle house, verrie curius bothe within and without; for carving, gilding, good Collors and vernishe, I have not sene the lyke. In this litle house, that emperor that rained when I was thare, had nyntene brotheres put to deathe in it, and it was bulte for no other use but for the stranglinge of everie emperors bretherin.

'This great house it selfe hathe in it tow rankes of marble pillors; the pettestales [pedestals] of them ar made of brass, and double gilte. The wales on 3 sides of the house ar waled but halfe waye to the eaves; the other halfe is open; but yf any storme or great wynde should hapen, they can sodonly Let fale suche hanginges made of cotten wolfe for that purpose as will kepe out all kindes of wethere, and suddenly they can open them againe. The fourthe side of the house, which is close and joynethe unto another house, the wale is made of purfeare (porphyry), or suche kinde of stone as when a man walketh by it he maye se him selfe tharin. Upon the grounde, not only in this house, but all other that I se in the Surralliae, we treade upon rich silke garpites, one of them as muche as four or sixe men can carrie. There weare in this house nether stouls, tables, or formes, only one couteche of estate. There is one side of it a fishe ponde, that is full of fishe that be of divers collores.

'The 15th, I finished my worke in the Surralliao, and I wente once everie daye to se it, and dinede Thare almoste everie Daye for the space of a monthe; which no Christian ever did in there memorie that wente awaye a Christian.

'The 18 daye (stayinge somthinge longe before I wente), the Coppagawe [Capougee] who is the Grand Sinyor's secretarie, sente for me that one of his frendes myghte heare the instrumente. Before I wente awaye, the tow jemaglanes, who is keepers of that house, touke me in their armes and Kised me, and used many perswasions to have me staye with the Grand Sinyor, and sarve him.

'The 21, at nyghte, it was a wonder to se what abundance of lampes there was burninge rounde aboute all the Toweres of the Churchis, bothe in Constantinople and Galleta. When we demanded the cause, they tould us that as that nyghte Mahamet, their Messies, was borne.

'The 24, at nyghte our ambassodor Caled me into his Chamber and gave me a greate Charge to goo the next morninge betimes to the surralia and make the instrumente as perfitt as possibly I could, for that daye, before nounge, the Grand Sinyor would se it, and he was to Deliver his imassage to the Grand Sinyor; after he hade given me that charge he toulde me that he had but done his dutie in tellinge me of my dutie, and cothe he: Because yow shall not take this unkindly, I will tell you all and what you shall truste unto.

'The Imbassadores spetche unto me in Love after he had given me my charge:—

'Yow ar come hether wythe a presente from our gracious Quene, not to an ordinarie prince or kinge, but to a myghtie monarke of the worlde, but better had it bene for yow yf it had bene sente to any Christian prince, for then should yow have bene sure to have received for yor paines a greate rewarde; but yow muste consider what he is unto whom yow have broughte this ritche presente, a monarke but an infidell, and the grande Enymye to all Christians. Whate we or any other Christians can bringe unto him he dothe thinke that we dow it in dutie or in feare of him, or in hoppe of som greate favoure we expecte at his handes. It was never knowne that upon the receaving of any presente he gave any rewarde unto any Christian, and tharfore yow muste louke for nothings at his handes. Yow would thinke that for yor longe and wearisom voyage, with dainger of lyfe, that yow weare worthie to have a litle sighte of him; but that yow muste no loake for nether; for yow se wheat greate preparinge we made and have bene aboute ever sense your cominge, for the credite of our contrie, and for a Deliveringe of this presente and my imassage, the which, by Godes helpe, to-morrow muste be performede. We cale it kisinge of the Grand Sinyor's hande; bute when I com to his gates I shalbe taken of my horse and seartcht, and lede betwyxte tow men holdinge my handes downe close to my sides, and so lede into the presence of the Grand Sinyor, and I muste kiss his kne or his hanginge sleve. Havinge deliverede my lettres unto the Coppagawe, I shalbe presently ledd awaye, goinge backwards as longe as I can se him, and in payne of my heade I muste not turne my backe upon him, and therefore yow muste not louke to have a sighte of him. I thoughte good to tell yow this, because yow shall not heareafter blame me, or say that I myghte haue tould yow so muche; lett not your worke be anythinge the more carlesly louked unto, and at your cominge home our marchantes shall give yow thanks, yf it give the Grand Sinyor contente this one daye. I can not yf it be non after the nexte, yf it doo not please him at the firste sighte, and performe not those things which it is Toulde him that it can Dow, he will cause it to be puled downe that he may trample it under his feete. And then shall we have no sute grantede, but all our charge will be loste.

'After I had given my Lorde thanks for this frindly spetche, thoughe smale comforte in it, I tould him that thus muche I understoode by our marchantes before my cominge oute of London and that he needed not to Doubte that there should be any faulte ether in me or my worke, for he hade sene the triall of my care and skill in makinge that perfickte and good which was thoughte to be uncurable, and in somthinges better than it was when Her Maiestie sawe it in the banketinge house at Whyte Hale.'

It is interesting to learn that Queen Elizabeth took a personal interest in Dallam's work by herself inspecting the organ in the Banqueting House at Whitehall. Dallam continues:

'Now when I had sett all my worke in good order, the jemyglanes which kepte that house espied the Grand Sinyor cominge upon the water in his goulden Chieke [caïque], or boate, for he cam that morning six myles by water; whear I stooode I saw when he sett foote on the shore.

'Than the jemyglanes tould me that I muste avoyd the house, for the Grand Sinyor would be thare presently. It was almoste halfe a myle betwyxte the water and that house; but the Grand Sinyor, haveinge a desier to se his presente, came thether wythe marvalus greate speed. I and my company that was with me, beinge put forthe, and the Dore locked after us, I hard another Dore open, and upon a sodon a wonderfull noyes of people; for a litle space it should seme that at the Grand Sinyore's coming into the house the dore which I hard opene did sett at libertie four hundrethe persons which weare locked up all the time of the Grand Sinyore's absence, and juste at his cominge in theyre weare sett at libertie, and at the firste sighte of the presente, with greate admyration did make a wonderinge noyes.

'The Grand Sinyor, beinge seated in his Chaire of estate, commanded silence. All beinge quiett, and no noyes at all, the presente began to salute the Grand Sinyor; for when I lefte it I did alow a quarter of an houre for his cominge thether. Firste the clocke strouke 22; than The chime of 16 bells went of, and played a songe of 4 partes. That beinge done, tow personagis which stood upon to corners of the seconde storie, houldinge tow silver trumpets in there handes, did lifte them to there heades, and sounded a tantarra. Than the muzicke went of, and the organ played a song of 5 partes twyse over. In the tope of the organ, being 16 foute hie, did stande a holly bushe full of blacke birds and thrushis, which at the end of the musick did singe and shake there wynges. Divers other motions thare was which the Grand Sinyor wondered at. Than the Grand Sinyor asked the Coppagaw yf it would ever doo the lyke againe. He answered that it would doo the lyke againe at the next houre. Cothe he: I will se that. In the meane time, the Coppagaw, being a wyse man, and doubted whether I hade so appoynted it or no, for he knew that it would goe of it selfe but 4 times in 24 houres, so he cam unto me, for I did stand under the house sid, wheare I myghte heare the organ goo, and he asked me yf it would goo againe at the end of the nexte houre; but I tould him that it would not, for I did thinke the Grand Sinyor would not have stayed so longe by it; but yf it would please him, that when the clocke had strouk he would tuche a litle pin with his finger, which before I had shewed him, it would goo at any time. Than he sayde that he would be as good as his worde to the Grand Sinyor. When the clocke began to stricke againe, the Coppagaw went and stood by it; and when the clocke had strouke 23, he tuched that pinn, and it did the lyke as it did before. Than the Grand Sinyor said it was good. He satt verrie neare vnto it, ryghte before the Keaes [keys], wheare a man should playe on it by hande. He asked whye those keaes did move when the organ wente and nothinge did tuche them. He Tould him that by those thinges it myghte be played on at any time. Than the Grande Sinyor asked him yf he did know any man that could playe on it. He sayd no, but he that came with it coulde, and he is heare without the dore. Fetche him hether, cothe the Grand Sinyor, and lett me se how he dothe it. Than the Coppagaw opened that Dore which I wente out at, for I stode neare unto it. He came and touke me by the hande, smylinge upon me; but I bid my drugaman aske him what I should dow, or whither I shoulde goo. He answered that it was the Grand Sinyore's pleasur that I should lett him se me playe on the organ. So I wente with him. When I came within the Dore, That which I did se was verrie wonderfull unto me. I cam in directly upon the Grand Sinyore's ryghte hande, som 16 of my passis [paces] from him, but he would not turne his head to louke upon me. He satt in greate state, yeat the sighte of him was nothinge in Comparisson of the traine that stood behinde him, the sighte whearof did make me almoste to thinke that I was in another worlde. The Grand Sinyor satt still, behouldinge the presente which was befor him, and I stood daslinge my eyes with loukinge upon his people that stood behinde him, the which was four hundrethe persons in number. Tow hundrethe of them weare his princepall padgis, the yongest of them 16 yeares of age, som 20, and som 30. They weare appared in ritche clothe of goulde made in gowns to the mydlegge; upon there heades litle caps of clothe of goulde, and som clothe of Tissue; great peecis of silke abowte there wastes instead of girdls; upon there leges Cordivan buskins, reede. There heades wear all shaven, savinge that behinde Their ears did hange a locke of hare like a squire's taile; there beardes shaven, all savinge there upper lips. Those 200 weare all verrie proper men, and Christians borne.

'The thirde hundrethe weare Dum men, that could nether heare nor speake, and theye weare likewise in gouns of riche Clothe of gould and Cordivan buskins; bute there Caps weare of violett velvett, the croune of them made like a lether bottell, the brims devided into five picked [peaked] corneres. Som of them had haukes in there fistes.

'The fourthe hundrethe weare all dwarffs, bige-bodied men, but verrie low of stature. Everie Dwarfe did weare a simmetterie [scimitar] by his side, and they weare also apared in gowns of Clothe of gould.

'I did moste of all wonder at those dumb men, for they lett me understande by there perfitt sins [signs] all thinges that they had sene the presente dow by its motions.

'When I had stode almost one quarter of an houre behouldinge this wonder full sighte, I harde the Grande Sinyore speake unto the Coppagaw, who stood near unto him. Than the Coppagaw cam unto me, and touke my cloake from aboute me, and laye it Doune upon the Carpites, and bid me go and playe on the organ: but I refused to do so, because the Grand Sinyor satt so neare the place wheare I should playe that I could not com at it, but I muste needes turne my backe Towardes him and touche his Kne with my britchis, which no man, in paine of deathe, myghte dow, savinge only the Coppagaw. So he smyled, and lett me stande a litle. Than the Grand Sinyor spoake againe, and the Coppagaw, with a merrie countenance, bid me go with a good curridge, and thruste me on. When I cam verrie neare the Grand Sinyor, I bowed my heade as low as my kne, not moving my cape, and turned my backe righte towards him, and touched his kne with my britchis.

'He satt in a verrie ritche Chaire of estate, upon his thumbe a ringe with a diamon in it halfe an inche square, a faire simetrie by his side, a bow, and a quiver of Arros. He satt so righte behinde me that he could not se what I did; tharfore he stood up, and his Coppagaw removed his Chaire to one side, wher he myghte se my handes; but, in his risinge from his chaire, he gave me a thruste forwardes, which he could not otherwyse dow, he satt so neare me; but I thought he had bene drawinge his sorde to cut off my heade.

'I stood thar playinge suche thinge as I coule untill the cloke stroucke, and than I bowed my heade as low as I coule, and wente from him with my backe towards him. As I was taking of my cloake, the Coppagaw came unto me and bid me stand still and lett my cloake lye; when I had stood a litle whyle, the Coppagaw bid me goo and cover the Keaes of the organ; then I wente Close to the Grand Sinyor againe, and bowed my selfe, and then I wente backwardes to my Cloake. When the Company saw me do so theye semed to be glad, and laughed. Than I saw the Grand Sinyor put his hande behind him full of goulde, which the Coppagaw Receved, and broughte unto me fortie and five peecis of gould called chickers, and than was I put out againe where I came in, beinge not a little joyfull of my good suckses.'

Dallam seems to have made a very favourable impression upon all the Turks, from the Sultan downwards, with whom he came into contact, so much so, indeed, that they wished to keep him in Constantinople, offering him all sorts of Oriental delights in order to induce him to stay, but without success. He did not hesitate to use a subterfuge of a family nature, as will be seen in the following extract:

'The laste of September I was sente for againe to the surralia to sett som thinges in good order againe, which they had altered, and those tow jemoglans which kepte that house made me verrie kindly welcom, and asked me that I would be contented to stay with them always, and I should not wante anything, but have all the contentt that I could desier. I answered them that I had a wyfe and Childrin in Ingleande, who did expecte my returne. Than they asked me how long I had been married, and how many children I hade. Though in deede I had nether wyfe nor childrin, yeat to excuse my selfe I made them that Answere.

'The same nyghte, as my Lorde was at supper, I tould him what talke we had in the surralia, and whate they did offer me to staye thare, and he bid me that by no meanes I should flatly denie them anything, but be as merrie with them as I could, and tell them that yf it did please my Lorde that I should stay, I should be the better contented to staye; by that meanes they will not go about to staye you by force, and yow may finde a time the better to goo awaye when you please.'

Dallam, having discharged his duty, at last departed from Constantinople. The incidents of his return voyage are not of supreme importance. After being absent from England for fourteen or fifteen months he returned to his native land. His diary concludes thus:

'Than we wente a shore at Dover, and our trompetes soundinge all the waye before us into the towne, where we made our selves as merrie as Could, beinge verrie glad that we weare once againe upon Inglish ground. After diner, thar came into the toun a Franche imbasseter, beinge accompened with divers knightes and jentlmen of Kente; so, at tow of the Clocke, we touke poste horse to Canterburrie, and from thence to Rochester that nyghte, and the nexte day to London.'

Occasional Notes.

'This is the way,' laughed the great god Pan, (Laughed while he sat by the river),

*'The only way, since gods began
To make sweet music, they could succeed.'
Then, dropping his mouth to a hole in the reed,
He blew in power by the river.*

*Sweet, sweet, sweet, O Pan!
Piercing sweet by the river!
Blinding sweet, O great god Pan!
The sun on the hill forgot to die,
And the lilies revived, and the dragon-fly
Came back to dream on the river.*

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

The seventieth birthday of Dr. Camille Saint-Saëns (October 9), the foremost of living French composers, is announced to be specially commemorated at Paris, when three grand concerts are to be given. The Académie, too, will honour the occasion, and there will also be a festive banquet. Dr. Saint-Saëns has, as is well known, many interests besides music. He recently returned to Paris from Burgos, where he went to study the eclipse. Many happy returns of the day to Dr. Saint-Saëns.

The lime-light lantern bids fair to become an increasing factor in the musical education of audiences. As part of the good work carried on at the Bermondsey Settlement, under the musical direction of Mr. John E. Borland, two lecture-recitals will be given in connection with the Chamber Music Society which meets for the study and performance of chamber music, whereby players and listeners are trained. The chamber music of Italy and France (1650-1900) respectively will form the subjects of Mr. Borland's two discourses with their recital complement. On each occasion the music of one work will be shown entire on the screen while it is being interpreted and its form briefly commented upon en route, so to speak. The educational advantages, apart from the enjoyment of listening to highly-refined music, which such a scheme provides at a very trifling cost, deserve to be widely known and to receive every encouragement. We hope to give during the coming season illustrated accounts of the musical work that is being so earnestly and efficiently done at Bermondsey and similar Settlements in London and elsewhere.

The many friends of the late Mr. A. J. Hipkins—he possessed the happy faculty of making and keeping many friends—will be gratified to learn that a memorial brass to him has been placed in St. Margaret's Church, Westminster,—‘the House of Commons’ church—by the kind permission of Canon Hensley Henson. Sir Alma Tadema, R.A., O.M., designed the brass, and while making use of suggestions from the Christian catacombs, he has not omitted to introduce the Scotch fir, so dear to Mr. Hipkins by reason of its being the badge of his mother's family, the Grants. It is of special interest that his grandmother Grant lies in that very churchyard, and she it was who taught him as a child to love traditional melodies. Mr. Hipkins, who was christened at St. Margaret's, loved the church; he lived near to and often spoke of it. The memorial—of which we give a reduced facsimile—has been subscribed for by friends of the genial and much-loved musician and writer on musical subjects; it has found an appropriate place near the organ and beneath the Drake window, a site chosen by his friend Sir Alma Tadema. Knowing how greatly Mr. Hipkins was esteemed by his friends, it is not surprising that no fewer than 216 immediately responded to the private invitation to subscribe to the memorial. It is pleasant to learn that, after defraying the cost of the ‘brass,’ a balance—no inconsiderable amount—remained. This has been handed to Mr. Hipkins's son and daughter as a token of the affection in which their father was held by his many friends.

An article on the son of François-Joseph Gossec from the pen of Madame Michel Brenet, has appeared in a foreign paper. This son died before his father, but neither the date of his birth nor that of his death is known. He published, as Op. 1, a set of sonatas bearing the following title:

Six folies musicales, graves, pathétiques et gaies, composées pour le pianoforte avec accompagnement de violon très ad libitum, et dédiées à M^{me}. Krumpoltz par ALEXANDRE-FRANÇOIS-JOSEPH GOSSEC, fils du célèbre compositeur de ce nom et professeur de piano-forte.

These ‘folies’ do not appear to be of any musical value, but in a ‘homage’ the composer names ‘the illustrious models which guided my hesitating steps’;

these were ‘L’immortel Edelmann’ and ‘les inimitables Lays et Saint-Huberty.’ The first, a native of Strasburg, was a composer-pianist of some note. He, however, became a warm partisan of the revolutionary party, yet, together with his brother, he perished on the scaffold in 1794. Saint-Huberty, known as Antoinette-Cécile Clavel, was a distinguished opera singer who appeared as Mélisse in ‘Armide,’ in 1777 and, as Didon, in Piccini's opera of that name, won for it a brilliant success. Before she came, the opera was unfavourably received; but the composer said: ‘Do not judge “Dido” until Dido has arrived,’—i.e., Madame Saint-Huberty. She, too, met with a tragic death. She came to London, in 1812, with her husband, Count d’Entraignes, who, about 1806, became naturalised. He and his wife were both assassinated by one of their servants, on July 22, 1812, for, it is supposed, some political reason. Lays, the opera singer, was also mixed up with the Revolution, and was a bitter enemy of the Girondin party. He, however, became a singer in the Chapel Royal during the reign of Napoleon, but at the second restoration he was dismissed owing to his former republican exaltation. Gossec's father, it may be added, was conductor of the band of the National Guard at the time of the Revolution, and composed many pieces for the patriotic fêtes.

‘The best teachers—to be secured in Europe and America—will comprise the Faculty, and the School will aim only for the highest artistic ideals.’ These words, which fell from his own lips, formed part of the biographical sketch of Dr. Frank Damrosch in our issue of December last. The School he referred to is the new Conservatory of Music in New York, of which he has been appointed the first Director. It is gratifying to hear that the important professorship of the organ was offered to Mr. Ivor Atkins, organist of Worcester Cathedral and conductor of the Three Choirs Festivals held at Worcester. Mr. Atkins has, however, not seen his way to accept the offer, which, we understand, was of a very handsome nature in regard to emoluments, as notwithstanding the large field of usefulness which would have opened up to him in America, he preferred to remain in the Old Country.

As a sequel to the article on Christ's Hospital in the September issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES, reference may be made to two former music-masters of eminence at that ancient Foundation. One of them—Thomas Brewer, born in 1611—was an 'old boy,' having been admitted a scholar at the age of three years! While he was music-master at the school, he not only married a wife but 'committed some errors and also misdemeanours himself.' These misdeeds caused the Governors to tell him that he must leave at Christmas (1641) and that his wife 'must be out of the premises before Michaelmas.' Celibacy on the part of the music-master was then a strong point with the Governors, so much so that in after years they compelled the Song School master—as he was originally designated—to give a bond in £200 'that when it is proved that he is married he shall resigne the said office.' At the end of Clifford's 'The Divine Services and Anthems' (second edition, 1664) are the words and music (composed by Brewer) of

A Psalm of Thanksgiving to be sung by the Children of Christ's Hospital on Munday and Tuesday in Easter Holy-daies, at Saint Maries Spittle, for their Founders and Benefactors.

The 'Psalm of Thanksgiving' begins thus :

Eternal King, to thee we sing,
Bow down thy blessed eare,
And from on high, the Harmony
Of our Hozanna's hear.

Although the swine when he is fed
Doth thankless turn away,
And not erect his downcast head
To him that sent his prey,

Yet we are Christians, we are taught
By holy writ to give Respect to them, by whom is wrought
The weal wherein we live.

Thomas Brewer was a man of mark in his day. He composed several excellent fantasies for the viol—upon which instrument he is said to have been a good performer—and many rounds and catches of his are printed in Hilton's 'Catch that catch can.' He is, however, known to fame by his pretty three-part song, 'Turn, Amaryllis to thy swain,' which first appeared in Playford's 'Ayres and Dialogues' (1659). It is there called a glee, and, according to Mr. Henry Davey, this is 'the earliest instance of the old Anglo-Saxon word being used to denote vocal concerted music.' The following anecdote is related of this Mr. Brewer: 'Through his Pronenesse to good-Fellowshippe, hauing attaind to a very Rich and Rubicund Nose; being reprov'd by a Friend for his too frequent vse of strong Drinckes and Sacke; as very Pernicious to that Distemper and Inflammation in his Nose.—"Nay, Faith," says he, "if it will not endure Sacke, it's no Nose for me."'

The other old-time music-master at Christ's Hospital was John Barrett (1674?-1735?), a pupil of Dr. Blow's. The British Museum Catalogue proves him to have been a prolific composer. He contributed many songs to various collections of the period, including D'Urfey's 'Wit and Mirth, or Pills to purge Melancholy,' which contains 'lanthe the lovely,' a song which furnished the tune 'When he holds up his hand' in 'The Beggar's Opera.' He composed overtures and act-tunes for 'Love's last Shift, or, the Fool in Fashion' (1696), 'Tunbridge Walks' (1703), 'The Ladys fine Aires' (a comedy), &c. One of his songs is entitled 'Love is now become a trade,' and at the British Museum is a large sheet folio composition by him entitled :

A Psalm of Thanksgiving, to be sung by the children of Christ's-Hospital, on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in Easter-Week, according to Antient Custom, for their Founders and Benefactors. 1705. The words by S. C. A. M.

One of the most popular treatises on music in the English language was prepared by John Playford, the 17th century 'stationer, bookseller, music-seller, and publisher' who carried on his business 'at his shop in the Inner Temple, near the Church door.' In the year 1654 he published the first edition—now exceedingly rare—of his famous book, the 'Brief and Easie Introduction to Musick.' The original Preface is so interesting, and, it may be added, so modest, that old John Playford's forewords may be quoted in extenso :

To all Lovers & Practitioners of Musick.

Courteous Reader : It was desired by fome Maisters to Print in the Scale of Mufick, or Gam-ut, in a halfe sheet of Paper, to put in a Schollers Book, to save the pains of writing ; which I intended only to have done ; but upon second thoughts I have altered my minde, and made the addition of fome necessary plain Rules for the better understanding thereof, and the help of Beginners. I confels, men better able then my selfe might have spared my pains, but their slownesse and modesty (being as I conceive unwilling to appear in Print about so small a matter) hath put me upon the Worke, which I count very usefull, though with the danger of not being so well done, as they might have performed it. The Rules of all Arts ought to be delivered in plaine and briefe language, and not with flowers of Eloquence ; and so this worke is more sutable to my abilities.

The Work as it is I must confesse is not all my owne, fome part of it was collected out of other mens writings, which I hope will the more commend it : and if the brevity, plainnesse, and usefulness whereof may beget acceptance with thee, it will encourage me to do thee more service in other things of this nature.

Thine to the utmost of his endeavours,

JOHN PLAYFORD.

Playford's reference to the 'halfe sheet of Paper' recalls a saying attributed, we believe, to Sterndale Bennett, that 'all the harmony one need to know could be written on half a sheet of paper.' 'The Rules of all Arts' says Playford 'ought to be delivered in plaine and briefe language, and not with flowers of Eloquence.' How true this is, and how few attain unto it.

A San Francisco newspaper furnishes the following killing information :

At the French penal colony, Noumea, New Caledonia, the convicts have organised a band. The leader is a notorious murderer. The cymbal player killed a subpoena server, and the drum player murdered his landlord with a hammer. The assistant bandmaster chopped his wife to pieces.

These convict criminalities are somewhat suggestive of topsy-turvyism. Instead of the murderers themselves being executed, they are allowed to execute music ; but considering the past lives of the performers, is there not some danger that even the music may be murdered ?

Professor.—"Your harmonies don't seem to hang together."

Pupil.—"And yet I have done my best to use good strong chords and introduce plenty of suspensions."

There is an art in drawing up a concert programme. Care is taken, or should be taken, to furnish variety and to meet the various tastes of those who assist at the performance in the capacity of listeners. Sometimes, however, results accrue that furnish food for humour. For instance, at a military band performance recently given in one of the Channel Islands, the first part of the programme was as follows :

March	- - -	Bride elect	- - -	Sousa.
Selection	- -	The Bohemian Girl	- -	Balfe.
Intermezzo	-	On the road to Moscow	-	Loetz.
Overture	- - -	William Tell	- - -	Rossini.
Selection	- - -	Ivanhoe	- - -	Sullivan.

Now, here we have unconsciously set before us quite a nice little episode. The 'bride elect' was obviously a 'Bohemian girl.' She was evidently 'on the road to Moscow' to meet her dearly-beloved spouse-elect 'William Tell'; and, having entered the holy estate of matrimony, it may be assumed that the couple were happy ever after in the land of Ivan.

A remarkable composition was performed before the King at the English Church, Marienbad, during His Majesty's recent sojourn at that health resort. 'The piece given was Bach's adaptation of Gounod's Meditation,' at least so 'Our own correspondent' of the — (a London evening journal) reported. It would be interesting to know what Bach thought of Gounod when he made that adaptation.

Dr. Frederic Cowen has been appointed conductor of the Handel Festival to be held at the Crystal Palace in June next.

The lists, in the local newspapers, of visitors to the Worcester Festival included a party that hailed from 'Stanford Bridge'!

An illustrated article on Worcester Cathedral will appear in the November issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES.

'TOM BOWLING.'

This, the centenary year of Trafalgar and of Nelson's death, must not be allowed to pass without some reference to one of the best of English sea-songs, 'Tom Bowling.' Like 'The death of Nelson' and 'The Bay of Biscay'—which have recently been treated of in these columns*—'Tom Bowling' originally formed part of a theatrical piece. Charles Dibdin (1745-1814), after various ups and downs in theatrical enterprise, decided to rely on his own unaided exertions in order to 'raise the wind,' that being a nautical expression. In 1789 he produced at Hutchins's Auction Room, King Street, Covent Garden, the first of a series of 'Table entertainments' of which he played the parts of author, composer, narrator, singer, and accompanist. The first of these 'one-man' shows was entitled 'The Whim of the Moment, or Nature in Little,' and included twelve songs 'written, composed, sung and accompanied by Mr. Dibdin.' One of these songs was the highly popular 'Poor Jack,' the copyright of which, with eleven other songs, he had sold for £60; in a short time 'Poor Jack' brought to its purchaser a profit of £500! Poor Charles!

Dibdin then engaged the Lyceum Theatre where, on December 7, 1789, he produced 'The Oddities; or, Dame Nature in a Frolic. A table entertainment written, composed, and performed by C. Dibdin.' 'Tom Bowling,' oddly enough, made its first appearance in this 'Oddities' piece.

The entertainment was advertised in The World of December 7, 1789, as follows :

THE ODDITIES.

This present evening, December 7th, at the Grand Saloon of the Lyceum, in the Strand, will be performed, for the first time, an Entertainment consisting of Recitation and Singing, called

THE ODDITIES

Or, Dame Nature in a frolic.

In this Entertainment will be portrayed, a Hospitable Baronet, a Modern Patron, a Satyrst, a Flatterer, an Egotist, a Commodore, a Foremast-Man, an Irish Recruiting Officer, an Indian, a Mulatto, a Negro, a Puppet-shewman, and many other characters—all Oddities.

The vehicle through which the peculiarities of these personages will be conveyed, is perfectly new and original; calculated singularly to assist the effect of every variety

No mention is made of the 'Poor Tom' song, which may have been added to the piece at a later date.

The title of the first publication of the song is as follows:

POOR TOM, OR THE SAILOR'S EPITAPH: written and composed by Mr. Dibdin for his entertainment called 'The Oddities.'

London: printed and sold by the Author at his Music warehouse, No. 411, Strand, opposite the Adelphi. Pr. 1s.

As showing the changes to which old songs are subjected at the hands of successive editors, it may not be without interest if we give the original form of Dibdin's magnificent lyric, of which he wrote both the words and music (one or two obvious misprints have been corrected):

The origin of the song is thus stated. Dibdin had an elder brother, Thomas by name, captain of an East Indiaman. He was struck by lightning and became partially paralysed; and voyaging homewards, died at the Cape of Good Hope. It was to commemorate the death of his brother Tom that Dibdin wrote the pathetic strain that has immortalised his name. It may be that, in these days of strenuous music, vocalists have lost the art of the perfect rendering of such a gem as this. Who could have heard Sims Reeves sing 'Tom Bowling' without having been moved by his wonderful interpretation of this song? And will it not remain a life-long memory? From his lips perfect vocalization, exquisite pathos, and the art which conceals art came forth in tones which touched chords of deepest emotion.

John O'Keefe has recorded his impressions of Dibdin's entertainments in these words:

Dibdin's manner of coming on the stage was in happy style; he ran on sprightly and with nearly a laughing face, like a friend who enters hastily to impart to you some good news. Nor did he disappoint his audience; he sang and accompanied himself on an instrument, Andante.

Here a sheer hulk, lies poor Tom Bowling, the dar-ling of our . . crew, . . No more he'll hear the tem-pest howl-ing, For death hath brought him to. His form was of the man-liest beau-ty, his heart was kind and . . soft; . . Faith-ful be-low, Tom did . . his du - ty, And now he's gone a -

- loft, . . And now he's gone a-loft.

Tom never from his word departed,
His virtues were so rare;
His friends were many and true hearted,
His Poll was kind and fair:
And then he'd sing so blithe and jolly,
Ah! many's the time and oft;
But mirth is turned to melancholy,
For Tom has gone aloft.

Yet shall poor Tom find pleasant weather,
When He, who all commands,
Shall give, to call life's crew together,
The word to pipe all hands.
Thus death, who Kings and Tars dispatches,
In vain Tom's life has doffed;
For, though his body's under hatches,
His soul has gone aloft.

which was a concert in itself; he was, in fact, his own band. A few lines of speaking happily introduced his admirable songs, full of wit and character, and his peculiar mode of singing them surpassed all I had ever heard.

Charles Dibdin, who was entirely self-taught, excelled as an actor, as a poet, as a singer and as a melodist. He is said to have written the words and composed the music of over 1,300 songs. Of these only two have survived, 'Poor Jack' and 'Tom Bowling,' both of them nautical ditties. He seems to have been the first pianoforte accompanist in England, judging from an old play-bill in the possession of Messrs. Broadwood which thus records the incident:

By particular desire.
For the benefit of MISS BRICKLER.
Theatre Royal in Covent Garden.

On Saturday next, being the 16th of May, 1767,
THE BEGGAR'S OPERA.

End of Act I, Miss Brickler will sing a favourite song from Judith, accompanied by Mr. Dibdin on a new instrument called Piano-Forte.

Dibdin died at his residence in Arlington Street, London, on July 25, 1814. His remains were interred in the burial ground (belonging to the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields) in Pratt Street, Camden Town, where there is a monument to his memory. An interesting lecture on the famous sea-song composer, delivered by the late Mr. W. A. Barrett, is reported in THE MUSICAL TIMES of February, 1886; and an exhaustive bibliography of 'The works of Charles Dibdin,' by his descendant, Mr. E. Rimbault Dibdin, will be found in various issues of Notes and Queries between July 13, 1901, and June 25, 1904.

Church and Organ Music.

THE TUNE 'ST. BRIDE'S.'

Of the many psalm-tunes of former days, in the minor key, few have survived. Among them is one, however, that has found a place, and that right worthily, in nearly all modern hymnals—the short-metre tune St. Bride's, or, as it was originally designated 'St. Bridget's,' composed by Dr. Samuel Howard. 'St. Bride's' made its first appearance in a collection entitled:

PAROCHIAL HARMONY; Consisting of a Collection of PSALM-TUNES In three and four Parts, by some of the most eminent ancient & modern Composers and others.

Particularly adapted to the variety of Metres in the New Version of Psalms, and intended to supply the great Deficiency of Tunes in that Version.

To which are added, Reasons for publishing this Collection and Remarks on other Publications of this Nature.

By WILLIAM RILEY, Principal Teacher of Psalmody to the Charity Schools in London, Westminster and Parts adjacent.

O sing unto God with the Voice of Melody.
Ps. XLVII. 1.

London, Printed for the Editor, and sold at his House in Great James Street, Bedford Row, Holborn. At Whitaker's Music Shop the North Gate of the Royal Exchange. Lewer's in Moorfields. Johnson's in Cheapside, and Fentum's in Exeter Exchange in the Strand.

In the above psalmody the tune is thus set forth, but in vocal score:

* Pf. 130. N. 1'. ST. BRIDGET'S TUNE. By Mr. Saml. Howard.

(The absence of the third in some of the chords will be noticed.)

The name 'St. Bridget's' is after Wren's well-known church (St. Bride's), just off Fleet Street, of which Dr. Howard was formerly organist. It is the only church in London thus dedicated. In the north of England the tune was known as 'All Saints,' a description adopted by Dr. Edward Miller (of Doncaster) in his 'Psalms of David' (1790), where the melody appears in this form:

Piano con supplica.

Another and no less unjustifiable alteration of the melody of the last line is the following:

a 'tinkering' which is still current—e.g., in 'The Bristol Tune Book.'

The construction of this beautiful old tune—so pathetic in its melodic beauty—is of the simplest nature. It opens with the intervals of the key-chord followed by a stepwise progression to the tonic note; line 2 (of the words) is an exact repetition of line 1, but in the relative major key; line 3 is a scale passage from dominant to dominant (one octave); line 4 begins with a key-chord interval, to which succeeds a skip of a fourth, and the tune concludes with another stepwise progression to the tonic. In its naturalness and the ease with which a congregation can immediately 'pick it up,' the tune bears favourable comparison with not a few modern hymn-tunes that lack both beauty and vitality.

Nothing appears to be known about Mr. William Riley who compiled 'Parochial Harmony,' beyond the information conveyed in the above title-page. That he was an enthusiast and keen on obtaining an improvement in psalmody is evident from the preface to his book—forewords so quaint and forcible that no apology is needed for quoting them in full:

To all Lovers of Parochial HARMONY.

I had several Reasons for publishing a Collection of Psalm Tunes, which are as follow, (viz) That, in opposition to the opinion of some modern Enthusiasts, who have adopted certain ludicrous Melodies for Divine Worship; a set of more proper Tunes might appear, to inform the World how far those People are mistaken in this particular, and by their being composed by the most eminent antient and modern Masters, they will further shew how exactly They agree in the Composition of this kind of Music.

Secondly, That though there are some who object to so great a number of Tunes, and recommend the use of five or six only, yet it is well known that so few are not sufficient, because that number must be repeated almost every Sunday for want of greater variety, and a great number of the Psalms, especially the new Version, being in particular Measures, would therefore never be used; or else, those who use the new Version, must almost constantly sing the old 100th & 113th Psalm Tunes, the greatest part of that Version being in those Measures.

Thirdly, That though the Supplement to the new Version of Psalms has supplied us with several good Tunes, which are now in common use, there were still more wanting, as will plainly appear upon a due examination of it.

This deficiency is here abundantly supplied, & several Tunes in the Supplement, & other Collections that were incorrectly printed, and in improper Keys, as also in but two Parts; are here corrected, and Parts added to them.

The * Melody, or Air of each Tune is put in ye Treble Cliff, agreeable to the design of the Composers, which in fact, is agreeable to the Rules of Composition; though most Publishers of Psalm Tunes have put the Air of the Tunes in the Tenor Cliff, and made the Treble a kind of an inner Part to fill up the Harmony, but this is entirely wrong, because the Treble Part being the highest, always claims the Melody as its own Property, and every Scale of Voice has something peculiarly relative to its kind; for as Mr Galiard observes,† 'The Soprano has generally most Volubility, and becomes it best, and also equally the Pathetick. The Contr'Alto more of the Pathetick than the Volubility; the Tenor less of the Pathetick, but more of the Volubility than the Contr'Alto, though not so much as the Soprano. The Bass, in general more pompous than any, but should not be so boisterous as now too often practised.'

How ever, it is certain that the Melodies of all the Psalm Tunes were originally set in the Treble Cliff, with the other Parts under them, as appears by the first Publication of them by their several Composers, and the alteration before mentioned, has been made by some of the greatest Novices in the Science, who have published them so, in opposition to the opinion of the most eminent Masters.

Nothing is more common than for Fractioners in plain Psalmody not to be taught the use of the Appoggiatura, which was invented to adorn the Art of Singing, and is a little Note placed immediately before a great one, for the arriving more gracefully to it; it is therefore hoped that those who think proper to introduce any of the following Tunes, will make use of the Appoggiaturas where ever they are marked.

There are proper Words put to every Tune, but as it is improper to sing any Tune constantly to one set of Words, except such as are in particular Measures, it is necessary to sing ye Tunes to other Psalms as often as occasion shall serve.

Mr. Riley appears to have had quite a modern eye to 'copyright,' if we may judge from the following note of warning which appears under his 'Index':

NB. This Book is entered at Stationers Hall, and whoever reprints any of the following new Tunes, will be prosecuted.

To prevent any one pleading Ignorance, all the new Tunes are marked thus *.

Riley seems to have issued with his Psalmody a dissertation entitled 'Parochial Music Corrected.' On some future occasion we may refer to this trenchantly and amusingly written discourse. In the meantime we may quote a few words from the section headed 'The Performance of Organists.' Mr. Riley is of opinion that:

Great regard should be had to the loudness of the organ, for the full organ is too loud for congregations in general, which not only overpowers the voices, but is also apt to mislead them; therefore the same number of stops should not always be used, but such a quantity only as are proportionable to the bulk of the congregation and to the size of the fabric; for Art is intended only to assist Nature, and not to overbear it. I mention this because I have known some who, in this particular, have made no distinction between a congregation where not above fourscore people usually sing, and one of five or six hundred, besides an hundred charity-children.

The making of a shake at the end of every line is also very often improper, because the sense is not always complete in single lines; in this case the succeeding line should begin without a shake, rather than disturb the sense. The following verse will shew the impropriety of shaking at the end of every line;

The Lord's commands are righteous, and Rejoice the heart likewise;
His precepts are most pure, and do
Give light unto the eyes.

Dr. Samuel Howard, the composer of 'St. Bride's,' was born in 1710, the birth-year of Arne, Avison and Boyce. A chorister in the Chapel Royal, under Dr. Croft, he subsequently studied under Dr. Pepusch. Like many 18th century London organists he seems to have been a pluralist, in that he was organist of the churches of St. Clement Danes, Strand, and St. Bride's (or St. Bridget's), Fleet Street. He did not confine his creative gifts to the church, as in 1744 he composed the music for a Drury Lane pantomime entitled 'The Amorous Goddess, or, Harlequin Married.' As a contrast to this pantomimic achievement he assisted Boyce in the compilation of his Cathedral Music, and graduated Doctor of Music at the University of Cambridge. He composed sonatas, cantatas, anthems and many songs.

Burney naively refers to the patriotism of our composer in these words: 'The ballads of Dr. Samuel Howard, which were long the delight of natural and inexperienced lovers of music [!], had the merit of facility; for this honest Englishman, brought up in the Chapel Royal, preferred the style of his own country to that of any other so much, that he never staggered his belief of its being the best in the world, by listening to foreign artists or their productions.' 'The Dictionary of Musicians' (1824) says that Howard 'was not more esteemed for his musical talents than beloved for his private virtues, being ever ready to relieve distress, to anticipate the demand of friendship, and to prevent the necessities of his acquaintance.'

Dr. Howard, who was a contemporary of Handel, died in London, July 13, 1782. Like other old-time composers he is now known by one production—one that he regarded least, perhaps—his simple hymn-tune 'St. Bride's.'

Dr. Brewer, organist of Gloucester Cathedral, has been entrusted by the Dean and Chapter with the selection of six gentlemen who will reinforce the cathedral choir at the Sunday services. Each of these gentlemen will be asked to accept an honorarium of £10 per annum in recognition of his services; but this sum will be contributed by the Dean and Canons in their individual capacity, and will not in any way be a charge upon the funds of the cathedral. The following have been selected: altos, Messrs. W. H. Bulb and C. Rowles; tenors, Messrs. H. W. Young and H. N. Pitt; basses, Messrs. J. E. Mott and S. W. Underwood.

SHEFFIELD FESTIVAL NOVELTIES.

MR. FREDERIC CLIFFE'S

'ODE TO THE NORTH-EAST WIND.'

The genius of Charles Kingsley found its perfect expression in prose and verse in his 'Westward Ho!' and the 'Ode to the North-east wind.' Both these creations, though suggested by opposite points of the compass, were of the year 1854, when their author was in the full flush of his mental powers. One could quite imagine that Kingsley wrote the stirring lines of the Ode purposely to be sung by Sheffield voices. May not Mr. Frederic Cliffe, himself a Yorkshireman, have selected this poem for musical treatment, knowing full well that its vigorous subject-matter and north-easterly breeziness would stir the imagination and rouse the voices of Dr. Coward's choristers? And assuming the music to be 'all right'—and we think it is—what better hall-mark could a work have than that of Sheffield?

Mr. Cliffe's setting of Kingsley's poem is for chorus and orchestra—a non-solo work. That the words furnish the fullest scope for dramatic choral interpretation goes without saying, and choirs who study the music will here find the full gamut of interpretative expression upon which, so to speak, they can vocally play. The composer has laid out his score in five sections, of which one, a Nocturne, is purely instrumental. With G minor as the key, and 'nine-eight' as the rhythm, the opening chorus is marked Con fuoco, but with a ma non troppo allegro as a caution against a scampering utterance. At bar 5 we have a marked characteristic of the work—a scale of whole-tones, suggestive of the ruggedness of Britishers who are not afraid of even a 'black North-easter'! Here is the scale, which appears in various forms in the course of the development:

The first four lines of the poem are assigned to the tenors and basses:

Welcome, wild North-easter!
Shame it is to see
Odes to every zephyr;
Ne'er a verse to thee.

To this succeeds an instrumental figure of energetic character:

EX. 2.

Con fuoco, ma non troppo allegro
Molto marcato.

After sixteen bars of this, and by way of contrast, a fine, broad theme passes over the scene in the following sustained strain—a real tune which is introduced with fine effect in the Finale:

EX. 3.

ben cantando

The full chorus enters, in strenuous and splendidly pitched chords, at the words :

Welcome, black North-easter !
O'er the German foam.

This section is not only well developed, but is replete with contrasts, e.g., the tender-toned passage :

Ex. 4. Più lento tranquillo. of list-less, list-less.

pp Tired of list-less dream-ing, Through the la-zy day, dream-ing, Through the la-zy day.

The 'lazy day' is a very short one, and immediately a more jocund strain is antiphonally tossed to and from the women and men, starting thus :

Ex. 5. Con fuoco. Jo-vial wind of win-ter! Turn us out to mf Jo-vial wind of win-ter, play! wind of with some triplet passages, one of which would have rejoiced the piscatorial heart of Kingsley himself and that must be quoted :

Ex. 6. SOPRANOS AND ALTOS.

Ev-ry-plung-ing-pike.
TENORS See lower.

This movement, which embraces more than a third of the poem, proceeds to a strenuous conclusion, a fine point being made of the forte outburst, after the whispered words 'Shatt'ring down the snow-flakes,' in the stentorian unison phrase 'Off the curdled sky.'

We have dwelt at some length on the opening section—that being one that well samples the nature of the work—that only brief reference must be made to the succeeding pages. Section II.—in the key of E flat, con spirito, and beginning 'Hark! the brave North-easter!' contains a very beautiful concluding phrase, assigned to the altos alone :

Go! and rest to-morrow,
Hunting in your dreams.

To this succeeds a charming Nocturne—key E flat, andante, poco lento. In this melodious movement the composer recalls strains that have been already heard, and foreshadows those that are to come in a highly ingenious manner. This orchestral interlude, while furnishing a modern, effective contrast and giving the chorus breathing-space, fills the hiatus caused by the omission of the lines :

While our skates are ringing O'er the frozen streams which the composer has not set.

To soprano and contralto voices is assigned the opening of Section IV.—key D, rhythm 6-8, and speed allegro. After ten bars of instrumental introduction the fair members of the chorus sing to a semiquaverous accompaniment :

Ex. 7. Allegretto, molto grazioso.
SOPRANOS 1 & 2.

Let the lus-cious South-wind Breathe in

Let the lus-cious South-wind lov-ers', lov-ers' sighs, &c. Breathe in lov-ers' sighs,

Then the male members of the vocal force ask the question (concerning the South-wind) :

What does he but soften
Heart alike and pen ?

In no part of this movement are the male and female voices combined—they both have their say, and, as may be expected, the ladies have the last word when, in dulcet tones, they sing :

Bringing home their true-loves
Out of all the seas.

The final section (V.) furnishes an adequate and convincing peroration of all that has gone before. It begins in the minor key (G) with a fiery 6-8 swing and in true snowstorm style. The music here is thoroughly Kingsleyan in its keen out-door character. After the storm the key and rhythm are changed and the music thus proclaims a conquering note of no uncertain sound :

Ex. 8. Moderato maestoso.

Come, as came our fa-thers, Her-ald-ed by (senza orch.) Come, as (Orch.) thee, Con-quer-ing, con-quer-ing, &c.
(senza orch.) trem. came our fa-thers,

From strength to strength the strains come and go and are combined in a Coda of rare power and effectiveness. It is not surprising to learn that the Sheffield chorus-singers are keen—may we say North-easterly keen?—on the work. Mr. Cliffe is to be congratulated upon having chosen so invigorating a subject, and in having so successfully risen to the occasion by furnishing Sheffield and other choralists up and down the country with music that is thoroughly English in spirit and masterly in its achievement.

MR. NICHOLAS GATTY'S, 'FLY, ENVOUS TIME.'

Milton's 'Ode on Time' has been set to music by Mr. Nicholas Gatty for production at the Sheffield Festival. The work is laid out for chorus and orchestra (with organ). As the score includes three flutes, English horn, bass clarinet, double bassoon, three trumpets, bass tuba, three kettle-drums, bass drum, and two harps, the orchestration doubtless plays an important part in the composition. For this reason it is difficult to judge the work from a vocal score. This much, however, may be said, that the composer has adopted no half-measures in the strains he has allied to Milton's lines. Rhythmic resource and bold harmonies go hand in hand towards the attainment of Mr. Gatty's artistic goal in a strenuous and modern setting of the old poet's Ode. The music is by no means easy, but that may be in its favour; at all events the composer may be quite sure that everything will be done for his Opus 13 at Sheffield, and that it will be performed, as he wishes it to be, 'in a very broad and sustained style, which should be maintained throughout.' May the 'send-off' be in every way propitious to 'Fly, envious Time.'

Obituary.

The death of Mr. WALTER CECIL MACFARREN took place, we regret to record, at his residence, 3, Osnaburgh Terrace, Regents Park, on September 2, at the age of seventy-nine, he having been born on August 28, 1826. As a biographical sketch, with special portrait, of this much-esteemed musician appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1898, there is no need to repeat the details of his long and useful career. Mr. Macfarren retired from his professorship at the Royal Academy of Music in July, 1903, and this year he published a book of pleasant reminiscences entitled 'Musical Memories.' His remains were laid to rest, amid many manifestations of respect, in East Finchley Cemetery.

With regret at the loss of an earnest worker for and true lover of music, the death is recorded of Mr. JAMES GARNER, conductor of the Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society, who died at Hanley on August 27, at the age of fifty-four. He began his active life in a pottery manufactory, but his strong inclinations to music eventually led him to enter the profession as a conductor and teacher of singing. He brought the above Society into wide fame by the victory to which he led it in the chief choral class of the Royal National Eisteddfod at Liverpool, in September, 1900. This was the first time an English choir had succeeded in the principal section of this Eisteddfod. Mr. Garner was a singularly quiet and unobtrusive man, but nevertheless he was a man of force. His funeral was the occasion of a remarkable demonstration of affection and sympathy on the part of the townsfolk of Hanley.

The death, at Varese, from heart failure is announced of Signor TAMAGNO, the celebrated Italian opera tenor. Born at Turin in 1851, he made his first appearance in England on July 5, 1889, at the Lyceum Theatre, in a representation of 'Otello.' The possessor of a remarkably powerful voice, Tamagno had a most successful career; he soon made a great fortune, and, unlike some singers, he had the good sense not to squander it.

The following deaths are also recorded with regret:

On August 20, at Burslem, Mr. THOMAS HULME, Mayor of Burslem. The deceased was well known as a successful conductor of choirs before he achieved the high position he held at the time of his death.

On August 30, at the West Cliff Saloon, Whitby, during the progress of a bazaar, Mr. HENRY HALLGATE, aged sixty-five. He was a schoolmaster by profession, but he spent much of his life in promoting musical study. He was conductor to the Whitby Choral and Orchestral Union.

On September 10, at Bury St. Edmunds, Mr. THOMAS SMITH, aged seventy-three, a musician much respected in the town and district. He composed some popular anthems, and was the author of 'A concise and practical explanation of the rules of simple harmony and thorough bass.'

On September 12, at 9, Manor Road, Brockley, Mr. WILLIAM SEYMOUR SMITH, aged sixty-nine, composer of some successful pianoforte pieces (e.g., 'Dorothy'), a cantata entitled 'Joshua' (1887), part-songs, songs, &c. Mr. Seymour Smith, who was professor of singing at the Goldsmiths' Institute, had formerly held the organistships of Hampstead Parish Church and St. John's Church, Wimbledon. He gave a 'Musical Sketches' entertainment in London and the provinces with much success.

The following information has been received concerning the promised choral activities in London and suburbs during the coming season:

Royal Choral Society (conductor, Sir Frederick Bridge).—'Messiah,' 'Elijah,' 'Hymn of Praise,' 'Redemption,' 'Golden Legend,' 'The Revenge,' and 'Creation' (Parts 1 and 2); and for the first time by this Society, 'Requiem' (Brahms), 'Blest pair of Sirens,' and 'Dream of Gerontius.'

London Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Arthur Fagge).—'Requiem' (Brahms), 'Samson and Delilah,' and 'The Apostles.'

The South London Institute of Music (conductor, Mr. Leonard C. Venables).—'St. Paul' (Part 1), 'Acis and Galatea,' 'The Rose of Sharon,' and the comic operas 'Paul Jones' and 'The Pirates of Penzance.'

Highbury Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. G. H. Betjemann).—'Golden Legend,' 'Carmen,' and 'Messiah.'

Bermundsey Settlement Choral and Orchestral Union (conductor, Mr. John E. Borland).—'Samson,' 'Cradle of Christ,' 'King Arthur,' 'Banner of St. George,' and 'Golden Legend.' The concerts of the Chamber Music Society in connection with this music-centre are referred to in the 'Occasional Notes,' p. 654.

The Central London Choral Society (conductor, Mr. David J. Thomas).—'Lauda Sion,' 'Cavalier Songs' (Stanford), 'Rose Maiden' (Cowen) and 'From the Bavarian Highlands.' This Society meets at St. Anselm's Schoolroom, Gilbert Street, Oxford Street.

Dulwich Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Arthur Fagge).—'Golden Legend,' 'Faust' (Gounod), 'Hiawatha,' 'Acis and Galatea,' and 'Elijah.'

Catford Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Charles W. Wilkes).—'Messiah,' 'Acis and Galatea,' 'Phaëdrig Crohoore,' 'Last Post,' and 'The Charge of the Light Brigade' (Hecht).

THE WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The Worcester Festival, being 'the one-hundred and eighty-second meeting of the three choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester,' took place last month, the opening service being on Sunday, September 10, followed by the Festival proper on September 12-15. It will go down to history as the 'Elgar Festival,' since the music of that composer occupied fully a quarter of the entire programme. I can remember a Leeds Festival (in 1886) at which just about the same proportion was allowed to Mendelssohn, but in the case of a native composer the honour is surely unique. Elsewhere it might have been considered almost disproportionate, but Worcester delights to honour its most distinguished citizen, and it is very right that a prophet should be had in honour among his own people, who not only crowded the Cathedral to hear his music, but conferred upon him the freedom of the city. The three Elgar works which were given were 'The Dream of Gerontius,' 'The Apostles,' and the recent Introduction and Allegro for strings (Op. 47). The first of these served to open the Festival on Tuesday, occupying the position customarily taken by 'Elijah,'—which was relegated to the Thursday evening—and attracting an audience of 3,053 persons, the largest attendance recorded at any of the last three Festivals. The performance was an excellent one, having the right emotional and dramatic feeling, yet with a finish and smoothness that are easily lost when subtleties of expression are attempted. It served at once to inspire confidence in the conductor, Mr. Ivor Atkins, who has advanced far since he first undertook the Worcester Cathedral organistship, and has added to his undoubted musicianship a command over his resources which only the confidence begotten by experience can give. Sir Edward Elgar conducted his two other works, and the solemnity of the one and the brilliance of the other were amply realized.

Actual novelties were not much in evidence. The most important was a short church cantata by Mr. Ivor Atkins, entitled 'Hymn of Faith.' It has already been described in THE MUSICAL TIMES, so all that is necessary is to attempt some critical estimate of the composition. Its characteristics are sincerity and dignity, achieved without bombast on the one hand, or dryness on the other. It gives plenty of evidence of sound musicianship, but is melodious and rich in colouring. It has the dignity of our older church music, coupled with the warmth and freedom of the modern school, and without a trace of the sweetness which is so insidious an element in much contemporary ecclesiastical art. The libretto, compiled from Scripture by Sir Edward Elgar, is well arranged, and the mezzo-soprano solo—sung with ardour of expression and beauty of tone by Miss Muriel Foster—introduces just sufficient of the personal element, representing, as it does, the experience of the individual soul, disturbed by doubts, and finding a refuge in Faith. Altogether the work is such as to justify congratulations to Mr. Atkins on having made a material advance as a creative musician as well as in the executive capacity already referred to.

Another interesting novelty was a short choral work by Dr. Herbert Brewer, the Gloucester organist, based on words from Books v. and vii. of Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' of which also there has appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES a preliminary appreciation which has been justified by the effect of its performance at the opening service under the composer's direction. It is artistic music, well written for the voices, and shows greater breadth and virility than any of Dr. Brewer's previous compositions. At the same service Mr. Hugh Blair, the predecessor of Mr. Atkins in Worcester Cathedral, supplied a prelude in the shape of an orchestral piece, 'Adoramus te,' which is rich in colouring and devotional in mood. The only other novelties were songs by Mr. Alban Claughton and Mr. T. F. Dunhill, sung by Mr. Frederic Austin at the concert on Wednesday evening. Both are orchestrated, and proved worthy of their surroundings.

The most important revival was a Bach cantata, 'Come, Redeemer of our race,' for which an English version had been provided for the occasion, which was announced as its 'first performance in English'—if not its first in England. 'Nun Komm der Heiden Heiland,' to give the original title, is an early cantata dating from the Weimar period, and has several distinguishing features, a choral overture (following the so-called 'French' form), a tenor aria containing some interludes in which the violins and violas play in unison passages in Bach's most tuneful vein, an intensely impressive recitative for the bass, curiously modern in feeling, and a tantalizingly short, but most brilliant and beautiful choral ending. It is a short work—occupying twenty-five minutes in performance—but is a highly interesting example, and Mr. Atkins, who edited it for the occasion, may be congratulated on his 'find.' A selection from 'The Beatitudes' of César Franck was an unfamiliar feature, and though the form of the work makes some monotony inevitable, the beauty and individuality of much of the music were recognized, and in a cathedral one realized better the simple sincerity underlying the angelic choruses, in which Franck's naive, mystic nature is evidenced. Another work which one rejoiced to hear again was Sir Hubert Parry's 'De Profundis,' a noble monument of sacred music, not only remarkable as an essay in twelve-part choral writing, but as sincere and dignified in expression as music can be. A fine eight-part motet, 'The surrender of the soul to the Everlasting Love,' represented what is, I imagine, the first appearance of Cornelius in an English cathedral, and furnished one of the most beautiful pieces of choral singing during the week. To complete the record, the other choral works were Mozart's 'Requiem,' of which a particularly fine interpretation, musical and impressive, was given; Handel's 'Messiah,' and Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' and 'Hymn of Praise.'

The orchestral pieces heard in the cathedral were all unhackneyed. Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and Brahms's Fourth Symphony both gained immensely by being given under conditions which precluded the usual separation of the movements by applause, so that one realized, as perhaps never before, the continuity and essential unity of the works. The other orchestral piece was the 'Tod und Verklärung' of Richard Strauss, of which it may at least be said that no sense of incongruity was felt in hearing the work in a cathedral, which added, if anything, to the majestic grandeur of the solemn close. It was one of the finest performances of the Festival, and indeed it may be asserted that the orchestral playing reached a level distinctly above the average at these music-makings.

The programme of the one concert may be recorded in extenso:

Overture	- -	'Rosamunde'	- -	Schubert.
Song	- -	'The Soldier's Tent'	- -	Hubert Parry.
Symphonic Poem	- -	'Don Juan'	- -	Stravinsky.
Song	- -	'Dove Sono'	- -	Mozart.
Introduction and Allegro for Strings (Op. 47)	- -		- -	Elgar.
Songs	- -	(a) 'In the Wood'	- -	Alban Claughton.
	- -	(b) 'Comrades'	- -	T. F. Dunhill.
Overture	- -	'Die Meistersinger'	- -	Wagner.
Songs	- -	- - - -	- -	Arranged by Somervell.
Capriccio Italian	- -	- - - -	- -	Tschaikovsky.

The principal vocalists who sang during the Festival were: (Sopranos) Madame Albani, Madame Sobrino, and Miss Agnè Nicholls. (Contraltos) Miss Muriel Foster, Miss Mildred Jones, and Miss Edna Thornton. (Tenors) Mr. John Coates, Mr. James Horncastle, and Mr. Wm. Green. (Basses) Mr. Andrew Black, Mr. Frederic Austin, Mr. Dalton Baker, Mr. Wm. Higley, and Mr. Plunket Greene. Dr. Brewer (Gloucester) and Dr. Sinclair (Hereford) efficiently discharged the duties of organist. The weather, on which so much depends on these occasions, was most propitious, and the attendances were fully up to the average, the two Elgar oratorios easily heading the list.

The following is a list of the attendances at the cathedral performances: Tuesday morning ('Dream of Gerontius'), 3,053; Tuesday evening (Mozart's 'Requiem,' &c.), 1,159; Wednesday morning (Miscellaneous), 1,619; Thursday morning ('Apostles'), 2,933; Thursday evening ('Elijah'), 1,918; Friday morning ('Messiah'), 2,350.

The Hampstead Conservatoire of Music is now amalgamated with the London Academy of Music. A special feature is being made of the orchestra, which will be conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, with the co-operation of Mr. René Ortmans for such rehearsals as Mr. Wood cannot attend.

NATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE FESTIVAL, CRYSTAL PALACE.

The annual Festival of this enterprising and useful body was successfully held at the Crystal Palace during the week ending August 26. On the last day the features were the concerts given by two large choirs, and choral competitions of junior and senior choirs. A junior concert was held in the early afternoon under the direction of Mr. Charles J. Jeapes. The programme proved to be attractive. One of the most effective items was a long action piece 'Patriotic Poesies' (Kate Boundy), which introduces a number of national songs, and affords scope for spectacular display. The voices were sweet and tuneful, but the alto parts were not sufficiently in force. The organ dominated sometimes to the detriment of the effect. At the adult concert there were about 2,000 singers and a large orchestral band. The programme included Oliver King's masterly setting, for choir and orchestra, of 'The sands of Dee.' This beautiful ballad was admirably performed. A choral fantasia of national airs, arranged by Mr. George F. Vincent, was much appreciated. Highly creditable performances of the mixed-voice arrangement of 'The long day closes' (Sullivan), and 'O peaceful evening' (German), were also secured under the spirited and insistent beat of Mr. Allen Gill, who once again demonstrated his power to control large numbers of executants. Mr. Frank Idle was an efficient organist at the adult concert. At the competition, five adult choirs entered, and the Novello Challenge Trophy was won by the Gloucester Choir (Mr. W. H. Morgan) for the third time. According to the rules the Trophy now becomes the permanent property of the Gloucester Choir. Peterborough (Mr. W. J. Roberts) came very close behind, and gained the second prize. The named test-piece was Sullivan's 'Cradle Song.' Nine junior choirs entered for the Plunkett Shield. Stratford (Mr. Sears) won the first place, and Gravesend (Mr. F. Gosling) the second place. Dr. Turpin, who adjudicated, stated that the juvenile singing was the best he had ever listened to. The test-piece was a three-part arrangement of 'Blow, blow, ye winter winds' (Stevens.)

CONVENTION OF MUSIC TEACHERS AT HULL.

A gathering of choirmasters, musical workers in Day and Sunday schools, and amateurs and professionals generally concerned in popular musical education, organised by Mr. J. S. Curwen, took place at the Royal Institution, Hull, on September 14, 15 and 16. Admission was free, but a collection was made each day towards the expenses. The meetings were not always very well attended, but those who came were much interested in the proceedings. We cannot do more here than enumerate the names of the speakers and the topics they introduced for discussion: Mr. W. H. Griffiths, 'How to train a choir of boys'; Mr. H. Ernest Nichol, 'Hymns and Tunes for Children'; Mr. Frank Kidson, 'Sailor Songs and Chanties'; Mrs. Russell Starr, 'Pianoforte Playing and Teaching'; Dr. H. Fisher, 'Psychology in relation to Music Teaching'; Miss Eleanor Coward, 'The Common Faults of Solo Singing'; Dr. T. G. Buffey, 'First Steps in the Playing of Orchestral and Chamber Music'; Mr. H. Chisholm Jackson, 'Recent Developments in Mission Music'; Mr. W. Smith Woods, 'The King's Scholarship Examination'; Mr. W. K. Flint, 'Musical Education and the Elementary Schools,' with references to the new 'Suggestions' of the Board of Education; Mr. R. McLeod, Mr. Newton Laycock, and Mr. Edward Mason gave specimen lessons in singing to school classes. The Mayor of Hull presided at the opening meeting, and Mr. A. Bosville, of Thorpe Hall, Bridlington, was another of the chairmen. The secretaries were Mr. J. Graham, of London, and Mr. C. E. Howell, of Hull.

Mr. Collingwood Banks writes to say that he held the post of organist of Christ's Hospital from 1879 (on the death of the late Joseph Thomas Cooper) until 1902, when the School was removed to West Horsham.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The artistic interest and importance of the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts have steadily increased for some years past, and the season commenced on August 19 shows a lively desire on the part of Mr. Henry J. Wood to raise the standard of these performances still higher. As an instance of this may be quoted the programme of September 13, which included Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations, Tchaikovsky's pianoforte concerto in B flat minor (with Mr. York Bowen as soloist), Strauss's 'Sinfonia Domestica' (its third performance in England), and Rimsky-Korsakoff's 'Capriccio Espagnol.' Another satisfactory feature of this year's scheme is the greater recognition of British composers and the number of novelties introduced and promised. Taking these in the order of performance, notice is first demanded by Max Bruch's Suite on Russian Folk-Tunes (Op. 79B), produced at Barmen last Autumn and heard for the first time in England on August 22. This suite is in five movements, of which the most distinctive is the fourth, a funeral march, dignified in character and richly scored.

On August 29 a symphonic poem entitled 'Nella Foresta Nera' (In the Black Forest), by Signor Alberto Franchetti, was presented. A well-scored and scholarly work, its sentiment is somewhat shallow in comparison with its subject-matter. At this concert was also played Sir Charles Stanford's variations for pianoforte and orchestra on 'Down among the dead men,' the soloist being Miss Elsie Horne.

'The Swan of Tuonela,' styled a legend for orchestra, by the Finnish composer Herr Jean Sibelius, was played for the first time in London on August 31. The legend which the music illustrates is taken from the Kalevala, and relates how a swan swims singing his song of life and death on the black stream which surrounds the kingdom of Tuonela, the land of death of Finnish mythology. The song of the swan is given to the cor anglais, and appropriate sombreness of tone-colour is sought by omitting from the score flutes, clarinets (except the bass clarinet), and trumpets, and by subdivision of the strings. The result is impressive but somewhat depressing.

Three pieces, severally named 'Méditation,' 'Mélodie,' and 'Scherzo,' by Tchaikovsky, for violin and orchestra, scored by M. Glazounoff, were played by Madame Beatrice Langley on September 5, but scarcely call for comment except that the first was originally intended for the slow movement of the violin concerto, but discarded, and wisely, for the canzona. It may be added that the pieces were written in 1878 and published under the title of 'Souvenir d'un Lieu Cher.'

On September 7 was played, for the first time in England, Herr Draeseke's 'Jubilee' overture, written in 1898 at the request of the authorities of Dresden to commemorate the seventieth birthday and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession of the late King Albert of Saxony. The work is laid out for a large orchestra which includes four trumpets and two tubas, and the composer writes in a generous frame of mind for the brass generally. The two principal themes, the one pompous and grandiose, and the other thankful in character, are well contrasted, but the working-out is not satisfactory, and the composer seems to have been unable to overcome the apparently inevitable influence exercised by the knowledge of writing to order.

A suite for small orchestra, entitled 'Miniatures,' by Mr. J. D. Davis, was played for the first time on September 9 and proved an imaginative and cleverly-scored work, but unbalanced with regard to the length of the respective numbers. This in particular applies to the second and concluding movements, the former being a Scherzando of extreme briefness while the latter consists of a theme and seven variations of some length. Notable contrapuntal skill and resource is shown in the variations, and they manifestly made a favourable impression.

Liszt's Hungarian 'Storm' march was announced as first performance in London on September 12. The work dates from 1843, and is dedicated to Count Alexander Teleki. It may be described as brave music, but it is scarcely of great artistic value. At this concert Mr. Robert Burnett sang Sir Charles Stanford's 'Five songs of the sea,' which were enthusiastically received.

Considerable interest attached to the production on September 19 of a symphonic poem, No. 5, entitled 'Sir William Wallace (A.D. 1305),' by Mr. William Wallace.

The work has for its basis the patriotism of the Scottish hero, and in a note contributed to the programme the composer says: 'The themes are not based on any traditional Scottish tunes, with the exception of "Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled" and its mournful version "The land o' the lea." These, however, are used only in a fragmentary and rhythmical form, suggesting rather than reproducing the actual notes.' The work, in four sections, is scored for full orchestra, including English horn and two harps. The third section forms the slow movement, and is the most expressive and satisfactory portion of the composition. If the other parts are energetic and robust, the style generally seems too complex for the subject, although the music attests to Mr. Wallace's musicianship and command of his art.

At the concert on September 20 Mr. Howard-Jones played Brahms's pianoforte concerto in D minor with remarkable success. He not only interpreted the music in the true Brahms spirit and with technical skill that was above reproach, but he added thereto all needful intelligence and emotion. He also played some pieces in the second part of the programme with refinement and artistic insight.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Our season began with a week's visit of the Moody-Manners Opera Company to the Prince of Wales's Theatre, commencing on September 11. The operas given were 'Lohengrin,' 'Carmen,' 'Maritana,' 'Faust,' 'Tannhäuser,' and 'The Bohemian Girl.' The principal artists included Madame Fanny Moody, Madame de Vere, and Miss Zélie de Lussan; Messrs. Joseph O'Mara, Wilson Pembroke, and John Child. Good houses were the rule during the week.

The various choral societies have now issued their schemes. The Festival Choral Society (conductor Dr. Sinclair) propose to give Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' Walford Davies's 'Everyman,' with the third act of 'Tannhäuser,' a Handel concert, comprising 'Acis and Galatea,' and selections from other works, the last concert being devoted to Elgar's 'The Apostles.'

The City Choral Society (conductor Mr. Fred Beard) will give three concerts. At the first there will be a recital of Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah'; at the next Elgar's 'King Olaf' will be revived, Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea' completing the programme; and Gounod's 'Redemption' will be performed at the last concert.

The Midland Musical Society (conductor, Mr. A. J. Cotton) will give four concerts in the Town Hall on Saturday evenings at popular prices, bringing forward Smart's 'The Bride of Dunkerron,' Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and 'Prodigal Son,' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.' Similar work will be done by the Choral and Orchestral Association and the Choral Union. The former, conducted by Mr. Joseph H. Adams, will give that composer's 'King Conor,' Handel's 'Samson,' and a concert recital of Gounod's 'Faust.' The Choral Union (conductor, Mr. Thomas Facer) promise Gounod's 'Messe Solennelle,' 'The Lamentation of David over Absalom,' by Heinrich Schütz, a concert recital of Wallace's 'Maritana,' the 'Messiah,' and Costa's 'Eli.'

Messrs. Harrison will introduce the London Symphony Orchestra, with Sir Edward Elgar as conductor. The Queen's Hall Orchestra will play at their fourth concert.

Mr. Max Mossel's drawing-room concerts enter upon their tenth season on October 26. At the second, Signor Busoni will make his only appearance in Birmingham this season. I hope to refer to other announcements next month.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Herbert Walton's eighth autumn series of organ recitals at the cathedral has again heralded the approach of the regular concert season. At three of the six recitals the cathedral organist maintained his high reputation, and at the remaining three performances Dr. Peace, Mr. E. H. Lemare, and Sir Walter Parratt respectively performed to crowded congregations.

The approaching concert season of the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union will embrace a period of fifteen weeks, during which sixteen classical concerts—four choral and twelve orchestral—will be given, and, in addition, the usual popular orchestral concerts on Saturday evenings. The choral works selected for performance are Bach's 'Passion' (St. Matthew), Elgar's 'The Apostles,' Handel's 'The Messiah,' Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman,' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin.' The three first named will be much enhanced by the addition of the organ part played on the newly reconstructed instrument in St. Andrew's Hall. The Scottish Orchestra will, as formerly, number eighty performers, with Mr. Henry Verbruggen as leader and Dr. Cowen as conductor-in-chief, the other conductors being Messrs. Colonne, Siegmund von Hausegger, and Dr. Richter. As usual the choral concerts will be under the direction of Mr. Joseph Bradley, with Mr. Thomas Berry at the organ.

The Pollokshields Philharmonic Society, ably conducted by Mr. John Cullen, have in hand parts 1 and 2 of Berlioz's 'Childhood of Christ,' Massenet's 'Narcissus,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast.' This enterprising Society will make a new departure this year by including in their scheme three chamber concerts by the Verbruggen Quartet, and prior to these Mr. Cullen will give short analytical lectures (illustrated on the pianoforte) on the principal works to be performed.

The choir of the Young Men's Christian Association, under Mr. R. L. Reid, will take up the 'Messiah' and Haydn's 'Spring,' while the Sunday School Union Choir, conducted by Mr. Alec Steven, will essay Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.' The third season of the Govan Choral Union (Mr. Alec Steven, conductor) will be devoted to Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus.' Amateur opera will be represented by no fewer than four societies, viz., the Orpheus Club (Mr. James Barr, conductor), the Athenæum School of Music (Gounod's 'Faust' and Donizetti's 'Daughter of the Regiment'), the Glasgow College of Music (Lecocq's 'Pépita'), and the Glasgow Amateur Operatic Society (Sullivan's 'The Emerald Isle').

Of choral societies in the neighbourhood the following arrangements are announced: Hamilton (Mr. T. S. Drummond, conductor), Handel's 'Messiah' and 'Alexander's Feast,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast'; Dumfries (Mr. E. Owston, conductor), Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise'; Clydebank (Mr. W. J. Clapperton, conductor), a first performance of Learmont Drysdale's 'Tamlaine' and Haydn's 'Creation'; Coatbridge and Vale of Leven (both societies conducted by Mr. W. J. Clapperton), the 'Messiah' and 'Elijah.'

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Now is the winter, not of our discontent, but of our monotonously drab and smoky outlook, to be made gloriously summerlike by the most beautiful and most enlivening of all the arts. Our music's Spring, like that of latitudes still more northern, bursts upon us with delightful suddenness. Already our recently bare and silent fields of music are colouring for the harvest; and presently the air all about them will be filled with varied song. There is every reason to believe that the season will be welcomed with unabated keenness. Manchester's well-won musical fame undoubtedly prompts local appreciation of the art with a chivalrous and almost jealous zest, a zest which gives a special impulse to professional effort, and prompts both audiences and performers to live up to, and not merely upon, the city's reputation. And this reputation, if persistency in an art is accepted as conclusive of conviction in it, is amply justified.

The Gentlemen's Concerts, our oldest musical Association, presses hard for age the London Catch Club, with its registry of birth in 1741. Our Gentlemen's Glee Club is rejoicing in its seventy-five years of representative as well as genially social life. The Hallé Concerts—technically the Hallé Concerts Society, since Sir Charles Hallé's death in 1895—are nearing their fiftieth milestone. The Manchester Vocal Society is entering upon its thirty-ninth season, and the Philharmonic Choral Society which, under the conductorship of Mr. G. Brand Lane, rehearses weekly the whole year round—three weeks in August excepted—has twenty-five years of leavening life behind it. Even the most important of our amateur orchestras—the Beethoven Society—is seen to be vigorous and enterprising at the end of eighteen years of private and public practice. The youngest born of Manchester's musical family is, in one sense, the bonniest of them all—it is the Brodsky Quartet. These exclusively instrumental concerts most encouragingly flourish, and the six that constitute the series confessedly add to the musically educating, as well as pleasurable influences, exerted in Manchester.

At the moment of writing the details of the programmes of the Hallé Concerts (to begin on October 19) have not been published. But in a day or two Dr. Richter will be back from his well-earned rest in Germany, and we shall soon learn what golden fleeces the great Argonaut brings with him, or finds the executive committee in possession of. The Gentlemen's Concerts, Dr. Richter conducting, will commence their season of the usual eight concerts on October 23. The syllabus of his seven subscription concerts, which Mr. Brand Lane has issued, is an interesting and very generous one. Dr. F. H. Cowen's 'John Gilpin' (which is also in the Vocal Society's programme), and a concert-room rendering of selections from 'Carmen' figure in the list of choral works.

Dr. Henry Watson will fill his accustomed place as director of the Vocal Society's four subscription concerts. The programmes of Mr. Percy Harrison's visiting concerts grow with the years in interest and importance. The Queen's Hall Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, is again engaged,—for the fourth and last concert—and the interest of novelty is concentrated in the appearance at the second concert of the newly-formed London Symphony Orchestra. Sir Edward Elgar is to conduct; and selections, instrumental and vocal, from his works, will mark the programme. The interesting concerts at the Schiller Anstalt, and of Mr. Max Mayer, will be resumed, as will the popular Saturday evening concerts of Mr. Cross.

The one new enterprise so far known to me is that of a series of promenade concerts in the Free Trade Hall, carried out somewhat on the lines of the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts in London. The band, numbering from fifty to sixty performers, will be selected exclusively from the Hallé Orchestra, and Mr. Simon Spielman, the viola leader, a member of the Brodsky Quartet, will conduct.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Two works entirely new to this district, Dr. Walford Davies's 'Everyman' and Dr. Cowen's 'Ruth,' are to be given by our chief choral organization, the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union, in conjunction with the Hallé Orchestra, and under the direction of Mr. J. M. Preston. In connection with this Society the Scottish Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Cowen, will pay us a visit in February. The Amateur Vocal Society promise a welcome revival of Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri,' and will give Gounod's 'Redemption' after Christmas. The Philharmonic Society will rehearse Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin.' The Postal Telegraph Choral Society are taking 'St. Paul' and 'St. John's Eve,' by the same two composers.

The combined forces of the Darlington Choral and Orchestral Society will probably perform the 'Hymn of Praise' and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' and the instrumental section of the Society Dvorák's Suite in D and Wieniawski's violin concerto. The Bishop Auckland Choral Society propose to rehearse Cowen's 'Rose Maiden' and probably Goetz's 'Nœnia.' The Choral Society at South Shields is also finding material in Dr. Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Inchcape Rock,' and Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives'—which has not been heard in this district for some years—and a repetition of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Minnehaha.' It is much to be deplored that no room has been found in the various schemes for the choral works of J. S. Bach, and of our English Bach, Sir Hubert Parry.

The students' Society at the Armstrong College will include Jensen's 'Feast of Adonis' in their programme, and the choir in connection with the Newcastle Co-operatives, Barnby's 'Rebekah.' In the neighbouring town of Gateshead, the Vocal Society will rehearse Handel's 'Samson,' and the Dunston Choral Society the 'Hymn of Praise' and Jensen's 'Feast of Adonis.'

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

This is the fiftieth season of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society, and the works announced to be given in this jubilee year are Berlioz's 'Faust,' Elgar's 'Caractacus,' Walford Davies's 'Everyman,' and a work entitled 'The Awakening,' composed by John Cullen, a musician well known and much respected in the city. The orchestral concerts in connection with this Society will be held as usual, and the programme includes Schumann's symphony in B flat, Dvorák's 'New World' symphony, and German's 'Welsh Rhapsody.'

The West Bridgford Choral Society are preparing Stanford's 'Revenge' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.'

The New Musical Society at Leicester propose to undertake Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' Bridge's 'Callirhoe,' and Stanford's 'Revenge.' The Leicester Philharmonic Society are preparing Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and Walford Davies's 'Everyman.' A new feature of the coming season at Leicester will be made by the Leicester Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Mr. J. Addison Adcock; the works for performance are to include Beethoven's first Symphony, the same composer's pianoforte concerto in C minor, in addition to works by Bach, Elgar and Rossini.

At Boston the Choral Class will make a start with Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' while the 'Hymn of Praise' is to follow. The 'Song of Miriam' (Schubert) and the 'Banner of St. George' (Elgar) are the prospective works for the Derby Choral Union, whilst 'Elijah' has been fixed upon for performance by the Melbourne Glee and Madrigal Society.

The Loughborough Philharmonic Society have decided to perform the 'Golden Legend' (Sullivan) and 'Faust' (Gounod) for the coming season. At Grantham the Philharmonic Society are studying 'Samson,' 'The Last Judgment,' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.' Mr. Arthur Richards's orchestral concerts (Nottingham) are to be continued, and the programme of the first will contain Grieg's 'Sigurd Jorsalfar' suite, Handel's second concerto for organ and orchestra, and Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' overture.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Triennial Festival has somewhat interfered with the resumption of rehearsals by the various musical societies in Sheffield, and until that event is over a serious settling down to the winter's work is not expected. Most of the works to be given during the season are now chosen. It is a matter for regret that so few works new to the city figure in the list.

The Amateur Musical Society (conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood) are rehearsing Verdi's 'Requiem' and the Choral Epilogue from the 'Golden Legend.'

The Musical Union (Dr. Coward) announce 'Elijah,' 'The Messiah,' 'Everyman' (Walford Davies), and 'John Gilpin' (Cowen).

The Choral Union (Mr. J. Duffell) have selected 'Hohenlinden' (Duffell) and 'Blest pair of Sirens,' and promise 'The Messiah,' 'Stabat Mater' (Dvorák), and Schubert's Mass in E flat.

The Heeley Musical Union (Mr. M. Tomlinson) will give the 'Hymn of Praise' and 'The Messiah'; the Burngreave Choral Society (Mr. H. Chisholm Jackson) Costa's 'Eli' and 'The Creation'; and the Walkley Musical Society 'The Messiah.'

The Barnsley St. Cecilia Society (Dr. Coward) have chosen Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal,' and Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-East Wind.'

The post of conductor of the Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society, rendered vacant by the death of Mr. James Garner, is to be filled by Mr. John James, who has made himself widely known as the conductor of the Hanley Cauldon Vocal Society. The operations of the Glee and Madrigal Society (not a very good title for a society distinguished for its fine performance of large works) will be carried out as arranged. Bach's Passion Music ('St. Matthew') will be given in March, 1906.

The annual conference of the South Wales Tonic Sol-fa Association, to be held at Mountain Ash on October 27 and 28, is exciting much local interest. Lectures will be given by Mr. J. T. Rees on 'How to write effectively for strings and wood-wind instruments'; Mr. W. T. Samuel on 'Mental Effects'; and by Mr. W. H. Griffiths (London) on 'Top Notes, and how to produce them.' Mr. D. W. Lewis (Brynamman) will deliver his presidential address, taking as his subject 'Our nation's musical taste.'

The London Bach Society has just been started for giving performances of the great Cantor's works. The conductor is Mr. C. G. Thomas, and the rehearsals will be held at St. Mark's Church, Marylebone Road.

The Finsbury Choral Society has, we regret to state, ceased to exist, but many of its members are sure to find their way to the Alexandra Palace Society in order not to lose the benefit of Mr. Allen Gill's inspiring conductorship.

Mr. Richard A. Northcott has been appointed musical critic of The Daily Chronicle in succession to his father, the late and much-respected Mr. John Northcott.

The British Symphony Orchestra (conductor, Mr. W. Sewell) is a new combination of orchestral players which seeks for public favour.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

ADELAIDE.—An excellent concert was given by the Bach Society on July 27 in the Town Hall, and was attended by the Governor and Lady Le Hunte. The programme included Mozart's 'Requiem'; Beethoven's C minor Symphony, splendidly played by the orchestra; Bach's Motet 'I wrestle and pray'; and Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens.' The choir sang throughout with excellent tone and attack, and Dr. Harold Davies conducted with much skill and discretion. The solo parts in the 'Requiem' were sung by Misses Hilda Hales, L. H. Dunstan, and Gwen Chaplin; Mr. A. E. Hawkes and Mr. Stanley Newman. Mr. G. Gardner presided at the organ.

BLOEMFONTEIN.—Under the patronage of His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, the united choirs of Bloemfontein gave a performance of Handel's 'Messiah' in the Town Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. George H. Deale, on August 17. The choir and orchestra, numbering 140 performers, were admirably trained, the choruses being given with great precision and accuracy in attack, the parts being well balanced and the expression admirably observed. Mr. Charles Saunders—who was specially engaged to sing the solo tenor music—congratulated Mr. Deale on his orchestra, which he considered one of the best he had sung to since he left England.

CHRISTCHURCH, N.Z.—The Musical Union gave a successful concert on August 3 in the Canterbury Hall, when the programme was mainly orchestral. It included Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overture and 'Cornelius' march, Beethoven's C major symphony and Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite. The solo vocalists, Miss Livingstone and Mr. Claude Allan, were excellent, and Dr. J. C. Bradshaw conducted with care and skill.

DURBAN, S.A.—The Durban Musical Association closed its music-makings so far as the conductor, Mr. Charles Hoby, is concerned, on August 19. During the season a highly successful performance was given of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' with Miss Ada Forrest, Miss Catherine Kips, Mr. Richard Evans and Mr. Alick Gray as soloists, and full orchestra and chorus. On August 19 a miscellaneous concert was given, consisting of excerpts from 'Carmen' and 'Faust,' and the 'Banner of St. George,' with orchestral pieces by Mendelssohn, Elgar and others. The principal soloists were Miss Ada Forrest and Mr. Philip Suckling. This was Mr. Hoby's farewell appearance. The Durban Orchestral Society (conductor Mr. Hoby), after five years' successful work, during which time many classical masterpieces have been brought to a first hearing in the Colony, has terminated its career in consequence of acute financial depression passing over the Colony. The collapse of the Society is much to be regretted, as the orchestra was complete in every department, and has had a great educational effect on the community.

PENZANCE.—Mr. John H. Nunn, who has for forty-seven years been conductor of the Choral Society, has been compelled to resign owing to ill-health. Mr. Richard White, for many years assistant-conductor and organist, has been appointed to the vacant post, his place as organist having been taken by Mr. Alan H. Thorne. Mr. Nunn's name will continue to be associated with the Society as honorary conductor.

SIMONSTOWN, S.A.—The fourth concert of the Simonstown Philharmonic Society was held on August 16, when Cowen's cantata 'The Rose Maiden' was rendered. The soloists were Miss Jessie Boyd, Miss Annie Rous, Mr. R. B. Hendry, and Mr. T. Rosser-Dummer. Miss Violet Lankester was the accompanist, and the concert was a great success under Mr. H. Austin Palmer's direction.

Answers to Correspondents.

W. W.—(1) In 1755 Dr. Boyce composed his anthem 'Lord, Thou hast been our refuge' for the Festival of the Sons of the Clergy held in St. Paul's Cathedral, the year of his appointment to the conductorship of that annual service. (2) Yes, the Boyce edition of Purcell's Te Deum and Jubilate is still obtainable. (3) We do not know of an article on Handel's oratorio 'Joseph.' (4) We cannot tell upon what authority Crosse, in his 'Account' of the York Musical Festival of 1823, made the statement (p. 31) that no oratorio had been performed north of the Trent previous to the year 1766, when Joah Bates conducted a performance of 'The Messiah.' Perhaps some Yorkshire antiquary, jealous for the musical honour of his county, will set to work to refute Mr. Crosse's statement. See the articles on Joah Bates in our January and February issues of the present year.

B.—(1) Try the exercises in Stainer's 'Choral Society Vocalisation' Primer. Possibly the reason why the voices of the ladies in your choir sound 'muffled' is because the said fair ones do not sufficiently open their mouths and thus fail to get the needful resonance. (2) If you wish to become a Fellow—and the desire is a most laudable one—why not work up for the examinations of the Royal College of Organists? (3) To sing the last verse of every Psalm more slowly than the preceding ones is not desirable; but the last line of the final verse that is chanted may be effectively slackened.

A. E. (Wellington, N.Z.) writes to inform W. H. L. (see p. 338 of the May issue) that the three sketches for the pianoforte, entitled, 'Sunday morning,' 'Sunday evening,' and 'Parting,' were composed by Dr. J. L. Hopkins, formerly organist of Trinity College, Cambridge, and not by the late organist of the Temple Church, Dr. E. J. Hopkins. On behalf of 'W. H. L.' we desire to thank our far-away reader, 'A. E.' for kindly sending this information across the seas.

E. C.—Benjamin Cooke was in business as a music-publisher at the Golden Harp, New Street, Covent Garden, about 1728, and he published 'Twenty-four Country Dances for the Year 1738.' Peter Wamsley, the violin maker, can be traced as living at the Harp and Hautboy, in Pickadilly, between 1735 and 1751. Therefore the publication of your copy of Corelli's Sonatas bearing both the above names may be assigned to the latter part of the first half of the 18th century.

J. W. W.—In William Byrd's madrigal 'While the bright sun,' the word 'Phalon' is a misprint for 'Philon.' The first line of the words in the original reads 'While that the sun,' the alteration having doubtless been made to secure a better accentuation of the words. It first appeared in Byrd's 'Songs of sundrie natures' (1589). The words of this madrigal are by an anonymous poet: Philon is doubtless an imaginary name for the shepherd.

J. N. McC. (Brisbane).—(1) The only way to obtain the autograph portraits you desire would be to write to the various sitters. (2) As the late Mr. Walter Macfarren never received the honour of knighthood, the prefix 'Sir' to his name in your printed list of musical celebrities should be deleted.

MARA.—For bass songs (small compass) see: 'O rushing wind' (Addison), 'The ould plaid shawl' (Haynes), 'The shipwright' (Molloy), 'The Gordons' (Needham), 'Bad luck to their marching' (Needham), 'A wet sheet and a flowing sea' (Shaw), 'Cheerily O!' (West).

D. M. C.—We have not the conditions of the examination before us, but would it not be well to include in your selection a piece by a composer of the romantic school, Chopin or Schumann? Otherwise your choice appears to be 'good enough.'

J. W. T.—You ask us to 'kindly inform' you 'the requirements in order to become a musical director,' but you do not indicate the kind of 'musical director' you wish to become. Your question should be a little more directorily direct.

D. S. (Mandal, Norway).—A 'list of standard books on music' is a little vague. Do you wish for purely literary (biographies, history, &c.) books, or text-books? Please let us know, and we will endeavour to help you towards a selection.

F. J. R.—We regret to be unable to trace the author of the words of the anthem 'Holy, holy,' by Abbé Vogler, No. 108 in the 'United Free Church Anthem Book.' Perhaps some of our readers can furnish a clue.

A. E. S.—The examinations of Trinity College include those that are 'easy,' and there is no age limit. You should study something better than those flower-named pianoforte pieces if you wish to make artistic progress.

READER.—Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies's 'The Singing of the Future' is certainly 'a book worth reading' on the subject of which it so ably treats.

W. W.—In the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the vicar of the church is supreme in such matters; but had you not better consult a solicitor?

M. R.—The traditional music to each of Shakespeare's plays is published by Messrs. French & Co., Southampton Street, Strand.

ORGAN.—'Modern Organ Tuning,' by Hermann Smith, is published by William Reeves, 83, Charing Cross Road, price 3s. 6d.

REX.—We do not know of any collection of 'varied hymn-tune accompaniments' other than that by Mr. J. W. Elliott.

SPHINX.—Handel's 'Largo' is an arrangement, by Hellmesberger, of the air 'Ombra mai fu' from the opera of 'Serse' ('Xerxes'), produced April 15, 1738.

J. M. P.—Full particulars respecting the Patron's Concert Fund can be obtained upon application to the Registrar, Royal College of Music, South Kensington.

A. C. H.—In Bach's fugue in C sharp minor (No. 4, Book 1, of the '48') the variant of the counter-subject is quite correct and no one has any right to alter it.

J. P. H.—Yes, we quite hope to have an article on the school you mention.

W. W. P.—Write to Messrs. W. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, W., for the information.

M. G. W.—See an announcement on p. 657 of the present issue.

A. C.—The publishers of the song beginning 'In sheltered vale' are Messrs. Ascherberg & Co.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS (Tenor).

Barnstable Festival Society's performance of Gounod's "Faust,"
May 3, 1905.
"Mr. Samuel Masters had a good deal to do, and he did it in a manner that won glowing opinions. His interpretation of the Cavatina, "All Hail," was exquisite."—North Devon Journal.

"Mr. Samuel Masters made a sympathetic hero, the purity of his true tenor quality, conspicuous on high notes, combined with artistic perception and accurate sense of intonation, being special features of his performance."—Western Morning News.

"As Faust Mr. Samuel Masters was the passionate lover to the life, and his singing was a triumph from start to finish."—Devon and Exeter Gazette.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS.

Performance of "King Olaf," Colchester Musical Society,
May 4, 1905.

"Mr. Samuel Masters was in fine form, and the lengthy, but by no means monotonous solo, "King Olaf heard the cry," was sufficient to display a powerful, yet well-controlled, voice, the B flat being splendidly taken. His other solos were equally good, and his duet with the Hon. Mrs. Clifford evoked quite a storm of applause."—East Anglian Daily Times.

"Mr. Samuel Masters was very successful in his solo work, 'And King Olaf heard the cry' being a distinctly artistic effort, the top B flat being remarkably well taken. All his singing was vigorous and in perfect tune."—Essex Telegraph.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS.

Performance of "Creation," Northampton Musical Society.
"Mr. Samuel Masters excelled in the tenor part. His recitative work exemplified the superb descriptive power of this feature of the oratorio. His portion of the concerted numbers was sung with infinite good judgment and charming tunefulness, and his solos were rendered with equal facility and expressiveness."

Address, 61, Alexandra Road, Wimbledon, S.W.

TECHNIQUE

AND EXPRESSION

IN

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cetera.

THE MUSIC TO KING ARTHUR

WRITTEN BY

J. COMYNS CARR

COMPOSED BY

ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

ARRANGED FOR CONCERT PERFORMANCE BY WILFRED BENDALL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In 1894 the late Sir Arthur Sullivan accepted a commission from Sir Henry Irving to compose incidental music to Mr. Comyns Carr's drama of "King Arthur." The work was produced at the Lyceum Theatre, on January 12, 1895, and proved a great artistic success. After the withdrawal of the drama it was suggested to the composer that it would be a pity to allow such beautiful music to remain unpublished and become forgotten, and that a selection from it might be arranged in the form of a short concert-cantata. . . . After the composer's death it was decided to revert to the original proposition regarding the music, and the present concert-arrangement is the result.

THE TEN VIRGINS

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

BACUP TIMES, NOVEMBER 19, 1904.

We have pleasure in giving a full description of this very excellent cantata to be performed at Bacup on Sunday next. It will be remembered that a performance last year of a similar work by the same composer ("The Holy City") proved of exceptional merit and great popularity, and we should imagine that "The Ten Virgins," a newer work, will prove equally or even more attractive.

In "The Ten Virgins," Mr. Alfred R. Gaul, following the example of Wagner, has become his own librettist, an arrangement which undoubtedly has many advantages.

"The Ten Virgins" is founded on the parable as related in the 25th chapter of St. Matthew. The greater portion of the parable is allotted to the narrator (baritone) in the third person. The various incidents of the allegory are interspersed with reflections by means of which the composer tells us he has endeavoured to accentuate the spiritual teaching underlying them. In this way portions of the Lord's Prayer, Miss Winkworth's translation of "Sleepers, wake" (with which the work very appropriately commences), and Tennyson's beautiful lines

Late, late, so late! and dark the night and chill!

Late, late, so late! but we can enter still have been worked in with charming effect. The parable ends with the ominous words "And the door was shut," but Mr. Gaul has preferred to end his work with the idea set forth in the words of the Psalmist, "My song shall be of mercy and judgment," and so appropriately closes with the words "God willeth not the death of a sinner," followed by a double chorus, "O sing unto the Lord a new song." The libretto has been compiled with much skill and thought; the story is one which lends itself admirably to musical treatment, and with regard to its arrangement Mr. Gaul has achieved a measure of success greater than that usually attained by literary works of a like nature.

So far we have dealt with the libretto, now we might turn to the musical portion of the work. The cantata opens with a short introduction suggestive of wedding bells, in the midst of which we hear the first strains of the well-known chorale which has frequently been used by composers before, and notably by Mendelssohn in his oratorio "St. Paul," where, as in the present work, it is wedded to the words "Sleepers, wake, a voice is calling." These words, given out to the basses in unison, pianissimo, constitute, together with a chorus which follows and which ultimately gives way to the chorale in its entirety, a most appropriate and effective introduction to the parable. Having thus prepared the way, as it were, the baritone voice, in the person of the narrator, proceeds to relate the parable with the words "The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto Ten Virgins." It will be observed that the utterances of the narrator are almost invariably preceded by four chords identical in construction.

Following this is a setting of a portion of the Lord's Prayer for tenor soloist, beginning with the words "Thy kingdom come," which is a charming number, very devotional in character, and during the singing of which it is suggested that all should stand. A fine chorus, "Let your loins be girded," follows, in the course of which is a very effective quartet which starts (unaccompanied) "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching." Another noteworthy feature of the chorus is the fugal exposition commencing at the words "Your lights be burning," the subject of which is extensively used in the accompaniment as the chorus develops. We should imagine that this chorus will prove thoroughly effective and probably popular. This number leads without any pause to a duet for soprano and contralto, "They that trust in the Lord," which in time gives way to a contralto solo, "Thou art the guide of our youth," which is chiefly remarkable for its truly devotional character.

The narration of the parable is again resumed, the baritone voice relating in the words of Scripture how the wise virgins "Took oil in their vessels with their lamps," and the five foolish virgins "put their lamps but took no oil with them." This suggests another departure in the shape of a reflection upon the value of wisdom and that which is the beginning of all wisdom "The fear of the Lord." A chorus of virgins, "Come and let us walk in the light of the Lord," follows, and then the narrator resumes the story: "While the Bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept." A soprano solo to the words of the popular hymn "Sun of my soul, thou Saviour dear" is followed by an intermezzo depicting "Sleep." At its close the first phrase of the chorale "Sleepers, wake," is heard very softly as a contralto solo, the idea being obvious. This is followed by a very beautiful baritone solo, "How long, oh heavenly Bridegroom, how long wilt Thou delay?" It is of the good old orthodox form with which Handel, and after him Mendelssohn, in a modified form have familiarized us. The parable is then resumed, first by the narrator and afterwards by a solo for soprano "Wisdom crieth in the streets," which in turn gives way to an exceedingly fine fugal chorus "O how great is Thy goodness," one of the best numbers of the work. The subjects are brought in most effectively, and with all the skill and vocal effect that we are accustomed to from Mr. Gaul. A short recitative for the narrator, "And while they went to buy, the Bridegroom came," brings us to a festive march, another number which will certainly become popular. In this march the phrase of the chorale "Sleepers, wake," is again introduced; in fact this phrase forms the musical text upon which the work is built, just as in his "Lobgesang" Mendelssohn uses as his text the phrase given out by trombones at the opening of that work. The narrator then proceeds, "And they that were ready went in with Him to the marriage, and the door was shut," after which there is a quartet and double chorus, containing some effective eight-part writing. After a tenor solo and semi-chorus, "Ascribe unto the Lord," we come to a very interesting quartet, "O worship the Lord," which is a cleverly-devised canon, four in one, the subject of which, in four-part harmony, is afterwards sung as a semi-chorus. Again the narrator resumes his story: "Afterwards came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, open to us," in response to which the guests from within (represented by four voices at a distance) are heard singing "Glory and worship are before Him." The foolish virgins persist in their cry "Open to us," while the narrator proceeds: "Verily I say unto you, I know you not." This leads to what will probably be the gem of the work—the setting of Lord Tennyson's beautiful poem "Late, late, so late!" Special care seems to have been bestowed on these lines, and the music appears appropriate, suggestive, and effective. The first two lines are sung by female voices, the response, "Too late, too late! ye cannot enter now," being given to the basses in unison. This and a spirited chorus, "The wicked are like the troubled sea," which follows is the most dramatic portion of the work. The chorus is very effective, and has an accompaniment in which the bass moving in rapid triplets is a conspicuous feature and very descriptive of the sentiments of the words. The contralto solo and quartet "God willeth not the death of a sinner," which is another gem, and the final chorus for a double choir, "O sing unto the Lord," form a worthy conclusion to a very charming and effective work.

The above Cantata has been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral, including three numbers for Sopranos and Contraltos (The Virgins). In the matter of the Orchestral parts, the following plan has been adopted—i.e., when the Strings are tacit, instead of employing rests, anything that is written for other instruments will appear in small notes in the string parts, and a similar plan has been adopted with regard to the reed instruments—i.e., any Clarinet or Oboe Solo will be expressed in small notes in the Flute part. This arrangement, it is hoped, will make it possible to give a fair rendering of the work with a limited orchestra.

Price, Paper cover, 2s. 6d. ; Paper boards, 3s. ; Cloth, gilt, 4s. ; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. ; Vocal parts, each 1s.
 Words only, 5s. per 100.

The gratuitous loan of instrumental parts may be had on application to the Composer, and full liberty is given to perform this Cantata and to insert the words in any programme without further permission.

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs. J. W.

THE COUNCIL SCHOOL HYMN BOOK

A COLLECTION OF HYMNS, WITH PRAYERS, FOR USE IN COUNCIL SCHOOLS

COMPILED TO MEET THE PARTICULAR NEEDS OF THE NEW EDUCATION
AUTHORITIES ESTABLISHED BY THE ACT OF 1902.

PRICES.

- a. Words and Tunes with complete Accompaniment, the usual hymnal form, price 2s. 6d.
- b. The Words with the Melody only (staff and tonic sol-fa notations combined), for the use of the children, price 1s.
- c. Words only (limp cloth), 6d.

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE MUSIC EDITION.

The music of the Council School Hymn Book has been selected for its melodic interest and general suitability to children's voices. These essentials have been kept steadily in view as regards the new tunes composed expressly for the book, wherein many well-established favourites find a place. It will be observed that some of the tunes appear in lower keys than usual in order that young voices may not be unduly strained.

Every care has been taken to make the music of the book acceptable to teachers as well as children, in the hope that daily hymn-singing may become a specially enjoyable feature of school life.

The Hymns chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

PRESS NOTICES.

SCHOOL GUARDIAN.

We are agreeably surprised with this book, which from its title would seem to us to profess to be an undenominational hymn-book, but several hymns which we expected to find excluded from such a hymn-book are included. We only hope that its excellence will not prejudice it in the eyes of those who want to wear down the teaching in Council Schools to the low level of the world.

CHRISTIAN WORLD.

Outwardly unpretentious, "The Council School Hymn Book" will be eagerly scanned by those who know how important it is to preserve sanity and wholesomeness in hymns that are often sung by children. Put briefly, the aim of the editors has been to avoid sectarianism and doggerel; and they have succeeded so well as to prompt the wish that this book could displace those in use at the average Sunday school.

THE BOOKSELLER.

We do not think that a better hymnal for use in public elementary schools than the present could be wished or hoped for. The editors, it is sufficiently clear, were bound in such a publication to exclude strictly denominational hymns, and to select those only which express the central truths of religion. This they have consistently done throughout, and have at the same time admirably suited the varied collection to the capacities of the young. Such classics as "The spacious firmament on high" (Addison), "Hark! the herald angels sing" (C. Wesley), "Let us with a glad mind" (Milton), and other more modern hymns, of which the inclusion has been permitted by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, the Rev. J. Page Hopps, and Miss Betham-Edwards, among other writers; and the prayers at the end of the collection (and chosen on the same principle) for the opening and closing of school, and for certain special occasions, will be found well adapted to their object.

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

The contents have been selected by the standard of their religious truth and suitability to the mental capacity of children. At the end are forms of Prayer for the opening and closing of school, &c.

ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

A handy compilation for elementary schools, containing a great many familiar pieces by writers of various faith—Anglican, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Congregational, Quaker, and Unitarian.

BRISTOL TIMES AND MIRROR.

"The Council School Hymn Book" contains well and widely-chosen hymns, which express the central truths of religion, and are within the comprehension, and suited to the capacities, of children. At the end are prayers for the opening and closing of school, which have been selected on the same principle as the hymns. The collection is an admirable one, and deserves to be generally adopted.

THE SCOTSMAN.

A useful little compilation for elementary schools. It is handy, well edited, and well printed, and has no particular denominational tendency.

WESTERN MORNING NEWS.

Whoever were the compilers of this book, they have discharged their task very well. The 150 hymns selected express the central truths of the Christian Faith, and with one or two exceptions are just suited to the comprehension of the children for whom the selection is intended. As should be, catholicity is the note of the book; cheek by jowl we find John Bunyan and John Keble; Walsam How and J. Montgomery; T. Kelly and F. W. Faber; J. Page Hopps and R. S. Hawker; C. Wesley and J. M. Neale; Bishop Wordsworth and John Milton; Baring-Gould and Isaac Watts. How's Diamond Jubilee Hymn, "O King of kings" appropriately finds its place, and perhaps Kipling's "Recessional" might have been included also. The short prayers at the end of the book are drawn up on the same broad principle as the hymns, and some special ones are added for "Our Country," "before and after holiday," for times of "dangerous sickness," and for those connected with the school who are in "trouble or sorrow." Altogether the compilation is a model of what such a book should be, and it richly deserves the widest use in the Council schools of the land.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A feature of the concert of more than local interest was the production of a new work by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke—"Byron," a poem for chorus and orchestra. The choral portion may be omitted, but it has an obvious practical use in recommending the work to the attention of Festivals and Choral Societies. The choral portion is indeed vocal and effective, and contains some fine climaxes. There is distinction in the themes, and they are woven into a beautiful texture, glowing with colour. The climaxes are finely wrought. The choral portion is exceedingly tender and expressive.

LEEDS MERCURY.

Mr. Holbrooke's contribution to the recent Leeds Festival showed that in him we have a young composer of the highest promise, and his later work "Byron" emphasises the fact. The orchestral treatment forms the most happy feature. There are some broad choral effects, with poignant chords, that make for the end desired. The work has idea and interest, and it was performed under the composer's direction in a way that served to warmly recommend it. Needless to add, it was well received, and the composer-conductor warmly recalled.

PAULI MALI GAZETTE.

Leeds has again gone forth to honour a new work by the young composer Joseph Holbrooke, entitled "Byron," and performed by the Choral Union, the whole having been done under the conductorship of the composer. The success of the work was great; and we are not in the least surprised, because Mr. Holbrooke is assuredly a musician who has come to make a great name in modern English music. . . . Our belief is great in Mr. Joseph Holbrooke.

MUSICAL WORLD.

We have examined the vocal score of his "Byron" poem, and are delighted with it. The colouring, always good, is subservient to the idée fixe of the words by Keats. The chorus is most judiciously written, for "Byron" breathes the presence of a poet as well as a musician.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Great interest was attached to the concert which was given in the Town Hall on December 7, by the first performance of a new work by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke—"Byron." The orchestration has many beautiful themes, which are interwoven with a masterly mind, and form a texture at once noble and interesting. The choral portion is particularly dainty and tender, and was sung with a fine grandeur of tone. Mr. Holbrooke must have been delighted with the cordial reception it received, especially from the choir, &c.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

INTRODUCTION AND ALLEGRO FOR STRINGS (QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY EDWARD ELGAR.
(Op. 47.)

Full Score, 12s.; Quartet Parts, 4s.; Orchestral Parts, 7s.
Pianoforte Duet Arrangement, 4s.

THE TIMES.

The alteration of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenacity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naïve little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of exuberance as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

RICHARD WAGNER.

Piano-forte Solo, 2s.

"Every musician knows that the Prelude to Act III. of 'Tannhäuser,' called 'Tannhäuser's Pilgrimage,' as played in the opera and at concerts is not identical with that originally composed. . . .

"By the application of his blue pencil Wagner reduced a movement of 155 bars to one of 92 bars. The cancelled portions included so much matter dealing in the most powerful manner with the terrible climax to the pilgrimage—viz., the curse pronounced upon Tannhäuser by the Pope—an event scarcely hinted at in the later version, that we are justified in looking upon the composer's first conception of the Prelude as an entirely different piece and a much more faithful epitome of 'Tannhäuser's Pilgrimage.' . . .

"Wagner did not make the change because he was displeased with the music qui music, but because he feared that his audience might fail to appreciate the significance of certain 'recitative-like orchestral phrases' descriptive of occurrences which are only referred to subsequently—i.e., in the course of Tannhäuser's narrative. Perhaps another reason was that he did not think it wise to tax his hearers' patience by introducing an orchestral piece of 155 bars, in slow time throughout (Andante assai lento, crotchet = 50), so late in the course of the opera. Now that every Wagnerian knows his 'Tannhäuser' by heart, there should be no reason why the original version of this Prelude should not prove a most interesting addition to the répertoire of orchestral concerts. It seems a much more impressive and suggestive piece than the shortened version, and, moreover, it will be one of the very few remaining Wagner 'novelties' that we are ever likely to hear!"—From an article, "A Wagner Novelty," by A. J. J., in THE MUSICAL TIMES, October, 1898.

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND,

D.Mus., Oxon.

This book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F.R.C.O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to provide the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

A SONG OF EDEN

FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS TAKEN FROM "PARADISE LOST"

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price One Shilling.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The music is of high merit, and marks another advance on the part of a composer whom the most supercilious cannot now afford to pass over as negligible. . . . It seems characteristic of this composer to write good, honest, utterly intelligible music, and he has done so here, not even at times shrinking from simplicity, as knowing that simple utterance is always the best when dealing with subjects which are in their fulness inexpressible. But with all his reticence Dr. Brewer has not failed to write music which, while clear, interesting, and effective, is also in accord with the spirit of the text to which, if it do not add strength, it gives artistic charm in no mean degree.

STANDARD.

It is a melodious setting for chorus and orchestra of some words taken from 'Paradise Lost.' The orchestral part has a none too common quality in works of the kind, in that it shows a sense of colour. If it is not a large work, it is distinctive, and fulfilled its purpose admirably.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Dr. Brewer in this score scarcely cares to search out anything of a highly complex character, quite rightly choosing, in a work necessarily brief, choral harmonies of a recognised value, in his expression of his high theme. . . . The work ends with a natural development out of the musical material that has gone before, and it will remain as an excellent example of its kind, in which the composer while not sinking his personality, nevertheless realises that he naturally "owes a cock to" convention.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Not only are the voices sympathetically and effectively treated, as has always been the case with Dr. Brewer's music, but the orchestra is handled with much more freedom than hitherto, and in many passages an excellent colouring is attained. . . . Throughout the work there is abundant evidence of Dr. Brewer's power to produce pleasant and euphonious music, while there are many touches which add to pleasantness, distinction and character.

ATHENÆUM.

The music is well written and well scored, and, owing to its comparative simplicity, will no doubt be of general use.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL.

It opens with a leading theme in chords, the tenors and basses proclaiming "Now, Heaven in all her glory" the altos joining on the words "Earth in her rich attire." The orchestra then gives out a new theme, immediately followed by an impressive unaccompanied chorus a capella in seven parts to the words "These are Thy glorious works." Of importance is the section that follows, an orchestral interlude of fifty-two bars based on the leading themes employed in the work. In the choral number that follows the composer introduces another striking theme, of which great use is made hereafter. Yet another theme makes its appearance in the Andante in D flat on the words "Fairest of stars, last in the train of night," the composer here making use of the "Star" theme from his oratorio "The Holy Innocents." The constant changes of tempi give rise to variety of treatment of both the choral and orchestral parts, and the composer seems to have created a work full of colour and impressiveness that is likely to be favourably received by both performers and audience.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE AND EXPRESS.

Dr. Brewer's work occupies about a quarter of an hour. It is scored with modern fulness, and in style displays the happy medium between the grand, solid church style and the newer and more emotional manner.

GLOUCESTER JOURNAL.

With each work from his pen there is a greater mastery and command of musical resources. The effect produced upon the hearer by the "Song of Eden" is that of a work thoroughly well thought out, wisely planned, and skilfully worked out.

GLASGOW HERALD.

A composition of lofty aim and appropriate beauty and force.

THE REFEREE.

A reverent and scholarly setting of passages derived from Milton's "Paradise Lost." To take such a text is to measure oneself with a giant mind, and if the composer has but skimmed the surface meaning of the lines, he at least may be credited with courage and loftiness of aim. Moreover, he has not striven to make his abilities appear greater than they are. He has written honestly, surely, earnestly, and skilfully, and his production is worthy of esteem and a place amidst the best modern music of the Church.

LLOYD'S WEEKLY NEWSPAPER.

Dr. Brewer has found in "Paradise Lost" the material for inspiring "A Song of Eden." This composition is brief in character, requiring only fourteen minutes for performance.

HYMN OF FAITH CANTATA

FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS ARRANGED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURES BY

EDWARD ELGAR

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

IVOR ATKINS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

THE TIMES.

Mr. Atkins has done his work well, and shows his wide experience among the chorus, while his writing for the orchestra is strikingly free from modern extravagances, and he has an invaluable sense of quiet dignity.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Some passages are of special charm and significance, especially that in which the chorus sing without accompaniment the familiar text, "Faith, the substance of things hoped for," &c. There is neither space nor time for details, and I sum up in saying that Mr. Atkins may take courage from the character of his latest venture and go on to higher things.

STANDARD.

This represents, so far, Mr. Atkins's largest work, and marks a great advance on his previous efforts. The work is worthy of high praise, as an earnest and expressive composition; and in the orchestral part Mr. Atkins reveals a true feeling for tone-colour and variety, which stamps the work as far away from the ordinary and a welcome departure from the usual cathedral service type of music.

MORNING POST.

The hymn extols Faith, and the composer's treatment of the words is scholarly, yet not dry. The music, with its ecclesiastical subject-matter, shows modern influence and here and there that of Elgar, yet not so as to suggest direct imitation. The work, commendably short, promises well for Mr. Atkins's future as a composer.

DAILY NEWS.

Mr. Atkins has evidently been influenced by the music of his librettist, and, as far as the orchestra is concerned, by the modern school in general. Strangely enough, the most striking music of the new work is to be heard in the orchestra, which, by many picturesque touches of appropriate instrumentation, illustrates the text with the happiest effect.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

In this work Mr. Atkins has shown his capacity for musical development quite extraordinarily. I find it to be a great improvement upon the excellently good work which he has before given to us. Not only does his thought rise to a higher range than heretofore, but there is a far greater grip of his musical material, and a greater condensation of method. The chorus, "In the Name of our God," and the solo immediately preceding it, "Rejoice," show a grip and a tendency towards the intellectual side of music which are very satisfactory; his melody is fluent, but never inclined to run to seed or to become blank, and there is many a touch of real beauty in his orchestral treatment, where all of it is musicianly.

ATHENÆUM.

Mr. Atkins shows skill in musicianship, yet it never becomes unduly prominent. . . . The Hymn under notice is excellent of its kind, and festival authorities will no doubt soon give its author an opportunity of displaying his powers on a larger scale.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The composer has produced an exceedingly well proportioned work. In sustained dignity of utterance, the music reaches a high level. It has real solemnity without any dryness, and the sensuous beauty frequently attained in the colouring has no touch of either tawdriness or vulgarity. There is something of Sir Hubert Parry's influence perceptible in the strong texture and fine construction of the music, together with a richness of colour which is outside the range of Sir Hubert's simple palette. . . . The music is eminently natural, and two unaccompanied passages for the chorus achieve a genuinely impressive effect by very simple means. And there is not a bar that can be styled sentimental, pretty, or sensational, which is negative praise of a high order.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

The musical treatment is in the modern continuous manner, without breaks, the alternating choral and solo sections forming one organic whole. Representative themes are employed, and with no little skill. One standing for Faith is the most important. A motive given at the outset by the brass gives an ecclesiastical stamp to the work, and use is made of part of the ancient hymn tune, "Vexilla Regis." But Mr. Atkins has the gift of melody; if not as yet of a very individual type; and there is lyric charm in the solo, "Unless the Lord had been my help," which is gracefully scored. The orchestration throughout is very good, and the voice-writing is effective.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE.

Of the cantata as an art work I have no hesitation in saying in terms almost superlative. Mr. Atkins is at once solid and interesting. There is not a dull moment; everywhere the music has a contagious warmth. One has the impression that all was given off at white heat. There is nothing laborious, nothing of the dry-as-dust style traditionally attributed to cathedral organists, nothing of the universally despised Kapellmeister-musik. On the contrary, Mr. Atkins, while in warp and woof having some kinship with Bach, is in colour and feeling as modern as Strauss. The solo, with its exquisite accompaniment, was especially beautiful, even where all was beautiful. Mr. Atkins has made his mark, and if he continues to progress at the same rate will, before many years, attain the highest rank.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

"Mr. W. H. Reed, a violinist-member of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, who met with an extremely hearty reception after the first performance of his 'Suite Venitienne' at the Promenade Concerts last night, quite defies our criticism by his fearlessness in writing tunes and by the cheerfulness and brightness of his work. For Mr. Reed and his music there is no need of the cheap philosophy which does duty so easily for the 'poetical basis' of so much of our young composers' music. He writes as he feels, evidently; and he writes not only well but sincerely. Small wonder, then, that his suite captivated a very large audience, which recalled him again and again. His suite is not strikingly original. But it is fresh and cheery, unpretentious and clear, and, above all, healthy-minded. . . . In the presentment of his ideas Mr. Reed shows almost a master-hand—largely owing, no doubt, to the fact of his being a member of an orchestra; and in as great a degree as is possible his scoring, admirable and rich and full as it is, compensates for a lack of distinct originality in his thematic material. . . . In any case, however, his suite deserves high rank among the novelties that have been produced this season at these admirable concerts."—The Times.

MISS AGNES WALKER "possesses a fine soprano voice, and is a most artistic singer."—Gentlewoman's Court Review. 147, Brockley Road, London, S.E.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS (Tenor).
Barnstaple Festival Society's performance of Gounod's "Faust,"
May 3, 1905.

"Mr. Samuel Masters had a good deal to do, and he did it in a manner that won golden opinions. His interpretation of the Cavatina, "All Hail," was exquisite."—North Devon Journal.

"Mr. Samuel Masters made a sympathetic hero, the purity of his true tenor quality, conspicuous on high notes, combined with artistic perception and accurate sense of intonation, being special features of his performance."—Western Morning News.

"As Faust Mr. Samuel Masters was the passionate lover to the life, and his singing was a triumph from start to finish."—Devon and Exeter Gazette.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS.
Performance of "King Olaf," Colchester Musical Society,
May 4, 1905.

"Mr. Samuel Masters was in fine form, and the lengthy, but by no means monotonous solo, "And King Olaf heard the cry," was sufficient to display a powerful, yet well-controlled, voice, the B flat being splendidly taken. His other solos were equally good, and his duet with the Hon.
Mrs. Clifford evoked quite a storm of applause."—East Anglian Daily Times.

"Mr. Samuel Masters was very successful in his solo work, 'And King Olaf heard the cry' being a distinctly artistic effort, the top B flat being remarkably well taken. All his singing was vigorous and in perfect tune."—Essex Telegraph.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS.
Performance of "Creation," Northampton Musical Society.
"Mr. Samuel Masters excelled in the tenor part. His recitative work exemplified the superb descriptive power of this feature of the oratorio. His portion of the concerted numbers was sung with infinite good judgment and charming tunefulness, and his solos were rendered with equal facility and expressiveness."

Address, 61, Alexandra Road, Wimbledon, S.W.

MR. HENRY BEAUMONT
(THE GREAT ENGLISH TENOR).

For Oratorio.

The King, Aug. 19, 1905, says: "Mr. Henry Beaumont is an oratorio tenor of eminence, and in this direction few English tenors are so widely popular as he, or so much in demand. His voice is wonderfully reminiscent of Sims Reeves; there is the same timbre, the same expression."

The Buxton Advertiser, Aug. 30, 1905, says: "Mr. Beaumont is one of the best, if not the best of oratorio tenors, and his voice reminds one very forcibly of the late Mr. Sims Reeves. He received the heartiest of welcomes, and sang with all that verve we are accustomed to in him."
The Derbyshire Advertiser and Journal, Dec. 30, 1904, says: "To say that Mr. Henry Beaumont is a tenor recalling with credit to himself
Mr. Sims Reeves is a high compliment, but it is not undeserved."

A Most Extensive Répertoire.

MR. WILLIAM WILD

(TENOR).

(Pupil of Andrew Black, Esq.)

Of the "Sir Charles and Lady Hallé South African Concert Tour," 1895; London (Queen's Hall) Concerts, and principal Provincial Choral Societies; Manchester (Gentlemen's) and Richter Concerts. Also of the Constantinople Choral Society's Concerts.

"The impersonation of Rinaldo has been sustained by Mr. William Wild, whom the Choral Society of Constantinople had especially engaged from England for this production. He possesses a fine tenor voice of sufficient strength, and above all, uses it very artistically."—Stamboul Journal, March 19, 1904.

"Mr. William Wild, who has been specially engaged by the Constantinople Choral Society, is the possessor of a fine tenor voice of a very sweet quality, and entirely under command. His rendering of the important tenor solos was brilliant, while his artistic merits are enhanced by his modest demeanour."—Levant Herald and Eastern Express, March 21, 1904.

"The tenor, Mr. William Wild, who had come especially from London to sing 'The Crusaders,' proved a great acquisition to the Society. His voice is a pure and very sweet tenor, over which he has complete control. In his solo work and in connection with the chorus, he showed himself a true artist, and it is to be regretted that engagements in England prevented him from giving the public more opportunities of hearing him in this city."—Le Moniteur Oriental, March 26, 1904.

For Terms, Vacant Dates, &c., address—

Grosvenor Square, Stalybridge, Nr. Manchester.

MR. ALFRED HAIGH

(BARITONE).

For vacant dates, address, The Cathedral, Ely.

MR. GRAHAM SMART

(BARITONE. Westminster Abbey.)

TEWKESBURY FESTIVAL—"ELIJAH."

SEPTEMBER 21, 1905.

The Worcestershire Echo, September 22, 1905.

The feature of the performance was the singing of the part of the Prophet by Mr. Graham Smart, who showed a very fine conception of the same. He used his beautiful voice with fine effect, his greatest success being in the recitatives, notably "It is enough," and his last solo, "For the mountains shall depart," which is so often "scamped." Mr. Smart, who has certainly a bright future, has been heard twice at Worcester in connection with the Musical Society's concerts.

9, Wymering Mansions, Elgin Avenue, W.

MR. ARTHUR WALENN

(BARITONE).

Now Booking for Next Season.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S "EVERYMAN."

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, RICHMOND, May 2. Of this Concert—The Herald says: "Mr. Arthur Walenn's fine baritone voice was heard to much advantage in the exacting solos for Everyman."

The Surrey Comet: "Mr. Arthur Walenn gave to the character of Everyman the deepest expression and impressiveness, at the same time avoiding that exaggeration which would tempt a singer of less culture."

The Richmond Times: "Of the soloists, the place of honour must certainly be given to Mr. Arthur Walenn, who, as Everyman, had so much to do. It was always difficult, requiring great variety and expression, to ward off a suspicion of dullness that might otherwise have crept in. In Mr. Walenn's hands nothing of the kind happened; he has a bass voice of very pleasing quality, well under control, and was evidently thoroughly acquainted not only with the music itself, but with the spirit of the work."

South Wales Daily Telegraph: "HIAWATHA" (conducted by the composer).—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was heard to real advantage. The first part was full of poetry and imagination, and in the 'Vision' ('True is all Iago tells us') he sang with a dramatic intensity which was little short of a revelation."

Tunbridge Wells Courier: "ELIJAH."—"Mr. Arthur Walenn afforded us an intellectual and musical treat in his embodiment of the idea of the Prophet Elijah. To enact a character of this kind, an arduous duty is imposed on the singer, who not only requires a voice of good power and range, but an artistic insight into the nature of the subject to be dealt with is imperative. That Mr. Walenn fulfilled these attributes is undeniable, and nothing but praise can be accorded him for a really superb delineation of the part."

Liverpool Daily Post: The "MESSIAH" at Liverpool.—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was very successful in sustaining the bass solos, both voice and vocalization being excellent."

20, Ashworth Mansions, Elgin Avenue, London, W.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

MR. HENRY SUNMAN

(BASS).

Licentiate (Artist) of the Royal Academy of Music, of the Gloucester, Cheltenham, and Tewkesbury Festivals, &c.

"ELIJAH" (ARINGTON).—"Mr. Henry Sunman sang with all his old vigour and artistic finish in the title-role, which made that impression it always will under the treatment of an able exponent. The part, with its somewhat high range, suited Mr. Sunman's resonant voice admirably. In the more dramatic passages, especially in those preceding the Baal choruses, as also in a quieter but equally dramatic strain before the noble chorus 'Thanks be to God,' he achieved a brilliant success, and worked up the situation to a climax in realistic style. He declaimed the recitatives very powerfully, and we need only cite the best-known solos, 'Is not His Word like a fire?' and 'It is enough,' as instances of Mr. Sunman's ability to interpret both moods of the Prophet as expressed in music."—Abingdon Herald, Feb. 11, 1905.

SOUTH LONDON MUSICAL CLUB.

(Founded January 27, 1875.)

PRIZE COMPETITION.

The Committee OFFERS £10 10s. for the best ORIGINAL UNACCOMPANIED GLEE for A.T.T.B.B., forwarded to the President, South London Musical Club, Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell, S.E., not later than Monday, January 1, 1906.

The Composition, which must be the bona fide work of the competitor, must not be a mere Part-song or harmonised Melody. The words must be non-copyright, and the name of their author and the date and place of publication of the book in which they are to be found must be stated. Two vocal scores, with one clearly-written set of voice parts, distinguished only by a motto and accompanied by a sealed envelope bearing the same motto and containing the name and address of the composer, must be forwarded.

The prize will be awarded by a Committee appointed by the Club, with Sir Frederick Bridge, Mus. Doc., as final adjudicator, but will be withheld if the works forwarded are not of sufficient merit.

The Prize Composition will become the property of and be published by the Club, and the result of the Competition will be announced in The Musical Times.

The manuscript of unsuccessful Compositions, which will, of course, be treated confidentially, will be returned to the composer.
Musical Director: Mr. J. P. ATTWATER, Mus. B., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.
Hon. Secretary: Mr. E. G. RICHARDSON, 43, Cedars Rd., Beckenham.

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.

'The Talbot in Sidbury at that old City [Worcester] was our Inne, where we met a good She-Informer, a briske, and merry Hostesse. In this ancient City wee found planted 11. Churches, besides the Cathedral. . . . 20. Singing Men, 10. Singing Boyes [in the cathedral choir]. After we had heard their voyces, and Organs, at Prayer, view'd their stately, rich glaz'd Cloyster, the Bishops Pallace, and the other Church buildings, there scituated . . . we then march'd into the Towne.' (From a diary written in 1634.)

Worcester is par excellence an 'interior' cathedral. But the privileged visitor who beholds the fair fane from a Canon's garden is rewarded with a view that is quite picturesque. The ground round about here—the south side of the cathedral—is rich in old-world interest. Entering what is now College Green by the Edgar Tower, we are on the site of the old Benedictine monastery. 'Edgar' is a modern designation as applied to this tower, and was probably bestowed in honour of King Edgar, who in his day had been a great patron of the monastery. Some documentary evidence exists which goes to prove that the tower was built by King John; but probably no part of the structure as it now stands is older than the beginning of the 14th century, though it undoubtedly replaced an older gateway which formed the main entrance to the monastery. In a room in the Edgar Tower are preserved the diocesan records, among them being the bond before marriage entered into by Fulk Sandells and John Rychardson for the marriage licence of 'William Shagspere and Anne Hathwey of Stratford 28 Nov. 25 Eliz.' The refectory (A.D. 1372) is a magnificent apartment, now used as 'big school' of the King's School founded by Henry VIII.; it is probably the finest schoolroom in England. On the other side of the pleasant Green—the russet brown of its stately trees looking beautifully rich in the subdued light of the autumn sun—stood the castle of Worcester, the strong fortress of the 'faithful city'; while on the banks of the silvery Severn, which pursues its silent course at the west end of the cathedral, are the ruins of the monks' infirmary and dormitories.

A hasty portion of prescribed sleep,
Obedient slumbers—that can wake and weep,
And sing and sigh, and work, and sleep again,
Still rolling a round sphere of still returning pain.

To return to the aforesaid Canon's garden, one of those calm retreats that arouse envy in the breast of a busy London man. Here is the lovely old ruin of the noble Guesten Hall, erected in 1320, in which distinguished visitors were entertained by the monks with almost royal hospitality (see p. 710.) The long tracery windows, now ivy-covered, form a most pleasing prospect, so pleasing indeed that an American young lady once remarked to the fortunate Canon here 'in residence' that she thought it was very cute of him to have planted such a beautiful ruin in his garden! In the Slype, forming the passage-way from this garden to the cloisters, are some ancient pillars, part of the former Saxon church. By reason of their red-sandstone construction and the highly decorated nature of their vaulted roof, the cloisters at Worcester possess a warmth of colour and richness of effect that entitle them to high rank. The chapter-house, entered from the east cloister, is a happy blending of strength and beauty, its lower part being Norman and the upper part Perpendicular, early 15th century. Its circular form and central pillar, from which spring graceful vaulting ribs, is believed to be the earliest specimen in England of this design, other examples of which are to be found at Westminster, Salisbury, and Lincoln.

THE ARMS OF THE CATHEDRAL.
FROM A BOOK-PLATE IN THE LIBRARY.

In what respect, or respects, does Worcester justify the designation 'an interior cathedral'? This single question invites many answers. Begun by Bishop Wulstan in the year 1084, and completed about 300 years later, it is all glorious within. Great height in proportion to width, the same roof elevation throughout the entire building, the double transepts, the Early English Choir—these are some of the manifest beauties of this House of the Lord. The charm of variety is here in rich abundance, and yet one feels no harshness in the harmonisation of the whole design. In the nave the two westernmost bays are Transitional Norman, while the remainder of those on the south side are Early Perpendicular, and those of the north, Decorated. This difference in dates is strikingly shown in the capitals of the pillars—the north side being much richer in ornamentation. Here is found one of the earliest examples of the subdivided vaulting shaft. The Choir (completed in 1218), which is reached by a flight of steps from the nave, is one of the most beautiful of any cathedral. Not only is it one of the earliest buildings erected in the Early English style, but it is one of the most perfect. The large shafts of dark Purbeck marble give added charm to the octangular columns with their exquisite foliated capitals. Other interesting features of the choir are the eastern transepts which, not having coloured windows, give just the needful lightness to this part of the building, and then there are the 14th century misereres—of oak, but as hard as iron—of which a specimen illustration is given below.

No less beautiful is the Ladye Chapel, which is reached from the choir by a flight of steps, contains a representation of the Creation, in which there is the figure of a red lobster!—the monuments are specially interesting. Chief among them is that of King John, who was buried in the cathedral in the year 1216. His regal recumbent monument—the oldest royal effigy extant in England—is now located in front of the altar steps. In 1797 the tomb was opened and the body exposed to the gaze of 'some thousands of spectators,' among them being the mother-in-law of the late Dr. William Done, organist of the cathedral 1844-95, therefore this lady had the rare privilege of beholding King John's red beard. Of special interest is the beautiful chantry erected in 1504 by Henry VII. in memory of his son, Prince Arthur, born in 1486 and married to Katharine of Arragon.

A MISERERE IN THE CHOIR.

whereby its elevation corresponds with that of the nave. Even more refined and delicate in treatment than the choir, its most striking feature consists of the wall-arcading which extends along the entire length of the eastern transepts and the Ladye Chapel. An example of the artistry of those 13th century sculptors is given on p. 707. It represents the dead bursting open their coffins. The most beautiful specimen of this work is a chaste representation of the Crucifixion, in which the sacred figure on the cross and the figures of the two women who stand one on each side, are most refined and pathetic in their treatment. The Norman apsidal crypt, one of only four in England, stands to-day practically in the same form as when Wulstan built it in 1084—nave and aisles complete, but the curved aisle at the east end is walled up. The Holy Communion is annually celebrated in this most beautiful crypt on St. Wulstan's Day in memory of the saint and other benefactors of 'The Cathedral Church of Christ and the Blessed Mary the Virgin of Worcester.'

If the stained glass at Worcester is not of supreme importance—the great west window

Here repose the remains of the prince, while around his tomb is the following inscription :

Here lyeth buried PRINCE ARTHUR, the first begotten sonne of the right renowned King Henry the Seventh, which Noble Prince departed out of this transitory life, at the Castle of Ludlow, in the seventeenth yeere of his father's rayne, and in the yeere of our Lorde God, one thousand five hundred and two.

This chantry is an exquisite specimen of Tudor work—one of the best examples, in fact. The figures at the east end have been much damaged either by Cromwellians, or more probably, as Green surmises, at an earlier date (1549), in obedience to an Act of Edward VI. enjoining 'that all images of stone, timber, alabaster, or earth be removed'; this chantry, however, still retains much of its former beauty and delicate workmanship.

The wife of Izaak Walton, a half-sister of Bishop Ken, is buried on the left side of the altar in the Ladye Chapel. The inscription on her monument —said to have been written by the immortal angler—reads:

Ex terris

M. S.

Here lyeth buried, soe much as could dye, of ANNE the wife of IZAACK WALTON

who was,

A woman of remarkable prudence:
and of the Primitive Piety: her great and generall knowledge, being adorn'd with such true Humility, and blest with soe much Christian meeknesse, as made her worthy of a more memorable Monument.

She dyed (Alas that she is dead)
the 17th of Aprill 1662 Aged 52

Study to be like her.

Another inscription may be quoted—that of Bishop Bullingham, a native of Worcester and 'a painful preacher,' who held the See in the 16th century:

N. 1576. B.

NICOLAYS. EPVS WIGORN.

Here borne here Bishop buried here
A Bullingham by name and stocke
A man wise married in Godes feare
Chief Pastor late of Lincoln flocke
Whom Oxford trayned up in yowthe
Whom Cambridghe Doctor did create
A painful Preacher of the Truthe
He chaynged this Lief for happie State
18 Aprilis 1576.

The See of Worcester, founded A.D. 680, can boast of some distinguished prelates, e.g.,

One thousand years old! That is the age of Worcester Cathedral Library. The guide-books state that Lady Godiva founded the library, but this is a myth which, like the story of her famous ride through Coventry, archaeologists have destroyed. Lady Godiva did however present a 'bibliotheca,' in two parts—in other words, a Bible—to the Worcester library. On the shelves are books which are as old as Lady Godiva or the Norman Conquest, as, for example, a much-mutilated Anglo-Saxon missal made for use at Winchester. As Mr. Floyer, the learned ex-librarian says:

It begins with a mass for fair weather on S. Swithin's Day, which seems very appropriate, for the legend says that when the clergy of Winchester attempted to remove the body of S. Swithin, there came on such a storm of rain as effectually stopped the procession, and it continued for forty days. Even in these times it is uncertain to many minds whether S. Swithin has forgiven the insult to his disturbed bones. Perhaps the book was brought to Worcester by Living or Aldred, both of whom came from Winchester to be Bishops of Worcester in the 11th century.

A 12th century MS. is The Commentary of Vacurius on Justinian, the only copy of this work in England. The unique Worcester Service Book (13th century) is a combination of Processions, Antiphoner, Kalendar, Psalter, Litany, Hymnal, Collects, Sanctorale, Dirige, and Missale, according to Worcester use. The monks of old were very fond of writing upon the fly-leaves of their venerable tomes, the subject of their remarks being very varied. In one there is an Anglo-Saxon charm against fever; in another a preventative against drunkenness, set forth in old English of the 13th century:

Item gif to hȳ yt (hym that) ys dronkelew (sic) ye ashy of (wormwood?) ybrend and he shall nevr be dronke experience seyth yt ys certeyn!

In regard to music, the library contains four of the ten separate voice-parts of Barnard's 'First Booke of Selected Church Music' and a complete set of the 'Musica deo Sacra' of Thomas Tomkins, to which further reference will subsequently be made. From a paper read by the Rev. J. K. Floyer before the Society of Antiquaries we extract the following interesting description of Worcester bindings :

The typical Worcester book is worth describing. It is essentially a home production. The sheep of the farms provided the cover, the oak trees furnished the boards. The quires of vellum are sewn with hemp on ligatures of hide, the ends of which are taken down through holes in the oak boards, brought up again an inch further on, and finished in a neat knot. The ligature is let into the board on both sides so as to provide a smooth surface for the covering skin. A stiffening of plaited hemp is also worked on the upper and lower edges of the back. The whole is then covered with white sheepskin. A strap is riveted with an iron stud on to one front edge of the cover, carrying a brass clasp, which fits on to an iron pin set in a small brass plate about the middle of the reverse cover. Some of these clasps are preserved, and are often chased with some care. A vellum label is then stuck outside the last cover with the title of the book The whole production is most workmanlike and durable, as is proved by the fact that some of these bindings are still supple and in good order after four or five hundred years of wear, dust, neglect, and other destructive influences.*

* For further information concerning Worcester Cathedral Library the following erudite papers may be consulted with advantage—they are all by the Rev. J. K. Floyer, M.A., F.S.A., formerly librarian. 'A thousand years of a cathedral library: being an account of the formation of the Worcester Cathedral Library' (Reliquary and Illustrated Archaeologist, January, 1901); 'The early monastic writers of Worcester' (Worcester Diocesan Architectural and Archaeological Society, 1899); and 'The Mediaeval Library of the Benedictine Priory of St. Mary, in Worcester Cathedral' (Archæologia, 1902, p. 561).

The library is reached by ascending a flight of fifty steps from the westernmost corner of the north cloisters. It is a spacious room, built of red sandstone, and 121 feet long, and located above and occupying the entire length of the south side of the nave. At the end of the library there is a tiny recess having a small opening to the south transept. Here one can listen to the service, and catch the strains of the music as they rise upward to this lofty nook in the beautiful cathedral.

The bells form a peal of twelve in the key of D flat, with three extra half-tones, in addition to a sonorous clock-bell weighing $4\frac{1}{2}$ tons, 6 ft. 4 in. in diameter, and sounding B flat. The Westminster Chimes are struck on the bells and the tower contains a fine carillon—the latter, which plays every three hours throughout the day (from 9 A.M. to 6 P.M.), is provided with four barrels, each with seven tunes, and an additional one for special occasions.

In treating of matters more strictly connected with the service-music of Worcester's fair fame, reference must first be made to the Cathedral Choir School. There can be no question that the education of cathedral choristers is one which every cathedral body is called upon to face and to respond to as a solemn duty. In former days the Worcester choristers were town boys who went to the King's School for their education. But as these boys were necessarily withdrawn every day during school hours for their cathedral duties, they came to be regarded by the school authorities as a disturbing element in the daily routine and as 'casuals' on whom no particular trouble need be expended.

In 1881, as a remedy for the unsatisfactory state of things, the Rev. H. H. Woodward—one of the Minor Canons, who now holds the office of Precentor—proposed the establishment of a Choir School as a Preparatory School for the sons of gentlemen and professional men, and he offered to carry it through during the necessary transitional period until it should become self-supporting. The Dean (Lord Alwyne Compton and recently Bishop of Ely), Canon Butler (afterwards Dean of Lincoln), and Canon Knox Little gave their hearty approval and the scheme was sanctioned by the Chapter. Mr. Woodward was appointed Warden and Bursar, and Mr. C. B. Shuttleworth became classical and mathematical master, and both of these from the commencement have discharged their duties with rare skill and kindly zeal. A suitable house was found in College Green and dedicated to the use of the Choir School by Bishop Philpott on November 3, 1882.

What have been the results? Most satisfactory in every way. In education the boys have so successfully competed with other schools that up to the present time they have gained no fewer than seventeen entrance scholarships elsewhere. The distinctions won by old choristers who have passed through the School include four choral scholarships at Cambridge; a Jubilee Scholarship for pianoforte-playing at the Royal Academy of Music; while the degree of Mus. Doc. at Oxford has been taken by an ex-chorister. Among others, five are in Holy Orders, and two of these took Theological honours at Oxford and Cambridge. As the Precentor and Warden says: 'Another gain to the cathedral has been the care and reverence with which, since the establishment of the choir school, the daily services are rendered, a fact which has called forth the encomiums of four successive Bishops of Worcester.' There is a Guild for old choristers, and as showing their attachment to the school, the old boys have founded an annual prize for the benefit of the present occupants of the Cathedral Choir School. The holidays of the choristers are on a liberal scale—six weeks in summer, three weeks in January, and a fortnight after Easter. To see them at work, their daily practice, to hear of their excellent behaviour, and to visit their schoolroom (while work is going on), dormitories and dining-hall, gives one the impression that they are a very happy and contented set of boys. What would dear old Miss Hackett, the choristers' friend, have said to so well-equipped and admirable an adjunct to cathedral life?

The choristers, twenty in number, are vocally trained, and well trained, by the cathedral organist, Mr. Ivor Atkins, whose aim it is to make musicians of his little men. This is evident at the daily practice—held in the Chapter House from 8.30 to 9.30 a.m.—when the good tone, phrasing, and alertness of the boys are exemplified in such strains as Goss's 'O pray for the peace of Jerusalem,' a veritable gem in the rich diadem of English church music. Questions are asked on matters of intervals, &c., the answers thereto showing that these bright boys are keen upon their work, and that the practice-hour is one that passes most pleasantly. It is found that the time necessarily devoted to the daily practices and services does not handicap the boys in their scholastic career; on the contrary, the mental discipline of music is found to sharpen their intelligence, so to speak, with results that are highly satisfactory in their success at public schools after they have left the Choir School. Among the ten lay-clerks are Mr. J. A. Smith and Mr. W. Mann Dyson, who have pursued the even tenor of their ways—vocally and otherwise—at the cathedral for upwards of forty years.

To spend a week-end at Worcester is a pleasant experience, as it affords an opportunity of hearing the Sunday services in the cathedral. Criticism per se would of course be contrary to the worshipful spirit; but it may in truth be said that the music was most reverently rendered throughout the day. The evening service, held in the nave, is distinctly parochial in its simplicity, the canticles being sung to chants and the great congregation joining heartily in three hymns. For this service there is a highly-efficient voluntary choir—men and boys—of seventy voices. The boys of this choir take the places, at the daily Evensong and Sunday services, of the regular choristers when the latter are absent on their holidays; at those times the music at daily Matins is sung by the lay-clerks.

The earliest mention of an organ in the records of Worcester Cathedral is of the year 1448:

To master Daniell ye kep.
of organs, xiiij monks lofes.

This entry, which probably refers to the organist, shows that this and other officers received rations as well as money. In this instance the term 'monks lofes' distinguished the coarse from the best bread which the prior and guests enjoyed. Green, the historian of Worcester, gives the following information concerning the early organs belonging to the cathedral:

The chapel of St. Edmund, wherein was a pair of organs, and the chapel of St. George, in which was a great pair of organs, were pulled down by Dean Barlow, A.D. 1550. The great organ (supposed to have been in the choir) was taken down on the 30th August, 1551. In 1556 a pair of organs was set up on the north side of the choir. These, it may be supposed, remained till the civil wars in the next century, when it appears that the two fair pair of organs, which were found in the cathedral, were broken.

Early in the 17th century Prebendary Thornhill and two others 'buy themselves off from residence for a year by giving twenty nobles towards making the organs.' The corporation of the city, the bishop, and the dean each contributed £20, and there was a general subscription throughout the county. This new instrument, consisting of a great and chaire organ, was built in 1614 by Thomas Dallam, not long after his return from his voyage to the Grand Turk at Constantinople (see THE MUSICAL TIMES, October issue, p. 649). This organ—which cost the large sum in those days of £211—was placed on the screen which then separated the nave from the choir, a position occupied by the instrument for two-and-a-half centuries, until 1865, when the screen was removed and the cathedral thrown open from end to end. Habington, in his 'Survey of Worcester,' thus refers to Thomas Dallam's 'faire and excellent organ':

At the west end and highest ascent into the Quire is mounted aloft a most faire and excellent Organ adorned with imperial crownes, red roses, including the white flowre-de-luses, pomgranades, being all Royall badges. Towards the topp are towse stars with the one, W. Parry, Episcopus; with the other, A. Luke, Decanus; and written aboute the Organ, By the meditation and mediation of Thomas Tomkins, Organist heere vnto the Righte reverend Bishop and venerable Deane, who gave theire munificent guiftes and invited theire fryndes by the industry of the said Thomas Tomkins.

[Then follows a list of the subscribers.]

A.D. 1614.

'Additional accompaniments' appear to have been in vogue in the year 1619, as an item in the accounts reads:

Paid to Goodman Stanton the musitian for playinge on the cornetts in the quire xxs.

In 1642 a payment of 15s. 9d. was made for 'mending the great organ bellows, for candles, glue, leather, whipcord, &c.'; and in the same year there is a record of 'removing ye old organ from ye west end of ye church into our Ladye Chappell.'

The Dallam organ existed until 1644 when, as the result of a Cromwellian ordinance, 'the organs were taken down out of the cathedral church. Shortly after the Restoration, Thomas Harris, the rival of Father Smith, came upon the scene. (Rimbault inaccurately states that Smith built the Worcester organ.) In an agreement made with the Dean and Chapter (July 5, 1666,) Harris covenanted to 'set up in the choyre a double organ, consisting of great organ and chaire organ.' There is no need to quote the whole of this document, but the following extracts therefrom may prove interesting:

The great organ case to be designed after the manner of Windsor church before the wars, a double prospective, the great pipes on the north and south ranging with the middle columns of the stone arch, and so the next great declining toward the east continually till the smallest in the middle meet within 2 or 3 ft., resembling the diminution of pillars in a prospect, and rising by degrees to that end, &c.

In the chaire organ, one principal of metal in front, according to the design of Windsor before the wars, a cherub expanding its wings so as to returne down perpendicular, and that the great pipes shall be in the place of the first and second quills, on the north and south sides, and the rest proportionately less and less towards the cheeks of the cherub; one stopped diapason of wood, one open diapason, one 15th of metal, one two-and-20th (as they call it); the bellows, sound-boards, and all the timber and iron, as at Sarum and Gloucester, or wh. soever is the fairest, &c.

Harris received £400 in payment for this organ, in addition to £4 'for a soft stop in ye choir organ, and ye sum of £5 for mending and removing ye old organ.' His work gave so much satisfaction, however, that the Dean and Chapter gave him the sum of £24, 'above my due,' as he says:

in which I do acknowledge their great kindness and bounty, and I do hereby promise and oblige myself, in confirmation of what I have expressed, in my petition unto them, that I will constantly attend upon the said organ during my life and do all things touching the keeping of it in good order, at my own cost, without any charge to ye said dean and chapter.

Richard Davies, organist in 1674, was allowed '40s. for his paines in setting the Lesser organs in order in the body of the church.' Bernard ('Father') and Christian Smith seem to have done repairs, &c.—the latter was paid £3 'towards mending the organ at the lower end of the church'—as did Schwarbrook (or Swarbrick) later on. Here, as elsewhere, rats feasted on the organ, as a payment was made in 1701 to

THE ORGAN CONSOLE.

(Photograph by Mr. W. W. Harris, Worcester.)

That there were two organs in use is proved by an entry in the Chapter Books which reads thus:

April 5, 1715. That the little organ having not been used for some time past, and having been shamefully neglected when it was used, it is ordered that the salary of £3 per annum, which has been hitherto allowed for the playing upon it, be stopped.

Coming to more recent times, Messrs. Hill built an organ in 1842 which stood on the screen until its removal to the north side of the choir in 1865. The late Earl Dudley gave an additional organ (also built by Hill) in 1873, which was placed in the south transept. In 1896 these two organs were joined together in electric matrimony by Mr. Hope Jones, who also enlarged and rebuilt the instrument. It is now in three sections—one each on the north and south sides of the choir (as shown in the photograph on p. 709), and the third section is located in the south transept. The console stands immediately behind the stalls on the north side of the choir, the player facing the south side of the church. Here is the specification of the instrument as it is at the present time:

The Swell (in a brick box) is placed on the north side of the cathedral behind the choir stalls, and the Great, Choir, and part of the Pedal on the south side. The Tuba mirabilis, Solo Organ and main Pedal Organ are located at the end of the south-west transept.
The wind supply, which is practically inexhaustible, is obtained from a Patent Kinetic Blower, put in by the Kinetic Swanton Co., of Lincoln.
The Console, placed immediately behind the stalls in the north aisle of the choir, is connected with the various parts of the organ by means of a single flexible cable $\frac{1}{4}$ inches in diameter.

The roll of Worcester organists begins with the Mr. Daniell above referred to, who held office about the year 1448. Some well-known names in music follow—e.g., R. Greene, John Hampton (perchance an ancestor of the genial Warden of St. Michael's College, Tenbury), and Daniel Boyce (probably a forbear of Dr. Boyce). We may pass on, however, to Nathanaell Patrick, the composer of a fine service in G minor (wrongly attributed by Arnold and Rimbault to Richard Patrick), who was organist in the closing years of the 16th century—he died in 1594. An entry in the Stationers' Registers, dated October 22, 1597, is that of a publication, bearing the name of Thomas Este as publisher, entitled:

Songs of sundrye Natures, whereof somme ar Divine, some are Madrigalles, and the rest Psalmes and Hymnes in Latin composed for 5 and 6 voyces and One for 8 voyces, by Nathanaell Patrick sometyne Master of the Children of the Cathedral Church of Worcester, and organist of the same.

As the title 'Songs of sundrye Natures' had been used by Byrd, in a publication issued by him in 1589, it is probable that Patrick's book was never published: at all events, no copy is known to exist, and although the book was entered in the Stationers' Registers, it does not follow that it came into circulation. 'Perhaps some of our readers can trace the whereabouts of a copy of Nathanaell Patrick's 'Songs of sundrye Natures.'

One of the earliest first performers on the Dallam organ was Thomas Tomkins, a pupil of Byrd, and brother of John Tomkins, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral. A man of mark, Thomas Tomkins held the joint office of Gentleman and organist of the Chapel Royal concurrently with his Worcester appointment. In 1625 the sum of forty shillings was paid to him 'for composing of many songes against the coronation of Kinge Charles.'

Tomkins, who was buried at Martin Hussingtree, near Worcester, on June 9, 1656, is favourably known as a composer of madrigals and church music, and more especially as the author of a collection entitled:

Musica Deo Sacra & Ecclesie Anglicanæ; or, Musick dedicated to the Honour and Service of God, and to the use of the Cathedral and other Churches of England, especially of the Chappel-Royal of King Charles the First.

This publication includes an anthem for twelve voices, 'O praise the Lord, all ye heathen,' and another for ten voices, 'Glory be to God.' Tudway justly describes these two compositions as 'very elaborate and artful pieces, and the most deserving to be recorded and had in everlasting remembrance.'

The next name of importance is Dr. William Hayes, who officiated from 1731 to 1734. Two 19th century organists—Thomas Pitt and Jeremiah Clarke—were former choristers of the cathedral, while the late Dr. William Done—who most worthily discharged the duties of 'chief musician' for the long period of nearly fifty years—was a native of Worcester. In 1889 Mr. Hugh Blair was appointed acting organist, and in 1895, on the death of Dr. Done, he succeeded to the full office, from which he retired in 1897.

MR. IVOR A. ATKINS, MUS. B.

ORGANIST AND MASTER OF THE CHORISTERS OF WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.

(Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons.)

Mr. Ivor Algernon Atkins, the present organist and master of the choristers, was born on November 29, 1869, at Cardiff, where his father, the late Mr. Frederick Pyke Atkins, a distinguished musician known throughout the length and breadth of Wales, was for thirty-five years organist of St. John's Church. Mr. Ivor Atkins received his earliest training in music from his father and took some organ lessons from Mr. C. Lee Williams, at that time organist of Llandaff Cathedral, to whom he was indebted for his earliest impressions of cathedral services. As a boy-organist he officiated at two churches, Marstow and Pencoyd. In 1885, aged fifteen, he went to Truro as a pupil of and assistant to Dr. (then Mr.) G. R. Sinclair, whom he followed to Hereford in 1890. Two years later Mr. Atkins took the degree of Mus. B. at Oxford, and soon afterwards obtained the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists. In 1893 he became organist of Ludlow Parish Church, where he organized from the musical material of the town oratorio services with chorus and orchestra. In June, 1897, he was appointed organist and master of the choristers of Worcester Cathedral. His fine technique as an organist is manifested in his accompaniments—always in reverent taste—and in the voluntaries; indeed, his masterly manipulation of the complicated console of the Worcester instrument is a clever combination of organ-playing and engineering skill.

In his official capacity he conducted the Three Choirs Festivals of 1899, 1902, and 1905. For the last-named Festival—which he conducted with conspicuous ability—Mr. Atkins composed a cantata entitled 'Hymn of Faith,' for which Sir Edward Elgar furnished the libretto, a composition which was received with marked favour. The creative side of his musicianship can also be credited with two Evening Services for chorus and orchestra, composed for the opening of the Hereford and Gloucester Festivals of 1903 and 1904, in addition to anthems, songs, &c. A motet in five parts, 'Almighty God, give us grace,' was an attempt to arrive at what he considered the true church style. Beyond the cathedral walls Mr. Atkins's energies find full outlet in his conductorship of the Worcester Festival Choral Society, which is in a very healthy state artistically—ancient and modern music find their place in the operations of the Society, which can pride itself upon being one of the pioneers in the revival of the vocal works of Cornelius. Mr. Atkins is now engaged in organizing an orchestral society for the county. In regard to hobbies he takes a keen interest in antiquarian research. In this connection he has collected much material concerning his predecessors in the organistship, especially in regard to Thomas Tomkins and Nathanaell Patrick.

For valuable assistance kindly rendered in the preparation of this article the thanks of the writer are due to Canon T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A. (most genial of cicerones); to the Rev. H. H. Woodward, M.A., Precentor of the Cathedral; to Mr. C. B. Shuttleworth, master of the Choir School; and to Mr. Ivor A. Atkins, Mus. B., organist and master of the choristers; also to Mr. W. W. Harris, of Worcester, for his excellent photographs.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

SIR HENRY IRVING AND MUSIC.

SOME REMINISCENCES

BY SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE.

The death of Sir Henry Irving—which took place with startling suddenness at Bradford on October 13—has created widespread regret. This regret at the passing away of so great an exponent of the drama is shared by those who practise the sister art of music. With the knowledge that Sir Alexander Mackenzie had enjoyed a long and intimate friendship with the eminent actor, it seemed natural to ask the genial Principal of the Royal Academy of Music for information concerning Sir Henry Irving and his attitude towards music. Sir Alexander readily complied with the request for 'a few words' that might be acceptable to readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES. In his sanctum at Tenterden Street he began his reminiscences by stating that Sir Henry Irving distributed the prizes to the students of the Royal Academy of Music in July, 1900. In the course of his remarks on that occasion the distinguished prize-distributor said:

'My position here to distribute the prizes is, I am afraid, purely ornamental. I say "ornamental," for I do not suppose that my very old friend—I may say my dear and valued friend—Sir Alexander Mackenzie desires me to persuade you or himself that I have the least title to speak as an authority on music. Indeed, I have a suspicion as to the real design of Sir Alexander in inviting me here to-day. He knows that in the theatre, music, however excellent, is treated as somewhat incidental, and he wants to take me out of that atmosphere and away from the tyranny of the drama, and introduce me to a place where the real fitness of things is properly observed, and where music, instead of being incidental, is all-sufficient and supreme. This seems, perhaps, a suitable occasion for me to make a confession to you—that I have in my time taken dreadful liberties with music. In the course of a somewhat chequered career I have sometimes striven to deceive an audience into believing that I was playing the pianoforte. I remember once executing a very charming melody on that instrument, it being not really produced by my accomplished fingers, but by a lady or gentleman (I do not know which, at the moment—I think it was a lady) who was very carefully concealed behind a door in the wings, and who played this tune on quite a different pianoforte. The worst of it was that I was getting the idea that I was becoming rather fascinating, and I dare hardly tell you of the very many subterfuges I was put to when requested sometimes at some social gathering to play that charming air which I so delightfully rendered on the stage the other evening.'

Towards the close of his interesting speech he said:

'The drama owes a very great deal to music, and many plays at the Lyceum Theatre have been enhanced by the power of music, which I acknowledged, I think, during my management by securing the services of many of our gifted composers—among others those of my old friend your Principal, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and I hope it may yet be my privilege to have his services at the Lyceum again—and I think with such an orchestra as this playing “Manfred,” and conducted by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the result would be very entertaining.’

In reply to the question ‘Will you recall some incidents of your intercourse with Sir Henry Irving, more especially in connection with the music you composed for his various plays?’ Sir Alexander replies:

‘I wrote the music for three of his pieces. Unluckily, two of these were not among his most fortunate productions; in fact, the gloomy ones seemed always to fall to my share, as you will see. The first was “Ravenswood.” In this I attended only the last rehearsal, and found the music practically untouched. Irving told me that he had never had a play so well fitted with music, and wrote me a most complimentary letter to that effect. On the first night—when the Master shot the bull from the window—more than a titter went round the house at the heroic action. On the following Monday I went to rehearsal, as I had an idea that the music accompanying the shot rather heightened the absurdity of the situation by reason of a note or two for the trombones which helped to bring the groan of the expiring “Moo-cow” (as Ellen Terry called it) before the mind’s eye of the audience. I made my confession, and told Irving that I thought the brass had better be struck out—and this I did, but he only said: “Never mind, Mackenzie, I got the best laugh in the piece.”

‘In connection with “Ravenswood,” I remember playing all the music on the pianoforte to him in his room at the Lyceum. When I came to the last picture—where the sable plume is seen lying on the shifting sands—I had the love motive which runs through the piece in a triumphant burst suggesting the lovers united after death. Irving asked me what I meant by it. The explanation was that the lovers were not severed, as in “Faust,” but joined in death. He had thought of a cold, moonlight scene, indicating misery. At the moment he said nothing, but the next morning I received from him the following charming letter:

Lyceum Theatre,

Dear Mackenzie, 15 Feb., 1890.

You were right after all. Faust lives, and I hope gets up to Heaven in the second part—Edgar and Lucy, I am sure, go together.

At all events your music will certainly send them there—and the moonlight—on the sea—I shall change to the breaking of the rising sun.

Sincerely yours,

H. IRVING.

I mention this in order to show that he was willing to take an idea from the musician. The final tableau turned out to be one of the most impressive moments of “Ravenswood.”

‘Did he not at one time propose to perform “Manfred”?’

‘Yes, he had frequently talked to me about that drama—which fascinated him very much—particularly as he knew that, as a lad, I had fiddled in the orchestra during the production of “Manfred” under Chatterton (with Phelps) at Drury Lane, and could describe it all to him. I remember giving him many details—dresses, scenery, &c.—on several occasions. One Sunday afternoon he unexpectedly arrived at my house, saying that he had made up his mind to mount “Manfred.” At his request I had begun to work on the music more than a year previously. I showed him all that I had done: the three preludes—which have since found their way into the concert-room—and much of the vocal music—in fact, about as much as I could safely do without his personal help. Shortly after his visit, however, he wrote to me saying that he had reluctantly given up the notion of “Manfred,” “as there was no woman’s part in it.” Thus the matter dropped, although he had the whole play mapped out—four acts instead of the original three, &c. It was to be a big musical production, with an increased orchestra and a good many singers, whom I had undertaken to provide.’

‘And the Shakespeare plays, Sir Alexander?’

‘Well, I once started work on “Richard II.”—which had also occupied his thoughts—and even went to Birmingham to spend a day with him in order to discuss it. I have his marked copy of the text with all the music he wanted; but that play also was dropped.

‘The last piece in which I was associated with him was “Coriolanus.” While I was in Florence on a short holiday, I received a telegram asking me if I would write the music for it. I willingly agreed, and composed the music in Florence, sending it to London in acts, arriving in time for the first stage rehearsal. I never saw him so keen and restless over any play, and—unlike my previous experiences—I had to alter, add, shorten, &c., up to the very last moment, as he took up one new idea after another. We lived practically for a fortnight in the Lyceum Theatre; and I remember coming home a night or two before the production thinking that my work was quite finished. The next morning I received a letter from him requesting me to write a longer opening to the Senate Scene. In fact, we had a musical rehearsal only an hour before the doors were opened! On that occasion we had a good deal of trouble with the band, especially with the rather indifferent trombonists who persistently played wrong notes at all the rehearsals! On the evening of the production I was in a private box, just above my trombone friends. After the curtain fell, and while we were chatting on the stage, the Chief said to me: “Well, how did your trombones behave?” I replied: “Not at all well—lots of wrong notes!” “That’s why I put you in that box,” said he; and we indulged in a mutual grin of understanding! It was only a flam on his part, however.’

‘Had Irving any practical knowledge of music?’ we ask.

'Yes, he did know something about music—at least he knew very well what he wanted, and as he was generally right, I never had the slightest trouble in meeting his views. He had a great fancy for the harp in the orchestra, and several times suggested to me to make it prominent even when I thought it was "out of the situation." But he never insisted upon having his way with those in whom he had confidence. Further, he seemed to dislike the clarinet in incidental music. "*Must I have Jem Baggs there?*" he once remarked to me—referring to Robson's impersonation of the "Wandering minstrel"—whereupon I suppressed Jem Baggs. He could play the pianoforte (a little), and was particularly fond of Schubert's "Erl King." This he thought had been played often enough at the Lyceum, and he asked me if there was nothing similar of Schubert's to be found. So I quickly scored for him "Die junge Nonne"—that song having some of the same features—but I do not think it lessened his affection for "The Erl King."

'It always afforded me both pride and pleasure to work for Irving: one felt the invisible contact with a great artist. He was ever appreciative, sympathetic, and moreover liberal in his remuneration. On the last occasion that I received a generous cheque from him I remonstrated, saying, "You have given me too much." "Ah! think of what you did on those other plays which we did not produce," was the retort.'

'Can you recall any humorous incident, Sir Alexander?'

'On one occasion, while sitting opposite to him at a supper-party, he kept looking at me, and suddenly said: "Mackenzie, if you covered that"—pointing to the top of my bald pate—"with the traditional head-gear, what a fine Henry VIII. you would make!" Shortly afterwards his production of that play was announced, but I was not engaged for the character!'

The remains of Sir Henry Irving—after having been cremated—were laid to rest in Westminster Abbey on October 20, amid every manifestation of honour and respect due to a great genius. One of the pall-bearers was his old friend Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who worthily represented Music on that great occasion, and whose pathetic funeral march from 'Coriolanus' was played during the progress of the remains to their last resting-place in Poets' Corner.

In addition to the plays referred to by Sir Alexander Mackenzie and with which he was musically associated, the following, we believe, completes the list of 'Incidental music' specially composed for the representations associated with the name of Sir Henry Irving:

Queen Mary	-	1876	-	Sir Charles Stanford.
Romeo and Juliet	-	1882	-	Sir Julius Benedict.
Faust	-	1885	-	Mr. Hamilton Clarke.
Macbeth	-	1888	-	Sir Arthur Sullivan.
Henry VIII.	-	1892	-	Mr. Edward German.
King Lear	-	1892	{	Messrs. Hamilton Clarke and Meredith Ball.
Becket	-	1893	-	Sir Charles Stanford.
King Arthur	-	1895	-	Sir Arthur Sullivan.

SCHUMANN'S MUSIC IN ENGLAND.

It is an interesting coincidence that the earliest propagandist of both Schubert and Schumann in England was Mendelssohn. We refer, of course, to the larger works of those composers. In an article on 'Schubert's Music in England'—THE MUSICAL TIMES, February, 1897—we showed Mendelssohn's eagerness (in 1839) to make known in England Schubert's great C major symphony, and moreover that he conducted the first composition of that composer ever performed by the Philharmonic Society. As with Schubert, so with Schumann. Early in the year 1844 Mendelssohn wrote the following letter (in English) to Mr. Buxton, then proprietor of the music-publishing firm of Ewer & Co.:

Berlin, 27 Jan., 44.

DEAR SIR,—My friend Dr. Schumann wishes for an opportunity to publish his new work, 'Paradise and the Peri,' in your country, and has desired me to write you my impression of his work, while I think he intends communicating himself to you his ideas about its publication.

I must accordingly tell you that I have read and heard this new work of Dr. Schumann with the greatest pleasure, that it has afforded me a treat which made me easily foretell the unanimous applause it has gained at the two performances at Leipzig and the performance at Dresden (which took place last month), and that I think it a very important and noble work, full of many eminent beauties. As for expression and poetical feeling, it ranks very high; the choruses are as effective and as well written as the solo parts are melodious and winning. In short, it is a worthy musical translation of that beautiful inspiration of your great poet Moore; and I think the feeling of being indebted to that poet for the charm that pervades the whole music has induced the composer to wish your countrymen to become acquainted with his work. He intends visiting England next year, when I am sure he and his music will be received as they so highly deserve.

I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLODY.

Although no immediate action was taken on the above recommendation, this letter goes to prove that the jealousy of Schumann with which Mendelssohn has been charged had no foundation in fact. And here it may be said that Schumann did not fulfil his intention of visiting this country in 1845: he never set foot on English soil.

One of the first concert-givers to introduce Schumann's music in England was John Ella, though his zeal was doubtless prompted by the many foreign artists who performed at his Musical Union Matinées, as he used to call them. On March 28, 1848, at Willis's Rooms, Schumann's pianoforte quartet in E flat (Op. 47) was performed, probably for the first time in England, by Roeckel (pianoforte) and Sainton, Hill, and Piatti (strings). 'The perusal of the synopsis, previous to the performance of each piece, will greatly assist the amateur,' says Ella, who wrote his own synopses. In his usual cock-a-doodle-doo style, Ella thus dilates upon the composer and the quartet:

After a deliberate trial of new compositions, in the presence of artists and amateurs, a quartet for piano and stringed instruments by Doctor Schumann has been considered entitled to the suffrages of our members.

This composer, the husband of the celebrated pianiste Clara Wieck, is highly esteemed for his literary, as well as musical, compositions; and the quartet here chosen has had success both in Leipzig and Dresden, when performed by Mme. Schumann and others. Whether it succeed or not in conciliating the unanimous approval of its hearers at a single performance, there can be no two opinions on its claim to great excellence in the beauty of its harmonies, the classical purity of its scoring, and orthodox development of its motivi.

Later on Ella refers to 'the daring collisions of chords' in this quartet, which 'rather startled our preconceived notions of purity of harmony.' Nothing daunted, however, he brought forward the pianoforte quintet on March 17, 1853, in which Mdlle. Clauss (pianoforte), Molique, Mellon, and Piatti (strings) took part. Five years later—under Ella's auspices, at St. James's Hall, June 22, 1858—the lovely Andante and variations for two pianofortes (Op. 46) was played by Rubinstein and Pauer. Other Ella introductions included the Sonata for pianoforte and violin (Op. 105)—played by Jaell and Joachim on May 31, 1864, and the pianoforte trio in F (Op. 80)—on April 24, 1866, interpreted by Hartvigson, Auer, and Piatti. On the latter occasion Ella, in his programme synopsis, wisely said: 'We invite amateurs, this day, to lend a willing ear, nor hastily condemn what passeth their understanding at a single hearing of a difficult work of acknowledged merit.'

But Ella must not have all the credit of making known Schumann's chamber music in England. On February 24, 1851, at one of his excellent quartet concerts given in the Throne Room, Crosby Hall, Bishopsgate Street, Joseph Haydon Bourne Dando 'led' the string quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1) dedicated to Mendelssohn, his colleagues being Mellon, Hill, and Lucas. The programme—a copy of which is before us—states: 'First time of performance in this country.' The Fantasia in C for violin and orchestra (Op. 131) was performed, Joachim playing the solo at a concert given by the late Sir W. G. Cousins, at the Hanover Square Rooms, June 16, 1865. Before leaving this section of the subject, it may be mentioned that not a single note of Schumann's instrumental music was heard at the Popular Concerts until December 1, 1862, nearly four years after they had been started.

We may now turn to the quartet of Symphonies, with reference to the Overture, Scherzo, and Finale as a preliminary. This work—a symphony without a slow movement, and originally called a 'Sinfonietta'—was performed for the first time in this country at the Philharmonic Concert of April 4, 1853, under Costa's conductorship. The first performance in England of one of Schumann's symphonies was given by the Philharmonic Society on June 5, 1854, the work appearing in the programme thus:

Sinfonia in B flat (first time of performance in this country) - - - - - Schumann.

Costa conducted the work, and the concert was 'By command,' the selection of the symphony having been made by the Prince Consort, he, with Queen Victoria, honouring the concert with their presence. Following the symphony came an air by Mozart, and then the overture to—'Zampa'!

In order to maintain chronological order, we must now turn to the Crystal Palace—that fostering home of the good and true in music. Here, within a month, two performances of the D minor symphony—then unknown in this country—were given by Sir (then Mr.) August Manns. The dates were February 16 and March 15, 1856, and in the programme-book of the latter concert the following remarks appeared:

This Symphony was first performed at these Concerts a few weeks ago. It is now repeated in order to give an opportunity of forming a better judgment as to its merit than could be gained at a first hearing. Although comparatively little known in England, the music of Robert Schumann has a very great popularity in Germany. He has been, in fact, put forward by one section of the musical public of Germany, as the rival to Mendelssohn, and it must be admitted that his admirers in that country are fully as numerous as those of Mendelssohn. The difference between the two composers is certainly immense. Schumann has much less melody than Mendelssohn, while there is a certain roughness and abruptness in his harmonies and the transitions of his composition, coupled with forced effects, which look like striving for originality, from which Mendelssohn is entirely free. Still with all this, nothing is so absurd as to speak of Schumann's music as is the fashion with many critics. That which is the delight of so large a number of musical people, not to say which carries with it such evidences of genius and knowledge, can never be contemptible, as some would have us believe. At any rate, no judgment can be formed till we are much better acquainted with it than the musical public of England now are. It should not be forgotten, that the compositions of Beethoven, and even of Mozart, were, for long after their first appearance, received with the same rapture and the same dislike by different sections of the musical world.

The Symphony in C did not obtain a hearing in England until the year 1864, when, on May 30, it was performed, under Sterndale Bennett's direction, at the Philharmonic. To the late Luigi Arditi belongs the credit of having introduced the fine E flat (Rhenish) Symphony—why has this noble work been shelved?—to an English audience at a Promenade Concert given by him at Her Majesty's Theatre, December 4, 1865. The occasion was a 'German night,' when a 'New Grand Selection from Wagner's Romantic Opera "Tannhäuser"' was also presented. A notice of the concert in the Musical World refers to the symphony as being 'wonderfully well played, and received with great favour—the scherzo, a very spirited and characteristic movement, being loudly and generally encored.'

Consideration of the overtures and other works must be held over till next month. But the opportunity must not be lost of referring to the hostile attitude of most of the leading musical critics towards the masterly creations of Schumann's genius. It would serve no good purpose to quote from the diatribes that were written to boycott 'the new music.' We may turn to something not only pleasanter but in the nature of a discovery. In Mr. C. L. Graves's 'Life and letters of Sir George Grove' is a letter written by the subject of that admirable memoir to Mr. E. M. Oakeley. It is dated 'Crystal Palace, Dec. 3, 1868,' and contains the following sentences :

Did you see the Pall Mall of Monday, November 30th? If not, get it and read an article in it on Schumann which marks an era in English musical criticism.

Yours ever truly,

G. GROVE.

In a footnote to the same page (170) of Mr. Graves's 'Life' of Grove, in which the above letter appears, Mr. Oakeley attributes the Pall Mall article to Mr. J. W. Davison: but he is wrong! We have it on the best authority that the writer of this 'appreciation' of Schumann was Mr. Joseph Bennett. And this also we know, that it was 'much to the annoyance of "J. W. D." [Davison], and to the delight of "G" [Grove]!' 'G' was so taken with the article that he reprinted it in the Crystal Palace programme of December 12, 1868, and even 'J. W. D.', the champion anti-Schumannite, must have seen something in it, for he also reprinted the article in the Musical World of December 5, 1868. The tone of Mr. Bennett's 'appreciation,' which is headed 'Robert Schumann,' may be judged by his closing remarks :

The domain of music is a wide one, and affords ample room for Robert Schumann. Even if this were not so, room should be made for one who comes with such independent thought and original expression. If any have to remain outside let them be the manufacturers of music after other men's patterns, of whom we have enough, and to spare. But the author of Schumann's four symphonies, of the pianoforte concerto in A minor, of the quintet in E flat, of 'Das Paradies und die Peri,' and of much other of a like sort, should be welcomed as one who speaks, because having something new to say. His speech may be strange, but that of itself is no reason for rejection or even doubt. (Pall Mall Gazette, November 30, 1868.)

In these days, when Mr. Joseph Bennett is regarded by the 'young-bloods' as ultra-conservative in his views and opinions, it gives us peculiar pleasure to make it known that he was the first musical critic in this country to proclaim the genius of Robert Schumann.

The portrait of Schumann which forms one of our special supplements is of the year 1840, just after his marriage with Clara Wieck. It is after a daguerreotype by J. Ganz, and is reproduced by kind permission of Messieurs Dietrich et Cie., Brussels. The facsimile of Schumann's signature under the portrait is from a letter addressed to a firm of London music-publishers in 1853; it is kindly lent by Mr. Adolph Schloesser.

(To be continued.)

Dr. Henry Watson is preparing 'A Chronicle of the Manchester Gentlemen's Glee Club'—of which he is conductor—from its foundation in 1830 to the session, 1905-6. The book—to be illustrated with facsimiles, portraits, &c.—will contain complete lists of the music performed at the meetings, the names of all the vocalists who have sung thereat, and will record other incidents and features in the Club's history during its existence of seventy-five years.

ELIZABETH MOUNSEY.

In the house in which she had lived for the long period of eighty-three years Miss Elizabeth Mounsey drew her last breath on October 3, within five days of completing her eighty-sixth year. The younger of the clever Mounsey sisters—the elder being the late Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew—she began music at a very early age, and played the pianoforte, organ, concertina (see the Musical World of 1847, p. 811), and guitar. The death of William Adams, a sightless organist, caused a vacancy in the organistship of St. Peter's Church, Cornhill. Although only fourteen years of age, Elizabeth Mounsey competed for the appointment (in June, 1834) and obtained it, the salary being £35 per annum. The voting, first by the Vestry, and afterwards by a poll of the parish, was as follows :

	Vestry.	Poll of Parish.
Elizabeth Mounsey - - -	36 votes	52 votes
Lisetta Rist - - -	6 "	1 vote
George Smith - - -	12 "	13 votes

In those days examinations and diplomas in music were unknown, except at universities, and a candidate's qualifications for an organistship were largely estimated by testimonials. In this respect the fourteen-year-old Miss 'Bessie' entered the contest with the best possible credentials. Before us is a printed list of her nine testimonials, the first of which, dated May 30, 1834, reads :

I have heard Miss E. Mounsey perform on the Organ, and consider her fully competent to undertake parochial duty at any church or chapel.

S. WESLEY.

Here are two more :

I have heard Miss E. Mounsey play on the Organ, and consider her fully competent to perform the Duties of the Church.

THOMAS ADAMS.

Organist of St. George, Camberwell, and St. Dunstan's West.

Having heard Miss E. Mounsey perform upon this Organ, I beg to state that I most fully concur in the above Testimonial of Mr. Adams.

JAS. TURLE,

Organist to (sic) Westminster Abbey.

Similar certificates of competency were given by Vincent Novello, Dr. Carnaby, Dr. Essex, and others. A Vestry Minute of St. Peter's, recorded at the Easter following her appointment, reads :

... and that she [Miss Mounsey] do therefore perform the whole of the accustomed Sunday duty at the organ; and do likewise continue as she hath hitherto to attend regularly and instruct the charity school children attending the church in Psalmody, on the Saturday weekly, and on other convenient or necessary occasions as may be requisite.

When the girl-organist began her duties at St. Peter's she found a G organ of Father Smith's. At that time Dr. Gauntlett was burning with enthusiasm for the introduction of the C compass into England, and St. Peter's was one of the earliest organs—though not the first, as is often stated—to be assimilated to the German plan. This occurred when Hill erected a new instrument (which incorporated some of the old work) in the year 1840, under Gauntlett's supervision. Gauntlett had some curious fads, e.g., the black keys were inlaid with tortoiseshell; the enormous draw-stop knobs—about 2½ inches in diameter!—were ornamented with mother-of-pearl rosettes in the centre; the name of each stop was engraved on a label placed immediately above each knob; and the stops were arranged in three columns on each jamb.

The specification of the organ drawn up by Gauntlett was as follows:

The organ, erected in the west gallery, was opened on Sunday, July 12, 1840, the young lady-organist having had in the meantime to accustom herself to a C compass instrument. On the following Thursday

'the parishioners were invited to a performance of music given by Dr. Gauntlett and Miss Elizabeth Mounsey.' In the autumn of that year Mendelssohn paid his sixth visit to England, when Gauntlett, on September 30, took him to St. Peter's in order that he (Mendelssohn) might try the organ and see the result of his cicerone's 'C compass' propaganda. On that occasion Mendelssohn played Bach's noble Prelude and Fugue in E minor, his own Prelude and Fugue in C minor (Op. 37, No. 1), and another fugue of his in F minor (first published in 1885 by Messrs. Stanley Lucas & Co.), of which the subject is:

finishing with Bach's 'Passacaglia.' Gauntlett and Miss Mounsey stood one on each side of the player, and when Mendelssohn asked the fair organist of the church to play to him, she modestly declined. In order to secure some souvenir of the event she asked him for his autograph. This he gave in the following form, the opening bars of Bach's 'Passacaglia' which he had so splendidly played. This memento—now preserved in the Vestry of the church, to which it was presented by Miss Mounsey—is here reproduced from the pencilled original by kind permission of the rector, the Rev. George Bell Doughty, B.A.

Two years later Mendelssohn was again in London, when Gauntlett once more conducted him to St. Peter's, on June 12. It was a Sunday morning, and they arrived at the church during the sermon. At the end of the service, while a hymn was being sung to the tune 'Austria' (Haydn's 'Hymn to the Emperor'), Mendelssohn made his way to the organ gallery, and, greatly to Miss Mounsey's astonishment, peeped round the corner while she was accompanying the great congregation. 'Ah! you would not play to me when I was here two years ago,' he laughingly said to her, 'but you have been obliged to now!' After the Benediction, Miss Mounsey begged the distinguished visitor to play the concluding voluntary. He complied with this request by taking the Haydn tune which had just been sung as the subject of his 'playing out,' which he varied and extemporized upon in the happiest and most ingenious manner. As the occasion was a charity sermon, collections were taken at the doors of the church; but the congregation seemed to be in no hurry to depart, much to the chagrin of the churchwarden plate-holders, whose names, curiously enough, were Knight and Day. How Miss Mounsey used to delight in recalling these incidents of her early career! In a letter—dated London, June 23, 1833—Abraham Mendelssohn, the father of the composer, writes:

This morning [Sunday] Felix played the organ at St. Paul's, and, as the bellows-blowers had gone, Klingemann and two other gentlemen supplied their places. Felix played an introduction and a fugue, and then extemporised. Afterwards he played with Attwood one of his [Attwood's] Coronation Anthems (four hands), and lastly three pieces by Bach. It sounded very well; the cathedral was empty, only two ladies, frequenters of the Philharmonic, stole in and listened unseen.

THE OLD ORGAN KEYBOARDS AT ST. PETER'S CHURCH, CORNHILL, ON WHICH MENDELSSOHN PLAYED IN 1840 AND 1842.

AS THE GLASS CASE, IN WHICH THIS RELIC IS PRESERVED, IS A FIXTURE, IT WAS NOT POSSIBLE TO INCLUDE THE WHOLE OF THE DRAW-STOP KNOBS IN THE PHOTOGRAPH.

The 'two ladies, frequenters of the Philharmonic,' were the Misses Mounsey. That Mendelssohn had a high opinion of the younger sister's ability is evidenced by a letter to William Bartholomew, in which he says: 'present my compliments to Miss [E.] Mounsey, whose organ-playing I always recollect with so much pleasure.'

In 1891 the organ in St. Peter's, Cornhill, was rebuilt, and for a time the old keyboards and draw-stop jambs were relegated to a cellar, from which they were fortunately rescued by one of Messrs. Hill's workmen, who suggested that so interesting a relic should be preserved. (Would that the quarter-tone keyboards of the Temple organ had been so rescued from destruction!) Accordingly the rector and churchwardens of St. Peter's had their old keyboards enclosed in a glass case and fixed to the wall of the vestry, where they are now to be seen, with Mendelssohn's autograph. Through the kindness of the rector we are enabled to give a photograph above of those old keyboards upon which Mendelssohn played.

St. Peter's, Cornhill, is traditionally said to be the first Christian church founded in England, A.D. 124.

An ancient tablet in the vestry thus records the tradition:

BE IT KNOWNE TO ALL MEN THAT IN THE YEARE OF OVR LORD GOD 179. LVCIVS THE FIRST CHRISTIAN KING OF THIS LAND, THEN CALLED BRITAIN, FOUNDED Y FIRST CHVRCH IN LONDON, THAT IS TO SAY, Y CHVRCH OF S^T PETER VPON CORNEHILL AND HEE FOUNDED THERE AN ARCHBISHOPS SEE, AND MADE THAT CHVRCH Y METROPOLITANE AND CHEIFE CHVRCH OF THIS KINGDOME AND SO IT INDVRED Y SPACE OF 400 YEARES AND MORE, VNTO THE COMING OF S^T AVSTIN THE APOSTLE OF ENGLAND, THE WHICH WAS SENT INTO THIS LAND BY S^T GREGORIE Y DOCTOR OF Y CHVRCH IN THE TIME OF KING ETHELBERT AND THEN WAS THE ARCHBISHOPS SEE & PALL REMOVED FROM Y FORESAID CHVRCH OF S^T PETER VPON CORNEHILL VNTO DOROBERNIA, THAT NOW IS CALLED CANTERBURY & THERE IT REMAINETH TO THIS DAY, AND MILLET A MONKE WHICH CAME INTO THIS LAND WITH S^T AVSTIN, HEE WAS MADE THE FIRST BISHOP OF LONDON AND HIS SEE WAS MADE IN PAVLS CHVRCH, AND THIS LVCIVS KING WAS THE FIRST FOUNDER OF S^T PETERS CHVRCH VPON CORNEHILL, & HEE REIGNED KING IN THIS LAND AFTER BRVTE 1245 YEARES AND IN THE YEARE OF OVR LORD GOD 124. LVCIVS WAS CROWNED KING AND THE YEARES OF HIS REIGNE WERE 77 YEARES, AND HEE WAS BURYED (AFTER SOME CHRONICLES) AT LONDON AND AFTER SOME CHRONICLES HEE WAS BURYED AT GLOCESTER, IN THAT PLACE WHERE Y ORDER OF S^T FRANCIS STANDETH NOW.

To return to Miss Mounsey. It was exceedingly pleasant to visit her in the little house—58, Brunswick Place, City Road—in which, we much regret to record, she recently died, and where she had lived for eighty-three years. The deafness which necessitated her resignation of the St. Peter's organistship in 1882, increased so much that she became totally oblivious to sound. Yet she took a keen interest in all that was going on, and nothing gave her greater pleasure than to relieve the solitude of her life by recalling past events. She would tell, over the tea cups, how 'old Sam' Wesley would occasionally call at the house and extemporize upon a little organ; that Lablache once sang in that little sitting-room and 'shook the house!' As the oldest Associate of the Philharmonic Society—she joined in 1842—Miss Mounsey well remembered the first time that Dr. Joachim, as a boy of thirteen, played Beethoven's violin concerto, under Mendelssohn's conductorship, at the Society's concert in 1844. 'I well remember Mendelssohn's bright look of pleasure and praise,' she recalled, 'at the rehearsal, while he was also amused. As conductor, he turned to the very young soloist, in short jacket and turned-down collar, so as to follow him dutifully, his (Mendelssohn's) own subordinate position appearing to afford him some amusement. But it was very beautiful to see the pleasure it gave him to view the boy at his side, not only with admiration, but with honour. Joachim, whose playing was so masterly, and whose whole manner so thoughtful, was still boy enough to indulge in an unbecoming full pocket at his side; one wondered what its contents might be!'

Within the walls of the Brunswick Place house Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed for the first time in England. 'Incredible!' the reader may exclaim. Not so, however. It happened thus: Mendelssohn sent the MS. of his oratorio in instalments to his English publishers—Ewer & Co., then located in Newgate Street—in order that an English version should be made for the Birmingham Festival of 1846. When the 'copy' arrived, Mr. Buxton, the then proprietor of Ewer & Co., would tell Mr. Bartholomew, the translator, to call for it. On his way home (to Hackney) Bartholomew—with a lover's eye cast towards the elder Miss Mounsey—used to take Mendelssohn's 'copy' to Brunswick Place, and there the two sisters would try over the new oratorio from the actual sheets written by the composer.

In this connection the present writer recalls an eventful day soon after the death of Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, when her sister and legatee set before him a brown-paper parcel covered with the dust of forty years. Here was a find! Missing sheets of the autograph pianoforte score of 'Elijah'—which have now been restored to their proper place—and some of the identical parts, in Bartholomew's and Mendelssohn's handwriting, used by the soloists at the first performance of the oratorio at Birmingham (as the work was not printed). These parts Miss Mounsey very kindly gave to the present writer, and in various ways helped him in preparing a 'History of Mendelssohn's Elijah.'

The death of Miss Mounsey severs an interesting link with the past. Kind-hearted, of a very retiring disposition, a true lady in her old-world courtesy, and an excellent musician, she will be remembered with affection by those who were privileged to enjoy her friendship. Her remains were quietly laid to rest in Abney Park Cemetery with that simplicity which typified her long, consistent, and useful life.

There are the silver chords,
And there the ambient air,
But she who made them one with words
Makes music elsewhere.

Occasional Notes.

It is my temper, and I like it the better, to effect all harmony; and sure there is musick, even in the beauty and the silent note which Cupid strikes, far sweeter than the sound of an instrument. For there is a musick wherever there is a harmony, order, or proportion; and thus far we may maintain 'the musick of the spheres!'; for those well-ordered motions, and regular paces, though they give no sound unto the ear, yet to the understanding they strike a note most full of harmony. Whatsoever is harmonically composed delights in harmony, which makes me much distrust the symmetry of those heads which declaim against all church-music. For myself not only from my Catholick obedience, but my particular genius, I am obliged to embrace it: for even that vulgar and tavern-musick, which makes one man merry, another mad, strikes in me a deep fit of devotion, and a profound contemplation of my Maker. There is something in it of divinity more than the ear discovers: it is an hieroglyphical and shadowed lesson of the whole world, and creatures of God,—such a melody to the ear, as the whole world, well understood, would afford the understanding. In brief, it is a sensible fit of that harmony which intellectually sounds in the ears of God. It unties the ligaments of my frame, takes me to pieces, dilates me out of myself, and by degrees methinks resolves me into heaven.

From the Religio Medici of Sir Thomas Browne, born October 19, 1605.

The history of 'The Triumphs of Oriana' is more or less a matter of conjecture. For nearly a hundred years no fresh light seems to have been thrown on the origin of this famous collection of English madrigals, except that it was not published until 1603, although a recent programme-book of the Oriana Madrigal Society gives the earlier date (1601) of the title-page. That the title and form of 'The Triumphs of Oriana' were suggested by a set of Italian madrigals entitled 'Il Trionfo di Dori' admits of little doubt. Previous writers on the subject do not seem to have known of an edition of the Italian publication earlier than that dated 'Rome, 1599,' while others have given 1601 (Antwerp). All have had to admit, however, that the work must have been issued previous to 1597, as in that year the second book of 'Musica Transalpina' appeared (in London) which contained one of the madrigals from the Italian work—'Ove tra l'herbi e i fiori,' by Giovanni Croce, but adapted to English words beginning 'Hard by a fountain.' With this as a clue it seems strange that no one has 'run to earth' an earlier issue of 'Il Trionfo di Dori'—one published anterior to 1597. This missing link in the chain of evidence we are glad to have discovered, or rather to have made known, we believe, for the first time in England.

'Il Trionfo di Dori' was certainly published—probably for the first time—in 1592 at Venice, where it was printed and published by Angelo Gardano, the actual date on the imprint being February 20, 1592. Copies of this edition are (or were) in the possession of the Società filarmonica of Verona (exhibited at the Vienna Music Exhibition of 1892) and of the Landbibliothek at Cassel. The British Museum copy, unfortunately incomplete, is dated 'Antwerp, 1614': other editions are said to have been issued at Rome in 1599 and Antwerp in 1618, while a German version of the work appeared at Geneva in 1619. At an early opportunity we hope to give a more or less detailed account of the history of 'The Triumphs of Oriana,' together with its prototype 'Il Trionfo di Dori.' In the meantime it may suffice to have unearthed a date to which, hitherto, attention does not seem to have been called in an English publication. As to the issue-date of the English collection we may add that, although it is given as 1601 on the title-page, its publication was deferred until more than six months after the death of Queen Elizabeth. The delay is attributed to her dislike of the term 'Oriana' by which she was apostrophised in the madrigals forming the collection. According to Arber's 'Transcript of the Registers of the Company of Stationers' (iii., 101) the work was entered by Thomas East on October 15, 1603, the entry appearing in the following form:

3. Madrigalles The Triumphs of ORIANA to
5. and 6. voices: composed by divers authors.
Newly published by THOMAS MORLEY Batchelor of Musicke - - - - - vjd.

The 'vjd.' is the registration fee paid by East. It is of special interest to know that this worthy English printer and publisher entered no fewer than five publications on that very day, of which four, including 'The Triumphs of Oriana,' were collections of madrigals!

Mr. W. W. Starmer, of 20, Warwick Park, Tunbridge Wells, writes:

I am desirous of making a comprehensive list of quarter-chimes and chime tunes which are or have been in use in this country, and I shall be very much obliged if you will allow me space in your columns to lay before your readers who are interested in the subject a request that they will communicate with me as to any chimes, &c., of musical interest they may know of. In cathedrals and churches where the ancient chime mechanism is still in use, quarter-chimes and chime tunes are of the greatest interest. This is also the case in many of the out-of-the-way village churches possessing six to ten bells, knowledge of which is very difficult of access unless through the kindness of any of your readers who may be interested enough to comply with my request.

As far as I am aware no such collection has ever been made, and it is my desire to include all quarter-chimes and chime tunes played by cathedral and church clocks and also by domestic clocks, which are worthy of note. I should prefer them in musical notation, but failing this the order of the striking of the bells can be accurately indicated by numbers, beginning with '1' for the smallest bell.

Wagner's brief sojourn at the now demolished tavern 'Hoop and Horseshoe,' near Tower Hill, was the occasion of putting his wonderful memory to a severe test. After his last visit to England—as the guest of the late Mr. Edward Dannreuther, in 1877—Madame Wagner asked a friend to procure views of all the houses at which the master had stayed during his three visits to London. But as Wagner gave 'The Hoop' as the sign of the hotel at which he had put up in 1839, and that could not be located, a map of London was sent to him at Bayreuth in order that he might locate the spot. This he actually did, and marked the map, although forty years had elapsed and Wagner had only slept at 'The Hoop and Horseshoe' one night. Further reference to this old hostelry and Wagner's stay there was made in our October issue, p. 644.

Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright, of Crowshott, Newbury, writes:

In the September number of THE MUSICAL TIMES, p. 578, the question is asked 'Who was Mr. Sebastian, of Pauls?' The person generally so spoken of in the 16th century was Sebastian Westcote, Master of the Children of St. Paul's Cathedral. His name occurs nearly every year in the 'Acts of the Privy Council' in connection with plays presented before the Queen by the Children from at least as early as January, 1562-3. The latest reference to 'Master Sebastian' that I have met with is in Cunningham's 'Revels at Court,' p. 137, in some accounts relating apparently to 'A Morrall of the marriage of Mynde and Measure shewen at Richmond on the Sondaie next after New-yeres daie enacted by the children of Pawles,' 1578-9. Westcote had been succeeded by Thomas Gyles by 1585, for there is a 'Commission to take up singing children to Mr. Thomas Gyles, Mr. of the children of the Cathedral Church of St. Paule,' signed by Elizabeth, dated Apr. 26, 27 Eliz. (Sloane MS. 2035. B). Therefore one is surprised to find 'Mr. Sebastian of Pauls' taking up children in 1600. Is it possible that there is some mistake in the date given for this document?

With regard to John Farrant, mentioned in the same article, it is certain that he was not identical with the organist of Ely, Hereford, and Salisbury? Hawkins ('Hist.' 1776, III., 422) speaks of him, it is true, as if he were not the same man; but more recent writers (see 'Dict. Nat. Biogr.' and West's 'Cathedral Organists') suggest that there was but one John Farrant who held these different appointments at different dates.

On p. 607 of the same issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES is a review of the anthem 'Haste Thee, O Lord,' by John Shepherd. This anthem was printed by Barnard (1641) with the name of John Shepherd, and again in recent years by the Motett Society, but it may be worth pointing out that, according to Amner's organ score at Ely, it is not by Shepherd at all, but by Dr. Tye. Shepherd did write a setting of these words, but it is quite different from that printed by Barnard. Amner's ascription will probably be thought more worthy of acceptance than Barnard's, for he was organist at Ely (1610-1641), where Tye had been organist from 1541 to 1562, and probably had local sources of information.

In reply to Mr. Arkwright's interesting and informing letter, we regret that an unfortunate slip of the pen resulted in the word 'later' being written instead of 'earlier'—top line of p. 578. The actual entry in the Court Minutes of Christ's Hospital is dated March 5, 1578, and reads:

Mr. Sebastian of Pauls is appointed to have Hallawae the younger out of this house to be one of the singing children of the Cathedral Church of Pauls in this Cite.

As to the second paragraph of Mr. Arkwright's letter, the evidence is very strong in favour of there having been two John Farrants. One of these musicians was appointed magister choristarum of Ely Cathedral not later than Michaelmas, 1566. Now, supposing him to have been the only John Farrant, and also that he was only twenty years of age at the time of his appointment, he must have lived for the long period (in those days) of eighty-eight years, and moreover to have been appointed music-master of Christ's Hospital at the advanced age of sixty-one; therefore the statement of Hawkins that there were two John Farrants may be allowed to stand in the absence of any further evidence to the contrary. Mr. Arkwright has made out a case for Dr. Tye as the composer of the anthem 'Haste Thee, O Lord' (assigned to John Shepherd); but the matter is one that will repay absolute confirmation.

Bow Bells are so closely connected with London life that any new phase in their history is of special interest. The peal—hung in the church of St. Mary-le-Bow, in Cheapside—has long been famous. In the 14th century it was ordered that no person should be seen armed in the streets, and no brewer keep open his doors 'after curfew is rung out at Bowe'; and in 1469 the Common Council decreed that 'Bow bell should be nightly rung at nine of the clock.' Shortly after, John Donne (? Dong), mercer, endowed the office of Bow bell-ringer. As the bell was usually rung after the proper time, the apprentices 'and other in Cheap' told the bell-ringer that he tolled the bell late, rhyming their complaint in the following couplet:

Clerke of the Bow Bell, with the yellow lockes,
For thy late ringing thy head shall have knocks.

whereupon the clerk chimed in:

Children of Cheape, hold you all still,
For you shall have Bow Bell rung at your will.

Later on, in 1720, Strype says: 'for number and melody of the bells, Bow, since the fire, surpasseth former times.'

Whatever may have been the melodic charm of Bow Bells in olden times, since the year 1823 they have been of the ordinary ding-dong type. The need of new chimes presented an opportunity of restoring a tuneful tradition. The matter was placed in the skilful hands of Sir Charles Stanford, who found it necessary to discard the two melodies traditionally associated with Master Dick Whittington, and to evolve a fresh tune modelled on the lines of the old strain. That he has discharged this duty ingeniously and successfully may at once be admitted. Adopting the instalment system in giving out the tune, Sir Charles assigns these notes to the first quarter:

To the half-hour:

To the third quarter:

and at the hour the tune is completed thus:

To this immediately succeeds the hour, struck on the tenor bell (C), which thereby completes the cadence. Bow Bells will now have a fresh interest in a melody with which Londoners will doubtless soon become familiar.

The following notification appeared in a local newspaper issued in Surrey:

S. B., Chimney Sweep, etc., —, begs to inform the Public that owing to the increase in the above business he is unable to accept musical engagements for Public Concerts, etc.

This gentleman evidently wishes to make a clean sweep of his professional engagements.

Beethoven's 'Fidelio' was produced at Vienna on November 20, 1805; subsequent to that event came the celebrated meeting at Prince Lichnowsky's house, when Beethoven, after much discussion, was induced to shorten and modify his score. To celebrate the centenary of the production of the work, it is to be given at the Royal Opera, Berlin, on November 20, in its original form, and under the title 'Leonore,' as originally given to his work by the composer. We hope to give a report, by a special correspondent, of this interesting commemoration.

Twenty-seven years elapsed between the production of Beethoven's great and only opera and its first performance in England. This took place at the King's Theatre, Haymarket, on May 18, 1832, the representation being given by a German opera company—the first that had ever visited these shores—under the conductorship of Herr Chelard. The company included a Herr Schumann and the celebrated Madame Schroeder-Devrient, who impersonated Leonora. The Harmonicon, the only musical periodical of the day, concluded a long notice of the performance in these words:

Let, then, all true lovers of music hear Fidelio. Should they think, as we do, that its defect is sameness and want of relief—should they even feel the last note as a welcome sound—still, they will have heard enough to amply recompense them for what little trouble and expense they may have incurred. . . . His [Beethoven's] true greatness is to be sought in his instrumental compositions; there he has no superior, notwithstanding his having followed those who may almost be said to have left no ground for a third to occupy. But though he found 'worlds exhausted,' his genius 'imagined' new.

A correspondent in Shanghai sends us the following interesting information:

On September 9, at 9 P.M., before a large and enthusiastic audience, composed principally of Chinese, with a sprinkling of Britishers, a musical entertainment was given in the Union Church Hall by some of the members of the World's Chinese Students' Federation. The most noticeable feature of the performance—the first of its kind given in Shanghai—was that, with three exceptions, the vocal numbers were all rendered in English, and very good English too.

The items calling for special comment and praise were undoubtedly the vocal solos—these being English compositions, music as well as words—which were rendered in a finished and almost faultless style. The blending of the voices and balance of tone in a quartet—sung by Messrs. Chiu, Zau, Khoo, and Chiu—left very little to be desired, and was quite a contrast to the singing usually heard from Chinese men, a high-pitched falsetto. In a chorus sung by a choir of Chinese ladies the entire absence of anything approaching the usual Chinese falsetto was also noticeable. The vocal performances of Miss Chee Toy, a young lady of nine summers, were distinctly good; her low notes were excellent; and the dramatic manner in which one so young rendered her songs was highly amusing, and delighted the audience immensely.

The pianoforte solos performed by the Misses Yen, Sze, and Zau were very well rendered, and Miss Sze cannot be too highly praised for the artistic manner in which she played Beethoven's favourite Sonata in C sharp minor (Op. 27, No. 2), her rapid yet light and firm fingering being a distinctive feature of her performance.

The only songs with Chinese words were those sung during the patriotic drill. In this attractive item of the programme thirteen Chinese ladies appeared on the platform, each carrying a Chinese flag. With the smartness of a well-drilled regiment they marched about the stage singing, at intervals, various patriotic Chinese songs adapted to the tunes of the English and Austrian National Anthems, and 'Marching through Georgia.' The effect, to foreign ears, of the mingling of Eastern words to Western music sounded very curious, and called forth loud applause from the Chinese section of the audience. So far as the rest of the musical part of the programme is concerned, it only remains to state that the playing of Admiral Sah's Marine Band came as a revelation to most of the English people present, and showed what the Chinese people are capable of doing, under foreign tuition, in the way of interpreting Western orchestral music.

An account of a cathedral choral festival, as reported in a certain provincial journal, gives the following title of the anthem sung: 'If the Lord Himself warms me.' Shades of Walmisley!

Verger (showing a party round a cathedral): 'Now turn round. On the right we have the 13th century stalls: on the left, up there, you see the fine organ, with the old and the new matrics.' Fact!

According to a northern newspaper the test-pieces at the recent Blackpool Festival included works by 'Bash Beethoven.'

'THE RADIANT MORN.'

FACSIMILE OF A FAMILIAR PHRASE IN THE AUTOGRAPH OF THE COMPOSER.

The anthem-setting of 'The Radiant Morn' has met with such exceptional and widespread favour that a few words concerning its composer may prove acceptable. The Rev. Herbert Hall Woodward was born at The Friars, near Liverpool, on January 13, 1847, but for upwards of 150 years his family have been connected with Worcestershire, and for the last fifty years have resided at Arley Castle, near Bewdley, so that from his childhood Mr. Woodward has taken a special interest in Worcester Cathedral. As a pupil at St. Peter's College, Radley, he received his first lessons in music from the late Dr. E. G. Monk, organist and music-master there from 1848 to 1859. Upon the removal of Dr. Monk to York Minster, the boy continued his musical studies, and he expresses his great indebtedness to the help and long friendship of the Rev. George Wharton, who is still Precentor of Radley.

In 1865 he entered the University of Oxford as an undergraduate of Corpus Christi College. After studying harmony for a year under the late Dr. Leighton Hayne, organist of Queen's College, he took his Mus. Bac. degree in 1866, his exercise being a sacred cantata, 'The Light of the World,' for solo voices, chorus, strings, and wood-wind. He proceeded to the degrees of B.A. and M.A. in due course, and before taking Holy Orders he spent fifteen months at Cuddesdon Theological College under Canon King, now Bishop of Lincoln. Ordained in 1870 to the curacy of Wantage, in Berkshire, he worked there for eleven years under Canon Butler, who afterwards became Canon of Worcester, and after that Dean of Lincoln. For the church choir at Wantage he composed his Communion Service in E flat: this service seemed to supply a want, as it is now in its ninety-ninth edition.

In 1881 he left Wantage on becoming a Minor Canon of Worcester Cathedral. In the Autumn of the same year, after the Worcester Musical Festival, he composed 'The Radiant Morn,' the words of which had always fascinated him. This very favourite anthem first appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of June, 1882, 'inscribed with sincere regards to E. G. Monk,

THE REV. H. H. WOODWARD, M.A., MUS. B., PRECENTOR OF WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.
(Photograph by Messrs T. Bennett & Sons, Worcester.)

Esq., Mus. Doc., his former music-master at Radley. Where it was first sung it is difficult to say, but the composer himself did not hear it until a year had passed away. How many times it has been sung and by how many choirs, in the British Isles, the Colonies, and America, it would be impossible to say. One secret of its success—using the word in its best sense—is that the composer has not only a gift of melody, facility in making his part-writing interesting, and a fine sense of form, but above and beyond all that he became imbued with the devotional and poetic spirit of the words, a combination of gifts which has produced one of the best known modern anthems in English church music.

Since January, 1890, Mr. Woodward has held the Precentorship of Worcester Cathedral, the duties of which he has set himself to discharge faithfully, and in the spirit of goodwill to all who are associated with him in the musical work of the cathedral. His inception of the Choir School is referred to in the article on the cathedral on p. 709. To the oversight of this invaluable institution he ungrudgingly devotes much time and strength. The Precentor of Worcester modestly declines any claim to musicianship: but there may be two opinions on that score. He says he could never learn to master either the pianoforte or organ, but he is certainly an adept in manipulating the pianola, as the present writer can fully testify after a pleasant hour he passed in the Precentory at Worcester.

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

The organ, which has been rebuilt, enlarged, and much improved by Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons, was re-opened with a special service on October 11, when Sir Frederick Bridge gave a short recital. The specification of the renovated instrument is as follows:

Dr. Haydn Keeton, organist of Peterborough Cathedral for the past thirty-five years, has been presented with the full-dress robes of a doctor of music. The presentation was made by the Dean, on behalf of the subscribers, in the practice-room of the cathedral on September 25, and Dr. Keeton appropriately acknowledged a gift which has afforded him much gratification.

Councillor Daniel Harrison, vicar-choral of Lichfield Cathedral, has, for the second year in succession, been unanimously elected Mayor of Lichfield. This is an honour upon which he in particular and lay-clerks generally are to be congratulated.

SIR HUBERT PARRY'S
'THE PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN.'

Robert Browning's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin'* is the twentieth choral work with which the Director of the Royal College of Music has enriched English art, and, though his first 'humorous' cantata, it is one of his very best. Humorous it is almost throughout, and if one passage even touches the burlesque (of which more anon), the nature of Browning's poem, with its rich fun in the way of jingling rhymes and rattling rhythms, must be held responsible. The new cantata may be said to occupy amongst Sir Hubert's works a place analogous to that of 'Die Meistersinger' amongst Wagner's operas, by which we do not mean to lay ourselves open to the charge of foolishly comparing a little choral piece with one of the most stupendous emanations of the human brain in the whole realm of Art. But this 'Piper' has about it something of the sunny cheerfulness and genial warmth of Wagner's only comic opera and, like that matchless masterpiece, it is not without its touches of pathos and deep seriousness. Moreover, as 'Die Meistersinger' is pre-eminent amongst Wagner's operas as an inexhaustible fount of melody, so the 'Piper' is the most consistently tuneful of all Sir Hubert's works. That it is not less masterly in conception and workmanship because it is 'only a humorous cantata,' goes without saying in the case of a musician to whom native art is indebted for an unique sequence of dignified and ennobling choral utterances.

The work, which runs on without a break, is built upon a number of tuneful and straightforward diatonic subjects, such as Sir Hubert loves to write. In fact, the whole cantata might be put forward as a protest against modern chromaticism and over-elaboration; as a diatonic antiseptic to counteract what thoughtful judges of contemporary music may well consider a tendency to decay. The ingenuity displayed in dissecting the subject-matter and building up page after page with the fragments without incurring the charge of monotony, is worthy of close study and minute analysis.

Sir Hubert plunges very much in medias res by starting with the rat catastrophe! A bustling Vivace opens the orchestral introduction, and in the second bar we meet a swirling semiquaver passage which in the course of the cantata suggests the rodents' fatal header into the river Weser:

The groups of four descending semiquavers show in embryo, rhythmically transformed, the chief theme of the Piper (vide Ex. 9).

The above passage is immediately succeeded by a jovial tune, to a variation of which later on the opening line of the poem is set:

No. 2. Vivace.
Hamelin Town's in Bruns - wick,

Fragments of several themes connected with the 'Piper' follow—e.g., a sequential passage showing at a the four semiquavers of Ex. 1:

No. 3. Vivace.

This, which is energetically whipped along for some time, makes way for a fresh idea:

Vivace.

No. 4.

The little figure of three notes (a) plays a very important part in the cantata from the point where the 'Piper' appears on the scene.

A dignified melody of much charm, and suggestive of an old-time ballad:

No. 5. Vivace.

leads up to the entry of the chorus, which runs along right merrily until it explodes, ff, on the word 'Rats!' This introduces a semiquaver figure, which stands, no doubt, for the ravenous rodents:

No. 6. ff.

At this the Mayor and Corporation
Quaked with a mighty consternation,

Sir Hubert provides rich fun for both executants and listeners. His declamation (always one of his strong points) could not be more forcible. But 'let not your angry passions rise,' the orchestra seems to sing; and the contrast between the impatient energy thrown into the voice-parts and the good-natured jollity of the accompanying instrumental phrase (suggestive, no doubt, of the too easy-going Corporation):

is highly diverting. We almost see the worthy, or rather unworthy, councillors cower before the excited gesticulations of the mob:

Note the threatening octave jumps, which are much in evidence when the situation suggests a possibility of the actors in the drama coming to blows.

The Mayor's speech is accompanied by the 'quaking' semiquaver figure of Ex. 8, and the voice-part lends itself to legitimate 'comic' interpretation. With the entrance of the Piper (after four 'gentle taps' on the drum and an affrighted ff, 'Bless me, what's that?' by the Mayor), the music assumes a different complexion. At first the Piper's two themes are fragmentarily anticipated. By degrees they grow—the while the chorus describes 'the strangest figure,' and he makes his offer to rid the town of rats—until, at the words 'Into the street the Piper stept,' the tunes are combined with the following very charming result (compare the second bar of the vocal melody with Ex. 4):

Great and excellent use is made of these two ideas, and more especially of the voice theme, in the instrumental accompaniment to the next chorus describing the exodus of the vermin. The orchestra is kept tremendously busy suggesting, by means of countless staccato semiquavers and a rousing, prolonged crescendo, the muttering and grumbling and rumbling and tumbling as the rats rush to their doom. Then the fatal plunge (to bar 2, Ex. 1) and the first strain of Chopin's Funeral March strikes our astonished ear. A burlesqued version, vivace, of that famous melody follows, and with a rapid, jubilant, demisemiquaver flourish we are hurled into a short but merry, jig-like movement, while the people are 'ringing the bells till they rocked the steeple':

The three-note fragment (see Ex. 4a) of the 'Piper' theme recurs, as a persistent accompaniment figure, with the humble protagonist's return to receive his reward; but when the Mayor commences his mean, provoking speech, we have a delightful orchestral phrase which hits off the mock dignity of that pompous person to a nicety:

Passing over the angry speech, 'No trifling! I can't wait,' which is uttered vivacissimo in two-four time with many rapid quaver triplets, as if the 'Piper' could not get his scornful words out fast enough, we arrive, vid the Mayor's strongly-declained insults, at the point, 'Once more he stept into the street,' whence the chorus remains in possession of the field to the end of the work. For eight bars, in a tuneful strain, tranquillo e dolce, the voices are unaccompanied:

No. 12.
Tranquillo e dolce.

Once more he stepped in - to the street; And to his lips a-gain Laid his long pipe of smooth straight cane; &c.

then a soft oboe 'call' of two notes (f and g) is heard, and ten times repeated as the sole accompaniment, an effect as strangely poetic as it is daringly simple. Soon, however, we become aware that the aforesaid 'call' was intended to foreshadow the following rhythmic metamorphosis of the 'Piper' theme:

No. 13.

p

and that the poet's lines—

And ere he blew three notes (such sweet
Soft notes as yet musician's cunning Never gave the enraptured air), debarred our most painstaking composer from giving us more than these two notes of the theme until he arrived at:

There was a rustling, that seemed like a bustling
Of merry crowds justling, at pitching and hustling, &c.

Sir Hubert has dealt lovingly with the famous description of the children gathering and pressing eagerly after the wizard Piper. Voices and instruments are busier than ever, the latter chiefly with the various forms of the 'Piper' theme, or fragments thereof (e.g., Ex. 4a). The favourite device of six quavers in the voice parts against eight semiquavers in the orchestral is used with excellent effect at 'Tripping and skipping,' &c., and the movement is worked up in the most exhilarating fashion. The notes of Chopin's Funeral March, which also accompanied the drowning of the rats, are heard again (an expedient of doubtful value, surely!), as if to presage the coming tragedy. They appear as a counterpoint below a minor version of the 'Piper' theme, and serve momentarily to hush the warbling choir. But the orchestra soon gets back to f, and the chorus lags not behind,—

When lo! as they reached the mountain's side,
A wondrous portal opened wide.

These suggestive lines have generated the most beautiful page in Sir Hubert's work: a descriptive passage which almost brings before our mind's eye the opening of the 'wondrous portal.' Given appropriately 'mystic' orchestration (the Full Score was not available for this article), these expanding chords:

No. 14.

p A wondrous por - tal o - pened wide, &c.

should introduce a feeling of real solemnity into the work. Nor is the new mood allowed henceforth to be absent. In fact, the music becomes more and more impressive until the end. Yet more metamorphoses—rhythmic, melodic, and harmonic, of the 'Piper' theme—supply material for some of the remaining pages, until at the line 'And on the great church window' the chorale-like theme, Ex. 5, appears with noble effect, and leads to an impressive orchestral peroration, in which the 'Piper' theme plays an important part:

No. 15.

p

Thus concludes a work the varied charms of which cannot possibly be made patent to the reader in a short analysis. The composer's music is of such splendid texture, and it is all so much of a piece, that to quote a few bars here and there is almost a sacrilegious proceeding for which it is necessary to do exceeding great penance. The work must be studied as a whole; or, better still, it must be heard. It is destined to give delight to all who are not yet hopelessly blind to beauty in simple raiment. Was it not Brahms who, near the end of his great life, sadly remarked to a student: 'My dear young friend, I have throughout my life tried to be as simple as Mozart, yet tried in vain.' A master understands the almost paralysing difficulty of using simple means nowadays in an individual way to a great and impressive end. Sir Hubert Parry's beautiful and original 'Pied Piper' is emphatically the 'simple,' but in its way all but perfect work of a real master.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED IN THE YEAR 1844.

THE MUSICAL TIMES is the oldest English journal devoted to music and musicians; moreover, its existence has exceeded that of any other musical journal ever issued in this country. Started in June, 1844, it first appeared in the form of a modest sheet of eight pages; but in the intervening sixty years it has, like Topsy, "grewed," to about seventy pages every month.

Biography has been a special feature during recent years. Upwards of seventy Biographical Sketches, with special supplement portraits, have appeared since July, 1897. These articles have been received with much favour not only at home and abroad, but in Britain beyond the seas. English and foreign musicians of eminence, contemporary and bygone, have been included in this large gallery of MUSICAL TIMES Biographical Sketches: the subjoined list of names speaks for itself.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES WITH SPECIAL PORTRAITS THAT HAVE APPEARED BETWEEN JULY, 1897, AND OCTOBER, 1905.

Illustrations have become an important and almost indispensable adjunct of present-day periodicals. This much-appreciated feature has of late been considerably developed in the pages of THE MUSICAL TIMES. The articles on English Cathedrals, London Churches, Colleges, &c., by "Dotted Crotchet," have furnished scope for the pictorial embellishment of the descriptive matter relating to these interesting subjects. The following places of interest have been included in the survey:

This illustrated series will be continued, and also the articles on important musical libraries, public and private.

The survey under the heading Church and Organ Music has been greatly extended. The aim has been to provide matter that shall be both interesting and of practical helpfulness to those who officiate in "Quires and places where they sing."

The old-established characteristics of THE MUSICAL TIMES have been brought up to date. The "Occasional Notes" cover a wide range of subjects, and records of music-makings in various centres of musical activity are supplied by the leading writers on music abroad and in the Provinces. In the "Answers to Correspondents" section, no pains are spared in furnishing satisfactory replies to the questions asked, even though the interrogations be, as they often are, posers.

Reference may be made to the music—anthems or part-songs—appearing month by month, and to other well-known features of this old-established journal. THE MUSICAL TIMES has a large circle of friends and well-wishers in various parts of the world; and the many gratifying tokens of appreciation that are constantly being received, not only by letter but by frequent quotation in the Press, act as a stimulus to the Editor to increase the brightness of its pages and to make the paper more acceptable in the future even than in the past.

THE MUSICAL TIMES is published on the 1st of every month. Price 4d.

ANTHEMS.

Behold, I come quickly. There is none that can resist Thy voice. By Ivor Atkins.

O everlasting Light. By John E. West.

I will go unto the Altar of God. By Henry Gadsby.

Thou art a Priest for ever. By Samuel Wesley.

Come, Holy Ghost. Anthem for unaccompanied singing. By Palestina.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

The first of the above anthems by the gifted organist of Worcester Cathedral, is a remarkably terse and impressive setting of verses from the twenty-second chapter of Revelation. It opens solemnly in the key of E minor, but at the words 'I am Alpha and Omega' a most effective transition is made into the dominant, while the close is also instinct with solemnity. The other anthem is composed for this year's Gloucester Diocesan Choral Music Festival. The music is laid out on broad lines, and the form is sufficiently extended to make the work suitable for festivals. It opens with a four-part chorus of vigorous character, in which occur some effective passages in imitation. The second section, for soprano solo or semi-chorus, is devotional in expression, and after it a return is made to the opening, which in shortened form concludes the anthem.

Mr. West has taken for his text words from Lydley's 'Prayers,' attributed to the year 1566, and their deep devotional spirit is happily accentuated by the music, which is written to be sung unaccompanied. A well-trained choir will be necessary to fulfil the composer's intentions, although there are no difficulties which are not justified by proportionate effect. In sundry passages great harmonic richness is obtained by doubling the respective parts, but the greater portion of the work is in four-part harmony.

'I will go unto the Altar of God,' by Mr. Henry Gadsby, belongs to the excellent series of 'Novello's Short Anthems,' and is an admirable example of its class. The music is flowing and graceful, the parts moving melodiously and independently. At the close a very effective use is made of the chord of the dominant major ninth.

Amidst the pressure of the present it is well at times to revert to the past, and revised versions of anthems by the old masters of church music are ever to be welcomed. The anthem by the elder Wesley is a particularly fine example of this great church musician. It is laid out for soprano, first and second alto, first and second tenor, and bass, and is intended to be sung without accompaniment. The opening is very striking, and the reiteration of the ascending scale-passage allied to the words 'After the order of Melchizedek' has a singularly stirring effect.

Devotional, dignified and solemn are the adjectives which occur to the mind on reading Palestina's anthem 'Come, Holy Ghost,' and the consonant character of the harmonic scheme is peculiarly refreshing after the prevalence of torturing dissonances in modern works.

The Cathedrals of England and Wales. By T. Francis Bumpus. First Series.

[T. Werner Laurie.]

The author of this attractive book has already proved himself to be a congenial cathedral cicerone. His previous volumes have treated of various sanctuaries in France and North Germany respectively, and now he gives the result of visits paid by him to nine English cathedrals, together with an introductory essay of architectural import. A well-qualified ecclesiologist, Mr. Bumpus pleasantly imparts much information on the stately sanctuaries he so graphically describes, more especially the structures and the changes they have at various times undergone. Music, however, finds a place in this cathedral survey. In this respect one of the most interesting references is to an ancient Hereford Office Book, which William Hawes, in 1834, discovered on a bookstand in Drury Lane! Upon examination this volume turned out to be an 'Antiphonarium' of 1265, containing the old 'Hereford Use.' Hawes communicated his 'find' to the Dean and Chapter of Hereford, who at once agreed to purchase the treasure found at Drury Lane for the sum of twelve guineas, whereby the precious MS. returned to its old home. As Dr. S. S. Wesley was at that time organist of Hereford Cathedral, this 'Antiphonarium' was doubtless submitted to his inspection. Mr. Bumpus's very readable pages are interspersed with some excellent illustrations: his book is sure to have many readers, and the second and third series—the three volumes are to include nineteen cathedrals—will be looked forward to with pleasure.

VIOLIN MUSIC.

A Modern School for the Violin. Fourth Book of Studies. Book IVb. By August Wilhelmj and James Brown.

The Junior Violinist. Edited by C. Egerton Lowe. Book 24. Four Characteristic Pieces for Violin and Pianoforte. By Herman Koenig.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

To those familiar with the earlier parts of 'A Modern School for the Violin,' the recently issued Fourth Book of Studies may come somewhat as a surprise. With the exception of a few special studies by the authors and two by Spohr and Kreutzer, the contents are devoted to excerpts from well-known classical and modern violin solos. These are grouped in sections, each exemplifying a branch of technique expected to be previously prepared from Book IVa, designed to be taken concurrently with IVb. The idea is excellent; first by convincing the student how greatly the practice of technique facilitates in overcoming the difficulties invariably encountered in advanced pieces of every description, and secondly by keeping before him a high and elevated aim even when engaged in the daily routine or drudgery of purely mechanical exercises.

A single example from the present book will suffice to show its purpose. The first section is devoted to 'Passages formed of Scales and Arpeggi.' Here are shown extracts culled from familiar works by Beethoven, De Beriot, Saint-Saëns, Mendelssohn and Schubert, while reference is made to suitable studies dealing with the same matter by Kreutzer and Fiorillo. Similarly treated are such subjects as 'Passages on the G string,' 'Firmness of Stop and Intonation,' 'Solid and Spring Staccato,' 'Octave Passages,' 'Double Notes,' 'Harmonics,' &c.

The Junior Violinist Series continues to supply young players with good material for study and recreation. The latest addition, Book 24, contains 'Four Characteristic Pieces' by Herman Koenig, entitled, respectively, Romance, Humoresque, Intermezzo and Arioso. Short, melodious and effective solos, they are admirably suited to those who have not yet left the first position.

Te Deum laudamus in C. By E. Markham Lee.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

Dr. Lee writes with long experience of the capabilities of average church choirs and knowledge of what is required by the majority of congregations, the result in the present instance being a setting of the great Eastern hymn that is calculated to find widespread favour. The sequential form of melody has been adopted, the tonality kept distinct, and for the most part the harmonic scheme is diatonic. The voice parts are well varied and effectively supported by the organ accompaniment, and repetition of the words only occurs in one sentence.

If music be the food of love. Glee for A.T.T.B. 'Words by Shakespeare, music by George Benson.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

This is a charming setting of lines that truly crave for music. The part-writing is singularly flowing and graceful, and the romantic spirit of Shakespeare's words seems to have taken possession of the composer. The closing section is particularly beautiful.

TWO-PART SONGS FOR FEMALE OR BOYS' VOICES.

Over the Oceans. When love hath entangled. Op. 20, Nos. 1 & 2. Music by Brahms. English words by Paul England.

Charming Chloe. Words by Robert Burns. Music by E. T. Sweeting.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

The above two-part songs (for female or boys' voices) by Brahms have not hitherto been published in a cheap form, and the English translation of Herder's lines is new and, it may be added, excellent. They might with advantage be sung successively, the text being respectively parts one and two of 'Weg der Liebe' ('Love's way'). The music is smooth and flowing in character, and while well adapted for choirs would also form effective duets for soprano and mezzo-soprano voices.

Dr. Sweeting has set Burns's lines to dainty music which trips along in harmonious accord with the poet's description of the gait of the charming Chloe 'ow'r the pearly lawn.'

THE SHEFFIELD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The programme of the Sheffield Festival, on October 4-6, was grouped about four choral works of great magnitude and importance, Bach's B minor Mass, Handel's 'Messiah,' Mozart's 'Requiem' and Berlioz's 'Faust.' Of these the Sheffield chorus, taught by one as able, enthusiastic, and thorough as Dr. Coward, might be trusted to render a good account, while the works themselves are so well known that one word might have sufficed to described their effect had it not been that a fresh factor was introduced into the matter by the co-operation of one new to this country in the capacity of a festival conductor, Mr. Felix Weingartner. As Mr. Henry J. Wood, who did so well for Sheffield three years ago, was unable to resume the responsibility of conductor, a successor had to be chosen, and the choice fell upon Mr. Weingartner who, it may be recollected, had already conducted a Sheffield chorus at Professor Kruse's London Festival in April of last year, and whose success on that occasion may well have inspired the Committee with confidence in his powers. Possibly patriotic considerations might lead me to desire that a Briton could have been found for the post; but if the Sheffield people simply wanted the very best conductor procurable, there are not many names which could be placed in the same rank as Mr. Weingartner's. He amply justified the confidence placed in him, for he is not only technically an accomplished conductor, with distinct magnetic power and without any objectionable mannerisms, but he is also a fine artist, whose readings, even where one may not agree with them, are always musically and poetical. Speaking generally, he leaned towards brilliance rather than dignity, and to many it seemed that his reading of the B minor Mass suffered in consequence. For instance, while the 'Cum Sancto Spiritu' was quite magnificent, the 'Sanctus' was decidedly lacking in the overwhelming effect of majesty of which it is capable. If Mr. Weingartner failed to probe the depths of Bach's music, or to quite realize the serenity one expects in the quieter movements of Mozart's 'Requiem,' he gave a fine and virile interpretation of Handel, and in Berlioz's 'Faust' achieved an absolute triumph. The whole reading was full of vitality, and the energy, colour and diablerie of the music can never have been more completely realized than in this remarkable performance. The scene in Auerbach's cellar had for once the exact feeling of reckless joviality, and the burlesque 'Amen' was superbly sung, and impressed one as a grim parody rather than as a bad imitation of an ordinary Handelian figure.

The novelties were not numerous, but were of more than average interest. Two only were entirely new. Mr. Frederic Cliffe's setting of Kingsley's 'Ode to the North-East Wind' may at once be described as a composition which is as fresh and breezy as its subject suggests, full of energy and go, and, having regard to the nature of the poem, remarkably varied in character. The adroit and appropriate interpolation of a purely orchestral movement, a Nocturne, is in this respect most effective, and while it supplies a suitable contrast, it is brought into logical connection with its context by the introduction of thematic material already heard. The other novelty was a setting of Milton's 'Ode on Time' by Mr. Nicholas Gatty, a young musician who has family ties with Sheffield. If any apprehension were felt lest the appearance of his work in the programme should be due to favour rather than merit, it was dissipated on a hearing, for the music, though ambitious and aiming at bigness of effect, is beautiful and truly impressive, perhaps almost too continuously strenuous, but showing that the majesty of Milton's verse has been thoroughly realized, and to a great degree reproduced, by the composer. Three other compositions, if not heard for the first time, were practically new to this country. They were all by Mr. Weingartner, and the compliment implied was so deserved that it silenced any doubts whether it was wise to take up so large a proportion of the programme with the music of any one composer of smaller rank than the greatest. His second symphony (in E flat) has been heard once in London. It is an enormously clever and elaborate work, with moments of inspiration, as in the first subject of the slow movement and the whole of the Scherzo, but its spontaneity is not always apparent, and some portions smell of the lamp. The two eight-part choruses, which the composer has dedicated to Dr. Coward and his Sheffield Choral Union, are certainly calculated in their effects, but are more convincing than many of his compositions. 'The House of Dreams' is a highly successful attempt to conjure up an atmosphere of mystery and magic. It is also about as severe a test of intonation as a chorus could possibly endure, and its performance was one of the chief triumphs of the Festival choir. The other piece, 'The Song of the Storm,' is one of the most effective instances of piling up a gigantic climax that can be found, or even imagined. Extra brass instruments are stationed behind the chorus, at each side of the organ, just as in Verdi's 'Requiem,' and their fanfares are cleverly employed to aid in the culminating point of the finely constructed climax. What may appropriately be called a perfect tornado of sound is the result, but though the music is as loud as anything I ever heard, it is still music, and not mere noise. The contours of the design are clear, and it is admirably worked out. Sung with all the vigour of the Sheffield singers, it produced a tremendous effect, too overwhelming for the hall, which is now the one weak point in the Sheffield Festival. It not only fails to accommodate as many as would like to attend, and cramps those who manage to secure seats, but it stands in the way of a band that is at all worthy of the chorus, and it detracts from the colour and charm which a more spacious and resonant room would give to the tone of the chorus. There is already much talk of a new concert-hall for Sheffield, and this, with the energy and generosity which the Sheffield people have hitherto shown, should be no impossibility, so it is to be hoped the project will thrive, and bear fruit before 1908!

The rest of the programme (six concerts in all) may be rapidly surveyed. Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri' was given with unusual brilliance, but failed to obviate the feeling of monotony which it engenders. Max Bruch's 'Fritzhof' proved pleasant, but not distinguished, and Brahms's beautiful 'Nanie' completed the record of choral works. The closing scene from Tchaikovsky's 'Eugene Onegin' was interesting, and the singing of the two solo parts by Mrs. Henry J. Wood and Mr. F. Austin marked a distinct advance in their art. Brahms's violin concerto was played by Mr. Kreisler with the noblest artistic expression. A supremely fine reading of the 'Eroica' symphony, played in commemoration of the centenary of its first performance, and the 'Euryanthe' overture, finish the list.

Mr. Weingartner conducted the entire Festival, novelties included. There was a band of 73 (including the organist, Mr. J. W. Phillips), thoroughly competent individually, but absurdly out of proportion to the chorus of over 300. Mr. Wendling, the leader, deserves especial praise for his very fine playing of the obblati in Bach's Mass and elsewhere. The principal vocalists were Miss Evangeline Florence, Miss Agnes Nicholls, and Mrs. Henry J. Wood; Miss Ada Crossley and Miss Muriel Foster; Messrs. Coates, Elwes, and Green; Messrs. Austin, Black, and Lane Wilson, together with some capable local singers, all of whom were given in the prospectus in alphabetical order, a plan which has much to recommend it.

The organization of the Festival was excellent, and in this connection mention must be made of Mr. T. Walter Hall, the Chairman of the Executive, and Messrs. Willoughby Firth and N. W. Burbidge, the Hon. Secretaries, who have worked hard for the success they have deservedly achieved.

BLACKPOOL COMPETITION FESTIVAL,

OCTOBER 5, 6, 7.

The Fifth Annual Competitive Musical Festival was in every way a remarkable success. The scheme, which is founded upon that evolved by its sister sea-side resort, Morecambe, is in its turn a model of what a festival of this kind should aim to accomplish. It is run by a committee of the chief residents of the town, none of whom, not even the secretary, Mr. Lionel H. Franceys, have any pecuniary interest in its success. This committee includes men possessing educated taste, who regard musical art seriously and are determined to widen the outlook and to spiritualize the aims of the splendid executive resources for which they so successfully cater. There is, therefore, nothing ad captandum in the choice of music, in fact it might seem to many who peruse the handsome programme-book of forty-eight pages, with its list of about fifty pieces to be prepared in thirty-five different classes, that the tests were too severe, not only for the 3,000 or more competitors to perform, but for the even larger number of persons who came to listen. The result, however, amply justified the belief of the promoters in the potential capacity and enthusiasm of the musical organizations and individuals appealed to.

As to the charge that festivals of this type merely provide 'pots for pot-hunters,' the writer of the learned and eloquent preface to the Festival book says:

'With reference to "pot hunting," it would be as well to assure our audience that, after going carefully into the question with regard to the contests included in the scope of this Festival, there is only one conclusion to be arrived at, and that is that more expense is involved in preparing and conveying the competitors to Blackpool than will ever be returned to them in prize money. Then, what is the attraction? The chief attraction is the measuring of their own and each other's powers before perfectly impartial judges, with the additional pleasure of attending what may be termed an ecumenical council of musical votaries, to which, without doubt, should be added the singing and hearing of music not chosen simply and solely to meet the popular tastes, but music that otherwise would, sad to say, be seldom or never heard, or attempted by the majority of those present. Examine the programme, and then say how many of the pieces would ever have come under your notice but for this and kindred Festivals. Would the names of Brahms, Cornelius, MacDowell, and numbers of others ever have had the significance they have for the thousands to whom they are now household words? For the sake of illustration, during the five years that this Festival has been in existence upwards of 12,000 competitors have presented themselves in the various competitions. We could mention many that have, even in that short space of time, made names for themselves in the musical profession, apart from the thousands comprised in the audiences to whom the results achieved have come as a revelation.'

We can give only a summary account of the results of the chief competitions.

MIXED-VOICE CHOIR (CHALLENGE SHIELD CLASS). TEST-PIECES.

Madrigal—'As Vesta was' Weekes.
Part-song—'Spanish Serenade' Elgar.
Motet (eight-part)—'The surrender of the soul' ('Liebe') Cornelius.
Chorus—'Now for the dance' Berlioz.
1st, Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. H. Whittaker); 2nd, Southport Choir (Mr. W. Tattersall); 3rd, Padiham Vocal Union (Mr. E. Hitchon).

MALE-VOICE CHOIR (TENOR LEAD). TEST-PIECES.

Part-song—'Nightfall' Schumann.
Part-song—'Give a rouse' Granville Bantock.
Part-song, 9 parts (6 Tenor, 3 Bass)—'The Old Soldier's Dream' ('Der alte Soldat') Cornelius.
Part-song—'From the Sea' E. A. MacDowell.

1st, Manchester Orpheus Glee Society (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt); 2nd, Habersham Glee Union (Mr. E. Hitchon); 3rd, Southport Vocal Union (Mr. J. C. Clarke). Seven choirs sang.

It is worthy of note that the two pieces that most profoundly affected the audience and adjudicators were those by Cornelius. Dr. MacDowell's grim and powerful part-song was also startlingly effective.

In the male-voice alto-lead section the Nelson Apollo Glee Union (Mr. T. Wilkinson) came out first, and in the chief female-voice choir section, the Blackpool Society (Mr. H. Whittaker) were the winners. Another Blackpool choir, under Mr. Clifford Higgin, gained the first-prize in the second mixed-voice choir section, the test-pieces for which were the part-songs 'All ye woods' (Lahee) and 'The Serenade' (Brahms). In all thirty-four choirs competed in the adult choral sections. The orchestral section brought forward two highly competent full orchestras, that from Colne (Mr. J. L. Wildman) being pronounced a little better than that from Nelson (Mr. C. Townsley). The test-piece was Mendelssohn's overture to 'The Son and Stranger.' When the strings of each orchestra competed in performing B. Volkmann's Serenade in F (Op. 6) for strings, the position was reversed.

There were 112 entries in the solo-singing section, 10 for the duets, and 17 for the quartets. On the children's day 23 school choirs, 29 solo singers (boys and girls), 54 pianoforte players and 19 violinists were heard. Many of the children's choirs sang with remarkable beauty of tone and expression, and nine action-songs were performed with quite fascinating effect. At the evening concert the children combined to give an excellent performance of the cantata 'Orpheus' (words by Wordsworth and music by George Rathbone) under the skilful direction of Mr. H. Whittaker.

The adjudicators were Mr. C. H. Fogg, Madame Edith Hands, Dr. McNaught, Mr. Percy Pitt, Dr. G. R. Sinclair, and Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor.

The arrangements for the public and the 3,000 competitors were skilfully devised and admirably carried out. In this connection the name of Councillor John Collins deserves special recognition.

The annual Festival of the three cathedral choirs of Chichester, Salisbury, and Winchester, was held at Salisbury Cathedral on September 26, when the service-music included Stanford's Service in A and the following anthems: 'Sing joyfully' (Byrd), 'If the Lord Himself' (Walmisley), and 'I saw the Lord' (Stainer). The accompaniments were played by Mr. C. F. South, Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, and Dr. Prendergast, organists respectively of the cathedrals of Salisbury, Chichester, and Winchester. This is the second Festival of the 'three choirs' above-named, the first having taken place last year at Chichester, where the idea originated with Dean Hannah.

THE BRISTOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Though there was only one new work, and that not of great magnitude, given at the eleventh Bristol Festival, which took place on October 11–14, there was a pleasant freshness given to the programme by three very interesting revivals, and a recent work quite new to this country. The most important of these was a Mass in C minor by Mozart. This is in reality a pasticcio, the nucleus being the incomplete Mass (Köchel, No. 427) which Mozart wrote in fulfilment of a promise made on his marriage. The work seems to have never been finished, and it is surmised that the missing numbers were supplied from some of Mozart's earlier Masses. This may have served as a cue to Dr. Alois Schmitt, who, realising that this fragment contained some of Mozart's noblest Church music, has adopted a similar method in editing and completing this Mass. The whole proceeding recalls the stranger history of Mozart's other great Church work, the 'Requiem,' and the analogy is strengthened by the fact that in this case also the music of the opening Kyrie has been used as a basis for the concluding Agnus Dei. In addition to this, Dr. Schmitt has completed the instrumentation where necessary, and has rendered the work suitable for liturgical as well as concert use. After hearing the Mass, one must admit that the work was worth doing, and that it has been most ably done. One does not, of course, look for the same unity of conception in eighteenth-century music which is expected nowadays, but having regard to this, the absence of any suggestion of patchwork is still noteworthy, and I think it may be said the various movements succeed each other at least as smoothly and logically as those of the 'Requiem,' and the interpolated portions of the Credo, from the 'Crucifixus' to the 'Et vitam venturi,' fit in their places admirably. Many of the choruses are bigger and loftier in conception than almost any of Mozart's choral compositions, not excluding even the 'Requiem'; the 'Qui tollis,' for double chorus, is a case in point, and the Credo, the Kyrie, and the 'Cum Sancto Spiritu' may also be quoted in this connection. The solo writing is in the florid style of a Rococo period, but even where it is at its lightest, Mozart's purity of style prevents it from becoming flippant, and here the artistic singing of the important and very exacting soprano solo parts by Madame Albani and Miss Agnes Nicholls deserves the heartiest admiration. This arrangement was given for the first time in Dresden four years ago, and this was its first hearing in this country, a strange thing to record of an important work by Mozart.

Another interesting revival was that of 'Lelio,' given, as intended by Berlioz, by way of a sequel to his 'Symphonie Fantastique,' and with all the stage effects directed to be observed. As a work of art it is indeed a pasticcio; a number of pieces hanging together on the slender thread of a monologue which turns from one topic to another simply in order to give the cue for the introduction of some early composition Berlioz wished to resurrect—save where he makes the actor his own mouthpiece to vent his spite against Fétis, or to declare his passion for Miss Smithson. The individual portions are of varied interest, but some, such as the 'Tempest' fantasia, are characteristic of Berlioz in his most original and fanciful mood. The chorus of Shades, very reminiscent of Gluck, and the fragment styled 'La Harpe Éolienne' are also very beautiful. The part of Lelio was taken by Mr. Lawrence Irving, who wisely abridged his lines, and acted so earnestly as to minimise the bombast of this singular monologue, and the solos were efficiently sung by Mr. Vivian Bennetts and Mr. C. Knowles.

Mendelssohn's music to 'Edipus at Colonus' is so seldom heard that its performance may almost be regarded as a revival. Though it came at the close of an absurdly lengthy programme, its quiet dignity was felt, and it served to introduce the fine male-voice choir of 350 singers, the like of which one doubts if any other English city could supply. The chief parts were recited by Mr. Irving and Miss Mabel Hackney.

One of the sensations of the Festival was Richard Strauss's choral ballad 'Taillefer,' heard on this occasion for the first time in this country. Though most elaborately scored, its main lines are clear enough; it has plenty of tunefulness, and even the battle scene—though it may suggest 'confused noise, and garments rolled in blood'—is not as explosive or dissonant as one might have expected. Probably Strauss realized that his heavy ordnance would be out of place at the Battle of Hastings. The music has quite a flavour of the ballad in many parts, but while its brilliance is as remarkable as ever, the subject, with its rapid action, does not admit of dwelling upon a mood in the way to best create a musical atmosphere. It is, however, a powerful work, and should find admirers even among those who still shrink from the uncouth dissonances of the battle scene in 'Heldenleben.' The only actual novelty was a dramatic scena, based on a speech in Byron's tragedy 'Marino Faliero,' by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke, who, since his festival début at Leeds last year, is becoming quite a festival favourite. It is original and dramatic in conception, but its fault is a certain lack of continuity, giving the impression of patchiness.

The rest of the programme was on familiar lines. It began with 'Elijah,' it ended with 'Messiah,' and it included 'Lohengrin,' 'The Dream of Gerontius,' and 'The Mount of Olives' (given in the old, and, as one hoped, obsolete guise of 'Engedi'!). As both 'Messiah' and 'Lohengrin' were given without cuts, the latter finishing at thirteen minutes before midnight, it may be assumed that the Bristol people like plenty for their money, though it must be admitted that quality was by no means sacrificed to quantity, for Mr. Riseley, save for a slight inclination to rush the pace, gave exceedingly good performances. His energy is indeed remarkable, for he is both choirmaster and conductor, and the only thing in the Festival which he did not conduct was Mr. Holbrooke's scena. The large chorus, of 460 voices, produces hardly the volume of sound one would expect from its numbers; but if it lack the weight of tone one finds in the North, it has many excellent qualities, notably a pleasant, supple, vocal style, great refinement and power of expression. The band of 90—supplemented for Dr. Strauss's work—was an excellent one, Mr. A. W. Payne being leader, and Mr. G. H. Riseley organist.

The miscellaneous features of the Festival included the appearance of Madame Melba, who sang some well-worn examples of Italian operatic music, and attracted the biggest house of the Festival. Mr. Kreisler interpreted the Beethoven concerto magnificently, and the Misses Mathilde and Adela Verne played one of Mozart's concertos for two pianofortes (No. 17, in E flat) most artistically, the latter also taking the solo part in Liszt's E flat concerto.

The principal vocalists, in addition to those already named, were Miss Ada Crossley, Miss Muriel Foster, and Madame Kirkby Lunn; Messrs. Coates, Ben Davies, and Lloyd Chandos; Messrs. Frangcon-Davies, Francis Braun, and Andrew Black. Messrs. Greville Edwards and C. T. Budgett acted as honorary secretaries, Mr. W. J. Kidner retaining the post of secretary which he has filled so ably for a good many years past.

THE AMERICAN WORCESTER FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, October 10, 1905.

The forty-eighth Festival of the Worcester County Musical Association took place in Worcester, Mass., in the last week of September. It began with a performance of Mozart's 'Requiem,' followed by César Franck's 'The Beatitudes,' two works which, by a singular coincidence, were this year also on the list of its English namesake. I have attended the majority of the Worcester Festivals during the last twenty years, and I never attended a better one, or at least one that gave me more satisfaction. From a popular and financial point of view the climax in the history of the Festivals, which date back to the old New England choir unions called Singing Conventions, was reached about 1887, when much misguided enthusiasm used to be worked up by the engagement of an operatic prima-donna, in whom all the interest used to centre, to the neglect of chorus and orchestra, and the indifference of management and public alike to the only things which justified the existence of the meetings. The policy eventually worked its own ruin, and it required considerable hardihood as well as devotion in the Festival management to resolve upon a curtailment of the popular features, and at the same time an advance in artistic dignity. Under the capable leadership of young men of energy like George W. Chadwick, Wallace Goodrich, and Franz Kneisel, the work has been carried on, and now there seems no longer a danger of a suspension of the Festivals, as was the case five years ago. At one of the first Festivals which I attended I recall that after one of Bach's organ pieces had opened a concert, a gentle-voiced tenor sang 'A Bedouin's love-song,' and that nothing excited greater enthusiasm, except the gowns and airs of the prima-donna on 'artists' night.'

At the Festival this year there were five concerts instead of eight, as formerly, and the choir sang Mozart's 'Requiem,' five numbers of 'The Beatitudes,' including the prologue, Bruckner's 'Te Deum,' the choral part of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and the hymn in the conclusion of Wagner's 'Kaisermarsch.' All this music the choir learned ab ovo, so to speak, except the selections from César Franck's work. It was therefore a special delight to note the enthusiasm of the singers, the firmness of the attacks, the fine volume of tone, and the nice attention to expression. The difficulties of the Choral Symphony were splendidly overcome, and Bruckner's 'Te Deum' received an inspiring performance.

It is the custom at the Worcester Festival since it fell into the hands of the younger men to divide the work of direction—Mr. Goodrich, who is the choirmaster throughout the year, assuming charge of the choral works, and Mr. Kneisel of the instrumental. There is still an overfondness for solo singing among the Festival patrons, so that it has not yet been possible to lift the orchestral features to the dignity which they ought to have. Nevertheless, a new composition by an American musician of high rank was brought forward, and besides some lighter measures, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the overture from Bach's Suite in D, Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony, the second part ('Gretchen; a character piece') of Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony, were performed. Mr. Harold Bauer played Tchaikovsky's Piano-forte Concerto in B flat minor, and Mdlle. Inez Jolivet (a French violinist hailing from London, as I am told), Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole' and Sarasate's 'Zigeunerweisen.' The orchestral novelty was a symphonic poem entitled 'Cleopatra,' which begins with a hint at the music of the waters when the Egyptian's barge, 'with gilded stern and outspread sails of purple,' came sailing up the river Cydnus 'while oars of silver beat time to the music of flutes and fides and harps,' and closes with a swelling union of the principal themes, in which we may, if we wish, hear a celebration of the noble burial which Cæsar commanded when Cleopatra was 'buried by her Antony.' Between the extremes the music seems to be concerned with the languorous and consuming passion of the siren and the undoing of the soldier. The work is opulent in colour, and, though threateningly long, effective; it was well received.

H. E. KREHBIEL.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

It is satisfactory to note that the most successful of the novelties produced at the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts have been by British composers. This specially applies to 'Four Studies from Victor Hugo,' by Mr. Cecil Forsyth, an ex-student of the Royal College, where he studied under Sir Charles Stanford and M. Georges Jacobi. The 'Four Studies' have severally for their subject the characters of Jean Valjean, Cosette, Fantine and Gavroche in Victor Hugo's novel 'Les Misérables,' and the music is not only picturesquely imaginative and melodious, but is strong in conception and directness of expression. This in particular is the case with the first Study, which is singularly significant, and so delighted the audience on September 23 that the composer was there and then called to the platform, and at the conclusion of the last Study he received quite an ovation. The success was so pronounced that the work was repeated later in the season, the only novelty which earned this distinction.

The first performance in England of Tchaikovsky's 'Ballade Symphonique, Le Voyerode' (Op. 78) took place on September 28. This work must not be confused with Tchaikovsky's early opera 'Voyerode' (Op. 3), nor with the composer's incidental music to Ostrowski's drama of that name. The symphonic poem is based on a melodramatic poem by Poushkin, wherein the Voyerode, deeming his wife unfaithful, orders his servant to shoot her, but is shot instead. It was composed in the autumn of 1890, scored during the following summer, and first performed at Moscow at a concert given by M. Siliti, and conducted by the composer on November 6, 1891. In its entirety it is not a satisfactory work; but it has one remarkably beautiful theme of pleadingly pathetic expression, which is effectively treated and imparts to the composition a distinction which otherwise it would not possess.

A notable programme was presented the following night, the principal works being Mozart's Concerto in E for two pianofortes, admirably played by the Misses Mathilde and Adela Verne, Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, and Dr. Strauss's 'Symphonia Domestica.' Contrast can scarcely go farther, and it was not Mozart or Bach who suffered by the inevitable comparison of ways and means.

On October 10 was brought to a first hearing in England Herr Siegmund von Hausegger's symphonic poem 'Barbarossa.' Its composer is a son of the writer on musical subjects, Friedrich von Hausegger, is thirty-three years of age, and is the conductor of the 'Museum' concerts at Frankfurt. The poetic basis of 'Barbarossa'—produced in 1902—is the legend of the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa. The first movement deals with the distress of the people and their longing for his return to redress their woes; the second, headed 'The enchanted mountain,' illustrates the shepherd's discovery of the spell-bound monarch in the depth of the forest; and the third, called 'The Awakening,' announces the freeing of Barbarossa and his return with his knights to his people. The thematic material is not sufficiently significant nor imposing for a work occupying fifty-five minutes in performance. The second movement is the most interesting and picturesque, but it is spun out, and ultra-development is a prevailing fault in the other numbers. The cleverness of the music is indubitable, but the ambition of the composer is greater, than his power of convincing expression, and the great length and chaotic nature of the work begets weariness of spirit.

Mr. Hamilton Harty's 'Irish' symphony in D minor had an enthusiastic reception on October 14. Based on fine old Irish folk-tunes, combined with original melodies of like character, tersely and rationally developed and admirably scored, the work is replete with life and beauty. The first movement, the most important, is exhilarating in its breeziness and manly vigour. The second number, having for its principal themes 'The blackberry blossom' and 'The girl I left behind me,' is delightfully gay, and its rollicking spirit is thoroughly Irish. The third section, an Andante, is full of tender sentiment and picturesque romance, and there is a touch of roystering devilry in the Finale that is irresistible.

Miss Kathleen Chabot, a very gifted young pianist and a pupil of Miss Fanny Davies, made a most successful first appearance on October 19, when she played the solo part in one of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodies with great brilliance and rare artistic charm.

ITALIAN OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN.

Hitherto the endeavour to establish an autumn season of grand opera in London has met with scanty encouragement, but the series of performances commenced at Covent Garden on October 5 have been so well attended that a turning in the long lane of financial failure would seem to be in sight. Various circumstances have contributed to this result. The King and Queen have extended their patronage to the scheme, and the Prince and Princess of Wales attended on the opening night; moreover, the Covent Garden Grand Opera Syndicate has joined forces with Messrs. Frank Rendle and Neil Forsyth and the San Carlo Grand Opera Company. The works that have been mounted do not call for criticism, as they are all well known, e.g., 'Il Trovatore,' 'Rigoletto,' 'Un Ballo in Maschera,' and 'Aida,' and Puccini's 'Manon Lescaut,' 'La Bohème,' 'La Tosca,' and 'Madame Butterfly.'

A considerable number of artists previously unknown in London have been introduced. The most promising is Signor Zenatello, who made his début on October 6 as Riccardo in 'Un Ballo in Maschera,' and subsequently appeared as Des Grieux in 'Manon,' Radames in 'Aida,' and Pinkerton in 'Madame Butterfly.' If Signori Biel and Giorgini were less successful, a new baritone, Signor Stracciari, created an excellent impression by his impersonation of the Count in 'Il Trovatore' on October 10. A notable bass is Signor Didur, who appeared as Colline in 'La Bohème' on the opening night, when De Maretri returned as Rodolfo after several years' absence. Other newcomers are Signori Wulmann, Badà, Thos and Wigley. Signora Giachetti made her reappearance on October 9 as Manon, and the greatest interest was evinced in this prima-donna's impersonation of Madame Butterfly on October 24. Other ladies who have so far contributed to the success of the season are Signore Buoninsegna, De Cisneros, and Trentini, and last, but not least, Madame Melba. Mention should also be made of Signor Sammarco, who has been a valuable help.

The well-trained chorus and orchestra are chiefly members of the San Carlo Company, while the new conductor, Signor Magnone, is a man of manifest insistence and great energy; under his direction a series of excellent ensembles have been secured.

London Concerts.

GLAZOUNOFF'S NEW VIOLIN CONCERTO.

To musicians the most memorable concert last month was that given at Queen's Hall on the seventeenth, when the marvellously gifted boy Mischa Elman introduced to the public M. Glazounoff's violin concerto in A minor, completed in the early part of the present year. The work is dedicated to M. Leopold Auer, who at the composer's request had undertaken to play it for the first time, but M. Glazounoff visiting the professor while he was giving Elman a lesson, was so impressed by his extraordinary ability that the composer asked M. Auer if he would allow Elman to give the first performance of the work, a request to which the distinguished violinist willingly assented.

The concerto consists of four clearly defined movements, but no break is made between them. Its principal theme, given out by the soloist, which opens the concerto, is graceful and expressive, and is frequently heard throughout the work. No less attractive is the second subject, and the whole of this section is charming music. The slow movement is built up with a melody of tender and feminine character, treated with great refinement. In the next portion, headed Agitato, are several brilliant passages for the soloist, and a peculiarity of its structure is a return to the first movement. The brilliant Finale is approached by an elaborate cadenza such as appeals to the hearts of virtuosos, and the concerto in its entirety is likely to increase its composer's popularity. Elman interpreted the solo part with wonderful aplomb and much charm of expression, and at the close the applause was loud and long. The lad was sympathetically supported by the Queen's Hall Orchestra (conductor Mr. Henry J. Wood), which also accompanied Miss Adela Verne, who played with notable fire and brilliancy the pianoforte part of Liszt's 'Hungarian Fantasia.'

The centenary of Nelson's death was celebrated by afternoon and evening concerts at the Albert Hall, by a special afternoon orchestral promenade concert at Queen's Hall, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, and a miscellaneous evening concert at the Crystal Palace. At each of these a more or less comprehensive selection of fine old sea songs was sung by well-known artists, and the enthusiastic applause they created may perhaps cause some of our vocalists to introduce these stirring and manly ditties more often at concerts. The orchestral works selected at Queen's Hall were Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Britannia' overture, Tchaikovsky's '1812' overture, Chopin's 'Funeral March,' the overture to 'The Flying Dutchman' and 'Reminiscences of England,' marked 'new,' by Mr. Fred Godfrey. The songs selected by Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Robert Radford were Davy's 'Bay of Biscay,' Boyce's 'Heart of Oak,' Braham's 'Death of Nelson,' and Knight's 'Rocked in the cradle of the deep,' and a special feature was Mr. Lewis Waller's recitation of Kipling's 'Ballad of the Clampheddown,' followed, by way of encore, with 'The Flag of England' by the same author.

Miss Eleanor Athelstan, the possessor of a beautiful voice, and Mr. Spencer Dyke, the clever young violinist, gave an agreeable recital at Bechstein Hall on October 19. Another evening of like character was provided on October 20 at Æolian Hall by Fröken Theodora Salicatti and Miss Carlotta Stubenrauch, both artists to whom it was a genuine pleasure to listen.—On October 23, at Bechstein Hall, Mr. Felix Swinstead gave a successful pianoforte recital.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The prospectus of the Philharmonic Society announces Berlioz's 'Faust' and 'Tannhäuser' as the principal works to be given during the coming season. The Queen's College Chamber Concerts promise visits from the Brodsky and Kruse quartets among other attractions. Numerous smaller musical forces are gathering for the winter's work, which will certainly afford much innocent and instructive pastime to young and old who are fortunate enough to possess a taste for the divine art and feel that even to strive after an unattainable ideal of performance is a worthy ambition bringing its own reward.

A small orchestra, conducted by Dr. F. Koeller, has begun a series of excellent concerts at popular prices. The encouragement given by the public has not hitherto been as great as the performances deserve; but it is much to be hoped that the taste for high-class music will grow steadily in a large population which has really never had much opportunity of knowing what good music really is.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Town Hall has recently undergone extensive internal alterations and improvements. These include the reconstruction and improvement of the platform, with new and better entrances and exits, while the seating arrangements in the galleries have also been improved, extra doors and gangways having been provided. The reopening of the building took place on September 30, with the annual Festival of the Sunday School Union, when some 600 children sang a number of songs and part-songs, under the direction of Mr. Thomas Facer. The Festival was continued for a week.

The first choral concert of the season was given in the Town Hall on October 12, when the City Choral Society presented for the third time Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' with Mr. Joseph O'Mara and Madame Kirkby Lunn in the title parts, Mr. Dalton Baker as the High Priest, and Messrs. Ripley Evans, R. L. Brown, S. Stoddard, and W. Bennett in subsidiary characters. The performance was good in every way, and Mr. F. W. Beard conducted. On October 19 the Festival Choral Society opened their session with Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' The principals were Madame Suzanne Adams (her first appearance in Birmingham), Miss Giulia Ravogli, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Andrew Black; with Messdames M. Thompson and E. Fowler, and Messrs. H. R. Kershaw, W. C. Hutchings, and C. R. Shum assisting in the double quartet. The part of the Youth was sweetly sung by Master Leonard Carrodus, a chorister of Hereford Cathedral and son of Mr. Bernhard Carrodus, leader of the orchestra. Fine as was the work of the soloists, it was eclipsed by that of the chorus, their singing being simply magnificent. The band, with Mr. Perkins at the organ, did well, and Dr. Sinclair conducted.

A concert was given in the Masonic Hall on September 26, by Miss Elma Baker. The daughter of a local alderman, Miss Baker possesses a well-trained soprano voice, and is already an artist. She was assisted by Miss Muriel Warwood (violinist), Miss Maud Nevill (pianist), and Mr. Ripley Evans (vocalist). Her début was a great success, and augurs well for a prosperous professional career. Mr. Fritz Kreisler gave a violin recital in the New Central Hall on October 3. Associated with him were Mr. Hamilton Harty (pianoforte) and Miss Glen Scott (vocalist). The great attraction at the first Harrison concert, held in the Town Hall, October 16, was Madame Melia. Among the new-comers on that occasion were Miss Jessie Goldsack, Miss Norah Drewitt, a pianist of more than ordinary attainments, Miss Evelyn Amethe, a clever young violinist, and Mr. Louis Fleury, a Parisian flautist. The concert party was completed by Mr. William Green, Mr. Albert Archdeacon, and Mr. F. T. Watkis. The same evening, in the Temperance Hall, a concert was given by the Temperance Philharmonic Choir, conducted by Mr. A. R. Witts, when a number of part-songs were well rendered.

The first Saturday Evening Concert in the Town Hall took place on October 14, when the Choral and Orchestral Association gave a performance of their conductor's (Mr. J. H. Adams) 'King Conor,' produced by the Festival Choral Society last season. The piece met with great success, Mr. Tom Howell ably giving the bass solos. The feature of the second part of the concert was Mr. Arthur Cooke's rendering of Rubinstein's pianoforte concerto in D minor, which greatly roused the enthusiasm of the audience. On October 21 the Midland Musical Society gave Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerton' and the third act of 'Lohengrin,' with Madame Effie Thomas, Mr. Samuel Masters, and Mr. Herbert Parker as principals. Mr. A. J. Cotton conducted. The Musical Matinees, directed by Mr. Oscar Pollack, were resumed at the Royal Society of Artists on October 7.

The prospectus of the Halford Concerts Society has now been issued. A symphony will be performed at each of the ten concerts, and new compositions will be produced, native art being represented by Elgar, Clement Harris, Cyril Scott, George Halford, Hamilton Harty, S. Coleridge-Taylor, and Norman O'Neil.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Bristol Choral Society has resumed its practices under the direction of Mr. George Riseley. The works taken in hand are Gounod's 'Faust' and 'Irene.'

The Bristol North Choral Society has commenced its season's work, and is rehearsing, under Mr. James Bending, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' and the 'Creation.'

At Weston-super-Mare the Philharmonic Society is studying Bach's 'A stronghold sure' and Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater.' Later on Sir Edward Elgar's 'King Olaf' and Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' will be taken in hand. Mr. Edward Cook (of Bristol) as heretofore conducts the Society.

The Clevedon Philharmonic Society has begun to practise Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul'; Gluck's 'Orfeo' and Stanford's 'The Revenge' are also to be rehearsed. The conductor is Mr. Edward Cook.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Annual General Meeting of the Feis Ceilidh Association was held at the Mansion House, the Lord Mayor of Dublin presiding, on October 10. The report of the committee proved to be more satisfactory than usual. By the exercise of economy the deficit of £197 has been reduced to £14, there being a profit on this year's Festival of £183. The reports of the adjudicators in the competitions showed that the Association is doing excellent work. Much regret is felt at the resignation of Miss Edith Oldham, who has held the difficult post of Hon. Sec. since the foundation of the Association some ten years ago. Miss Oldham was unanimously elected a Vice-President of the Association, therefore she will not have entirely severed her connection with the Feis Ceilidh.

The death is announced of Mr. W. H. Telford, Mus. Bac., Dublin, senior partner of the firm of Messrs. Telford & Telford, the well-known organ-builders of Dublin. Mr. Telford was well known in Dublin and throughout Ireland as a skilful organist, and was for many years the conductor of the now defunct Amateur Orchestral Union.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In regard to arrangements that have been made for this season's music-makings, Messrs. Paterson & Son have again engaged the Scottish Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Cowen, but in his absence concerts will be conducted by Herr von Hausegger, M. Edouard Colonne, and Dr. Richter. As usual, two of the concerts will be choral—the Choral Union giving 'The Apostles,' and Mr. Kirkhope's choir 'The Flying Dutchman.'

Of the leading choral societies, the Choral Union, in addition to 'The Apostles,' will perform the 'Messiah' and 'Elijah'; and besides 'The Flying Dutchman,' Mr. Kirkhope's choir have selected Spohr's 'Last Judgment.' The University Musical Society promise Bach's 'A stronghold sure' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Departure.' Mr. Moonie's choir have a heavy season's work before them—e.g., including 'Dixit Domini' (Leo); 'Stabat Mater' (Astorga); 'Missa Brevis' (Palestrina); a Mass by Orlando di Lasso; 'Death of Minnehaha' (Coleridge-Taylor); 'Erl King's Daughter' (Gade); and 'Messiah.'

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The performance of Berlioz's 'Faust,' as given by the Philharmonic Society last year, was so much appreciated that in answer to many requests the season was commenced with that work on October 16. The performance, given at the Cheltenham Town Hall, was extremely good, and the choir sang spiritedly and effectively under Mr. C. J. Phillips's enthusiastic conductorship. The soloists were Miss Gladys Lindsa, Mr. H. Boulderson, and Mr. Dalton Baker.

The Ledbury Musical Festival Society (conductor, Mr. Tom Woodward) gave a capital performance of 'Elijah' in the Parish Church, Ledbury, on October 5. The solo parts were sung by Miss Woodall, Miss Mildred Jones, Mr. H. Brearley, and Mr. Ivor Foster, and they were assisted in the double quartet by Mrs. T. Woodward, Miss Boyd, Mr. Wargent, and Mr. Woodward, sen. The band and chorus numbered 120, and Mr. Goodacre gave useful assistance on the organ.

In regard to the coming season, the Gloucester Choral Society has arranged to perform Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied Piper' and Dr. Brewer's 'A Song of Eden.' The Cirencester Society (conductor, Mr. Gibbons) is rehearsing Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Schubert's 'Song of Miriam.' The Tewkesbury Philharmonic Society is rehearsing Hodson's 'Golden Legend.'

Great regret has been felt throughout the county of Gloucester at the sudden death, on October 13, of Mr. Ivor Morgan, at the early age of twenty-one. He was deputy-organist of Gloucester Cathedral under Dr. Brewer, and was one of the most promising students at the Royal College of Music.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The newly-organized and admirably constituted Liverpool Symphony Orchestra's concert opened our season on October 2, when the excellent programme included Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, well played under Mr. Vasco Akeroyd's conductorship. Miss Gertrude Ross, a member of a talented local family, made a most successful appearance at the Sun Hall on October 7, when her violin playing proved to be of a high order of merit. To the same programme the Liverpool Cymric Vocal Union contributed some part-songs with delightful finish and balance of tone.

The first Philharmonic Society's concert took place on October 10, when Mr. Fritz Kreisler played the Mendelssohn concerto with his usual excellence, and Miss Alice Nielson was an acceptable vocalist. The principal orchestral item was Beethoven's Eighth Symphony. The chorus sang Hamish MacCunn's part-song, 'O Mistress Mine' with delicate art and graceful effect. Dr. Frederic Cowen conducted.

The second programme of the Liverpool Symphony Orchestra, on October 16, also included Beethoven's Eighth Symphony and songs by Miss Jaxon, while Mr. S. Prescott was the solo pianist, and Mr. Akeroyd conducted. It is pleasant to place upon record the complete artistic and popular success of this concert.

We have had visits from Mischa Elman (his first appearance in Liverpool, October 9), Master Vecsey, and Madame Melba.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The people of Manchester, like those of other large centres of population, are becoming more and more residentially suburban, with the result that the city is increasingly begirt with amateur choral, orchestral, and operatic societies. Many of these societies—especially the choral—as I can personally testify, reach a very creditable standard of excellence, thanks to the ardour and ability of the professional conductors. And although I could make no individual reference to them, I am not alone in recognizing that it is amongst them the tributary streams of musical interest and enthusiasm rise which make up and swell the main current of our local musical life. They are anticipating as usual the full-flowing season in the city, and half-a-dozen interesting programmes of their opening concerts are before me as I write. I am glad to mention, however, that Mr. Edward Sachs, an ardent lover as well as teacher of music, is continuing for the fourth season the rehearsals of the amateur society, the Sachs String Orchestra. Other teachers have been heralding the musical carnival, including Mr. James Richardson (violinist), and Miss Bertha Guthrie (contralto), who have each given interesting recitals.

The new venture of six Promenade Concerts made by a section (50 performers) of the Hallé Orchestra filled the evenings of the week beginning October 2. Mr. Simon Speelman conducted, and the experiment, if not a financial, was certainly an artistic success. Madame Nettie Carpenter, Mr. Rawdon Briggs, and Mr. Arthur Catterall (violin), Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus and Mr. Edward Isaacs (pianoforte), and Mr. Carl Fuchs (violinello) were amongst the instrumental soloists. Solo vocalists were also engaged; and at some of the concerts a small choir, drawn from the full Hallé Choir, and conducted by the chorus-master, Mr. R. H. Wilson, gave a further variety to the programmes with glees and part-songs. The Orchestral Committee has been sufficiently encouraged by the experiment to announce that it has arranged for a second series of six concerts, to be given on separate Saturday evenings—the first on November 18.

On October 7 Dr. Pyne, who is just completing his thirtieth year as organist of the Cathedral, resumed his weekly recitals at the Town Hall, on the city's fine Cavallé-Col instrument. On October 18 the first of the four Harrison Concerts was given in the Free Trade Hall.

Another choral offshoot has grown out of the Hallé organization—the Manchester Madrigal Society, conducted by Mr. R. H. Wilson. The Madrigal Club (now dissolved) was a subscription Society, which the late William Shore was largely interested in establishing some sixty years ago. The Nonconformist Choir Union gave its sixth annual festival concert on October 21, Dr. Thomas Keighley conducting. The choir had the advantage of a band of nearly forty performers—chiefly of the Hallé Orchestra—in a very spirited and promising rendering of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George.'

The Manchester Vocal Society, which Dr. Henry Watson directs, commenced its thirty-ninth season on October 18. The chief work in the programme was Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' of which, despite the absence of an orchestra, a capital performance was given, the points in 'the humour of it' being well accentuated by the choir. On October 19 the first high feast of music was set forth by the Hallé Orchestra, when Dr. Richter conducted. The programme comprised the 'Oberon' overture; No. 3 of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos for string orchestra; Prelude to the third act of the 'Meistersinger'; Strauss's 'Also sprach Zarathustra,' and Beethoven's fifth symphony. The band played finely. Owing to his illness, everyone was sorry to find that the name of Signor Risegari, the former leader, is now withdrawn from the list of the Orchestra.

Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus has retired from his professorship of the pianoforte at the Royal Manchester College of Music owing to his public engagements.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. E. H. Lemare paid a visit to Newcastle Town Hall on September 30, and delighted a large audience with his masterly rendering of a programme which was an excellent blend of popular and classical organ music, containing nothing trivial, yet adapted to the varied tastes of his audience. Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D received a large amount of applause.

The Stockton and Thornaby Choral and Orchestral Society intend to perform 'Elijah,' Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' and Dvorák's 'New World' symphony.

Tynemouth Amateur Vocal Society are somewhat out of the beaten track in choosing Smieton's 'Ariadne' and Anderton's 'The Norman Baron.' Beethoven's 'Eroica' and Mozart's 'Jupiter' symphonies will be rehearsed, with other works, by the Northumberland Orchestral Society.

A new choral society has been formed by the Newcastle and District Union of Teachers.

In connection with the Sunderland Students' Society an interesting course of musical meetings is to be held under the direction of Mr. N. Kilburn, who has done such splendid work in the cause of the musical education of the public in that district. Such subjects as Bach's concertos, Beethoven's later quartets, and the works of Brahms will be taken, and illustrations provided.

The syllabus of the Newcastle Literary and Philosophical Society includes a lecture by Mr. W. H. Hadow on 'Musical scales, and their influence in composition.'

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The great event of the past month, the Triennial Festival, has not exhausted or even entirely monopolised local musical effort. In addition to the artistic results and financial success of the Festival a further benefit is likely to accrue in the form of an enlarged and adequate concert hall. The scheme—which has been mooted by Mr. T. Walter Hall, an influential amateur musician and Chairman of the Festival Committee—aims at the provision of an adequate and well-equipped building, located in one of the parks, preferably adjoining the New University and Mappin Art Gallery, to be available for festivals, Municipal concerts, and other gatherings for which the Albert Hall is either too small or unsuitable. It is hoped the scheme will be carried out as a Municipal undertaking.

A well-prepared performance of 'Elijah' was given in Oak Street Free Church, Heeley, on October 1. Under the direction of Mr. H. Kirk, a capable choir of eighty voices sang the choral portions with zest and intelligence. At the Wesleyan Chapel, Fulwood Road, excellent progressive work is being done by Mr. J. W. Ibberson. On October 7, J. H. Maunders's new harvest cantata 'A Song of Thanksgiving' was artistically performed by choir and soloists, the composer presiding at the organ.

On October 9 a town's meeting was held at Bury, Lancashire, under the presidency of the Mayor, to discuss the advisability of establishing musical competitions. A resolution was passed approving of the scheme. On October 21 a meeting, also for this purpose, was held at Oakham, Rutlandshire. The Hon. Mrs. Fitzwilliam is the chief promoter. Mr. Finch, M.P. for Rutlandshire, presided, and there was a large attendance of local gentry, clergy, and school teachers, and the Lord Lieutenant, Earl Dysart, was also present. Dr. McNaught gave an address at both the above meetings.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the time of writing the musical season has not got into full swing, and there are but few concerts of any importance to record, though a good deal that is of interest is promised. Dr. Coward has succeeded to the post of choirmaster and conductor of the Leeds Choral Union, and the results of his methods were seen already at the opening concert of the season, on October 18, when a strongly coloured reading of Berlioz's 'Faust' was given, with Madame Conly, Messrs. Lloyd-Chandos, Thornton, and Andrew Black, as principals. The Society proposes to give Verdi's 'Requiem,' Beethoven's Choral Symphony, Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' and a Handel selection during the season, Dr. Cowen and the Scottish Orchestra appearing at two of the concerts. The Leeds Philharmonic and Subscription Concerts promise among other things Elgar's 'King Olaf,' Brahms's German 'Requiem,' Volbach's 'Raffael,' some choral pieces from 'Meistersinger' and 'Lohengrin,' and an interesting revival of Beethoven's cantata 'Der glorreiche Augenblick.'

The Leeds Municipal Orchestra began its operations on October 21, with a programme cleverly contrived to celebrate the Trafalgar centenary in patriotic fashion, and at the same time to be of artistic interest. The programme included Mackenzie's 'Britannia' overture, the 'Trauermarsch' from 'Götterdämmerung,' Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' overture, Elgar's 'Imperial March,' Stanford's 'Sea Songs,' and Weber's 'Jubel' overture. Mr. Fricker conducted very ably, and the local orchestra proved of excellent quality.

The Bradford season may be said to have begun with a concert of the Permanent Orchestra on October 14, when a programme illustrating French music was played under Mr. Allen Gill's direction. An interesting incident was the performance of the 'In Memoriam' overture in memory of Sir Henry Irving, who had died at Bradford the night before, and whose body was at that very time being taken to the station for its last journey to London. On October 20 the Bradford Festival Choral Society gave, under Dr. Cowen's direction, a performance of Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' Madame Brema, Mr. Evan Williams, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, and Mr. Herbert Brown taking the principal parts.

At the Bradford Subscription Concerts it is intended to perform, during the season, the 'Beatitudes' of César Franck, Brahms's Rhapsody for contralto and chorus, and Dr. Cowen's 'John Gilpin.'

Among the more important choral works to be given by Yorkshire societies, the first in interest will undoubtedly be Bach's B minor Mass, which, as given by the Huddersfield Choral Society, should prove tremendously impressive. The Society has already given a fine performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius' under Dr. Coward's direction, on October 13, with Miss Alice Lakin, Messrs. Gervase Elwes and Charles Tree as principals. The dramatic singing of the chorus was warmly eulogised.

The Halifax Choral Society promises a really interesting series of concerts: Brahms's German 'Requiem,' Elgar's 'King Olaf,' Goring Thomas's 'Sun Worshipers' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' are the choral works chosen for performance. The German 'Requiem' and 'King Olaf' are also to be given by the Scarborough Philharmonic Society, together with a cantata by the conductor, Dr. Ely. The Ripon Cathedral oratorio services, which have been made of great musical interest by the enthusiasm of the organist, Mr. C. H. Moody, will this time include such works as 'Messiah,' the 'St. Matthew' Passion, and Bach's church cantatas 'God goeth up' and 'A stronghold sure,' the German 'Requiem,' and Schumann's 'Requiem,' while the Ripon Choral Society is to give Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' Cantatas, Stanford's 'Phaëdra Crohoore' and Blair's 'Trafalgar.'

The Hull Vocal Society promises Verdi's 'Requiem,' Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' Elgar's 'Black Knight,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' and at the Christmas performance of 'Messiah' it is announced that Professor Prout's edition of the score will be used. The Hull Harmonic Society will give 'The Golden Legend,' and will repeat 'The Dream of Gerontius,' which it introduced last season. 'The Golden Legend' and Berlioz's

'Faust,'—the latter rather naively styled in the prospectus a 'novelty'—are the chief things in the conservative programme of the Harrogate Choral Society. One of the most enterprising of Yorkshire Societies is the Middlesbrough Musical Union. This season it proposes to give Dvorák's characteristic 'Te Deum,' the 'Sixth Chandos Anthem,' and Gounod's 'Redemption,' while a pianoforte concerto and the visit of the Bohemian String Quartet will add variety to the programmes without weakening them.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

Jean Sibelius, the well-known Finnish composer, has finished a violin concerto which will be performed for the first time on the 19th of the present month, under the direction of Dr. Richard Strauss. Professor Carl Halir will be the soloist.

COLOGNE.

The distinguished pianist, Isidor Seiss, died here in his sixty-fifth year on September 25. He was born at Dresden, and studied with Friedrich Wieck, the teacher and father-in-law of Schumann, Julius Otto, and Moritz Hauptmann. Seiss, for many years teacher at the Cologne Conservatorium and conductor of the Musical Society, was highly esteemed both as man and artist.

DRESDEN.

To commemorate the seventieth anniversary of the birth of Felix Draeseke, his opera 'Herrat' was performed at the Royal Opera House on October 8, and on the following day a Draeseke matinée was given in the Vereinshaus.

GMUNDEN.

Carl Goldmark has nearly completed a new three-act opera 'Wintermärchen,' text after Shakespeare by M. Willner. The work will probably be produced during the present season at the Frankfort Opera House with Frau Greef-Andriessen in the principal rôle.

HAMBURG.

The première of Siegfried Wagner's fourth opera 'Bruder Lustig' took place on October 13, under the direction of capellmeister Brecher. A writer in the Vossische Zeitung describes the libretto as 'very bad.' He also remarks that, although the composer may write other and more successful operas, he will never surprise us.

INNSBRUCK.

A nephew of Franz Schubert, Ferdinand Schubert, son of Ferdinand Schubert, has just died at the ripe age of eighty-six. He was for many years professor of drawing at Wiener-Neustadt.

PARIS.

Camille Erlanger has completed an opera 'Aphrodite,' which will most probably be produced at the Opéra Comique next March; and Gabriel Dupont, composer of the prize opera 'La Cabrera,' is working at an opera 'La Glu,' libretto by Henri Cain, after Richépin.——The Lamoureux and the Colonne concerts both commenced on October 15. At the first of the former series was produced 'La Mer,' three symphonic sketches by M. Claude Debussy. At the second Colonne concert was performed the greater portion of Berlioz's 'Les Troyens à Carthage,' the second part of his great music-drama, 'Les Troyens.' A first performance in Paris of Strauss's 'Domestic' symphony, under the composer's direction, will shortly be given.——The well-known writer M. Calvocoressi will shortly publish a biography of Franz Liszt, the first ever written in the French language.

TURIN.

According to Le Ménestrel, Dr. Strauss has met with so much opposition from the censorship, that he has withdrawn the score of his new opera 'Salome' which was to have been produced simultaneously at Vienna and Dresden. He has now offered it to the Royal Theatre of this city, where it may possibly be given during the forthcoming season.

The death, which we record with regret, of Mr. JOHN HOPKINS NUNN, on October 17, at Penzance, removes a well-known and excellent musician from West Cornwall. Born at Bury St. Edmunds, November 10, 1827, he was a student at the Royal Academy of Music from 1848 to 1851, and subsequently elected a Fellow of that institution. He began his professional career at Sherborne, Dorsetshire, in 1852, and two years later went to Penzance and did excellent work for the cause of music in that neighbourhood. He held the post of organist of St. Mary's Church, Penzance, for thirty-five years. The founder of the Penzance Choral Society in 1858, he ably conducted its concerts for the long period of forty-seven years. At one time he conducted the Truro Philharmonic Society, and the Camborne Choral Society; these three organizations united in giving a musical festival at Truro in 1878, conducted by Mr. Nunn, and in the same year, at Penzance, he was presented with a silver salver and a purse of 350 guineas. Mr. Nunn was a great friend of Sir Henry Irving, who was once his guest at the Abbey, Penzance.

Shrewsbury has lost a much respected citizen by the death of Mr. WALTER CECIL HAY, which, we regretfully record, took place at his residence, Claremont Bank, on October 1, at the age of seventy-seven. A former student of the Royal Academy of Music and subsequently band-master of the 12th Lancers, Mr. Hay settled in his native town of Shrewsbury, where for many years he has been the leading professor of music, and where he held the organistship of St. Chad's church from 1861 to 1883. The most distinguished of Mr. Hay's pupils is Mr. Edward German, who made special and appreciative reference to his old master in the biographical sketch of him (Mr. German) which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1904.

'The Society of British Composers' is the title of a recently-formed organization. Its 'immediate aims' are (1) 'To facilitate the publication of such high-class works as the ordinary publisher cannot or will not undertake,' and (2) 'The protection of the British composer's interest in the matter of publishing agreements. This is a great need, as a young musician is seldom a good man of business'—so the prospectus of the Society says. The Hon. Secretary of The Society of British Composers is Mr. John B. McEwen, 34, Belsize Park Gardens, N.W.

The autumn conference of the Girls' School Music Union was held at the St. Paul's Girls' School, Brook Green, on October 21, when a large audience, composed almost entirely of ladies, listened to addresses by Mrs. J. Spencer Curwen on 'Mistakes in Teaching,' and by Miss Fanny Davies on 'The Teaching of the Pianoforte.' An ample report of this important conference appears in the November issue of The School Music Review.

The Royal College of Music is to be congratulated upon the success of its students on leaving their Alma Mater. Among the appointments obtained during the past academical year are the following: Mr. Stokowski, organist to an important church in New York, with a stipend of £800 a year, and Mr. Putnam Griswold, principal bass at the Imperial Opera House in Berlin.

The 'Dream of Gerontius' is to be performed for the first time at Vienna on November 16, under the direction of Hofcapellmeister Franz Schalk, with Frau Stwertka, Herr Senius, and Herr Richard Mayr as soloists. The performance will be under the auspices of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde of Vienna.

An enlarged and excellent photogravure of the portrait of Schumann, which forms one of the special supplements in the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES, can be obtained from Messrs. Obach & Co., 168, New Bond Street.

The Sunday Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. Howard Jones) announces a series of six orchestral concerts to be given at the Coronet Theatre, Notting Hill Gate. The scheme does not include a single work by an English composer.

Sir Hubert H. Parry, Sir George C. Martin, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie have been elected honorary members of the Abbey Glee Club.

Mr. R. J. Pitcher has been appointed a professor of singing at the Guildhall School of Music.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

NOTTINGHAM.—Mr. Maynard Grover gave an interesting concert in the Lecture Hall of the Mechanics' Institution on October 4, when the programme consisted entirely of music by living British composers. The concert-giver, who is a native of Nottingham, was represented by several new songs, and was assisted by Miss Jean Newman, Miss Adelaide Lambe, Mr. Whitworth Mitton, Mr. Albert Garcia (vocalists), Miss Elsie Southgate (violin), and Mr. Hollings (pianoforte). Mr. Algernon Lindo acted as accompanist.

TWICKESBURY.—The Annual Choral Festival was held in Twickesbury Abbey on September 21, when Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was very successfully rendered under the able direction of Mr. A. W. V. Vine, the organist and choir-master. The choir, consisting of singers from the festival chorus of Gloucester, Worcester, and Twickesbury, and numbering 200 voices, sang with spirit and steadiness throughout, while the orchestra was led by Mr. W. H. Reed, and Dr. A. H. Brewer presided at the organ. The principal vocalists were Madame Sobrino, Miss Jessie King, Mr. A. J. Ranson and Mr. Graham Smart.

WELLINGTON, N.Z.—A concert performance of Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana' was successfully given in the Town Hall by the Wellington Choral Society on September 1, the principal vocalists being Miss Amy Murphy, Miss Lloyd Bassell, Miss Mowatt, Mr. Frank Graham and Mr. A. S. Hallance. Herr Max Hoppe led the orchestra, and Mr. J. Maughan Barnett conducted.

Answers to Correspondents.

DORA.—Considering the benevolent object you have in view—the raising of funds for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals—no one ought to object to your novel proposal of a concert with 'an animal programme.' In regard to 'suggestions for the most appropriate pieces,' you will probably first explore Haydn's 'Creation.' There you will find a veritable zoological gardens, including 'the tawny lion, the flexible tiger, the nimble stag, finny tribes, the worm in long dimension,' &c. Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' may also be laid under contribution—e.g., frogs, all manner of flies and other insects 'in all their quarters,' in addition to 'the horse and his rider.' The 'cat's fugue' and 'Am I a dog?' (from Horsley's 'David') would certainly form a contrast; and, by way of conclusion, nothing could be more suitable than the National Anthem, for is not the music of it attributed to Dr. Bull?

MISS L.—(1) The song beginning 'To all you ladies now on land' is best known in association with a traditional English air. In 'Merry Drollery Complete' (1670) is a song 'My mistress is a shuttlecock' set to the same air, and in 'A Pill to purge State Melancholy' (1715) the melody is associated with the 'Soldiers' lamentation for the loss of their general.' The tune was employed in several ballad operas: the words of the song were written by the Earl of Dorset in 1664. (2) According to the autograph score of Handel's 'Messiah' the composer gives no indication of p or f at the beginning of the chorus, but upon the entry of the soprano voices (at bar 7) he indicates that the bass parts are to be played piano; the only direction against the voice part is 'tutti.'

AUCKLAND (N.Z.) SUBSCRIBER.—(1) You have probably strained the muscles of your left arm and hand, or they may be weak. You had better consult a reliable medical man and, in the meantime, give up the use of the mechanical exercises to which you refer. (2) Endeavour to be accurate in all things—even 'twos against threes,' as you put it. In such a case you must not let the right hand know what the left hand doeth; in other words, each hand must be independent of the other. Thanks for your kind words of appreciation from across the seas.

BASSO PROFUNDO.—You may well say 'How important it is not to risk anything too high' if you have to sing to a piano 'half a tone above Philharmonic pitch' (we assume you mean the old pitch of the Philharmonic Society). It is rather difficult to suggest bass songs, other than those you have mentioned, that do not go above C or C sharp. The compass of Richard Strauss's 'Das Thal' extends from F (below the staff) to E flat above. The 'Four serious songs' by Brahms (Op. 121), of which there is an English version, are well worthy of study, if their compass is not an obstacle.

A. S.—For your lecture 'True stories of famous songs' you might consult 'Stories of famous songs' by S. J. Adair Fitzgerald, published by John C. Nimmo, though some of the information therein contained needs verification. The story of the composition of Sullivan's 'Lost chord' is related in Mr. Arthur Lawrence's 'Life' of the composer, published in 1899.

G. J. M.—We can only repeat the advice we have several times given in this column relating to violins made (or said to be made) by Stradivarius—submit your instrument to the expert examination of Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, who, in return for a fee, will give you reliable information thereupon.

G. J. S.—As your technique is 'very unsatisfactory on account of being under a master with no method,' you had better devote a considerable portion of your daily practice of one hour to technique; but you should seek advice on this point from one of the good teachers in your city of Birmingham.

CLAREMONT.—(1) For elementary books on campanology see 'Change ringing disentangled,' by the Rev. Woolmore Wigram (Bell & Sons), and 'Rope-sight: an introduction to the art of change ringings,' by J. W. Snowdon (Wells, Gardner & Co., third edition, 1883). (2) We do not know of any book on 'Music and colour.'

B. E. G.—There is a biography of Anton Rubinstein by Alexander M'Arthur, published in 1889 by Messrs. Adam & Charles Black, of Edinburgh. See also an interesting little book 'A Conversation on Music,' by Rubinstein (Augener & Co.).

T. P. L.—There has always been some doubt about the right of Boyce to the eight-part anthem 'O give thanks.' It has been attributed to Croft; but the style is peculiarly Boyce, especially the 'Hallelujah,' and much later than the idiom of Croft's day.

L. C. B.—Tappert's article on 'Das Gralthema aus Richard Wagner's Parsifal' appeared in the Musikalisches Wochenblatt of July 30, 1903. We are not aware of an English translation of the article.

M. C.—You will probably find the following books suitable for children in regard to the subjects you name: Sir Hubert Parry's 'Studies of great composers' (Reinecke), and Mr. Henry Davey's 'Student's Musical History' (Curwen).

F. W. W.—It is a little difficult to compile a complete list of the organ compositions by the late Frederic Archer, as some of the pieces are published in America; but we are making inquiries for you.

DOLLY.—We are unable to give the exact date when 'Miss Marie Hall was discovered in the streets'; but a brief biographical sketch of her, with portrait, appeared in our issue of March, 1903.

T. C. F.—Consult a little book (published by Messrs. Cassell & Co.) entitled 'Pianos: their Construction, Tuning and Repair,' by Paul N. Hasluck.

H. L.—We have a strong suspicion that the two organ pieces you mention have 'fancy titles,' and that they belong to the 'hashed up' species.

H. P.—Mr. Vert, 6, Cork Street, London, W., will furnish you with information concerning professional ladies' orchestras.

OMEGA.—The turn should begin on the principal note (C) in both instances.

D. T.—'Dotted Crotchet' is much obliged for your suggestion; it has made a note of it.

- b. The Words with the Melody only (staff and tonic sol-fa notations combined), for the use of the children, price 1s.
- c. Words only (limp cloth), 6d.

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE MUSIC EDITION.

The music of the Council School Hymn Book has been selected for its melodic interest and general suitability to children's voices. These essentials have been kept steadily in view as regards the new tunes composed expressly for the book, wherein many well-established favourites find a place. It will be observed that some of the tunes appear in lower keys than usual in order that young voices may not be unduly strained.

Every care has been taken to make the music of the book acceptable to teachers as well as children, in the hope that daily hymn-singing may become a specially enjoyable feature of school life.

The Hymns chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

PRESS NOTICES.

SCHOOL GUARDIAN.

We are agreeably surprised with this book, which from its title would seem to us to profess to be an undenominational hymn-book, but several hymns which we expected to find excluded from such a hymn-book are included. We only hope that its excellence will not prejudice it in the eyes of those who want to wear down the teaching in Council Schools to the low level of the world.

CHRISTIAN WORLD.

Outwardly unpretentious, "The Council School Hymn Book" will be eagerly scanned by those who know how important it is to preserve sanity and wholesomeness in hymns that are often sung by children. Put briefly, the aim of the editors has been to avoid sectarianism and doggerel; and they have succeeded so well as to prompt the wish that this book could displace those in use at the average Sunday school.

THE BOOKSELLER.

We do not think that a better hymnal for use in public elementary schools than the present could be wished or hoped for. The editors, it is sufficiently clear, were bound in such a publication to exclude strictly denominational hymns, and to select those only which express the central truths of religion. This they have consistently done throughout, and have at the same time admirably suited the varied collection to the capacities of the young. Such classics as "The spacious firmament on high" (Addison), "Hark! the herald angels sing" (C. Wesley), "Let us with a gladsome mind" (Milton), and other more modern hymns, of which the inclusion has been permitted by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, the Rev. J. Page Hopps, and Miss Betham-Edwards, among other writers; and the prayers at the end of the collection (and chosen on the same principle) for the opening and closing of school, and for certain special occasions, will be found well adapted to their object.

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

The contents have been selected by the standard of their religious truth and suitability to the mental capacity of children. At the end are forms of Prayer for the opening and closing of school, &c.

ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

A handy compilation for elementary schools, containing a great many familiar pieces by writers of various faith—Anglican, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Congregational, Quaker, and Unitarian.

BRISTOL TIMES AND MIRROR.

"The Council School Hymn Book" contains well and widely-chosen hymns, which express the central truths of religion, and are within the comprehension, and suited to the capacities, of children. At the end are prayers for the opening and closing of school, which have been selected on the same principle as the hymns. The collection is an admirable one, and deserves to be generally adopted.

THE SCOTSMAN.

A useful little compilation for elementary schools. It is handy, well edited, and well printed, and has no particular denominational tendency.

WESTERN MORNING NEWS.

Whoever were the compilers of this book, they have discharged their task very well. The 150 hymns selected express the central truths of the Christian Faith, and with one or two exceptions are just suited to the comprehension of the children for whom the selection is intended. As should be, catholicity is the note of the book; check by jowl we find John Bunyan and John Keble; Walsingham How and J. Montgomery; T. Kelly and F. W. Faber; J. Page Hopps and R. S. Hawker; C. Wesley and J. M. Neale; Bishop Wordsworth and John Milton; Baring-Gould and Isaac Watts. How's Diamond Jubilee Hymn, "O King of kings" appropriately finds its place, and perhaps Kipling's "Recessional" might have been included also. The short prayers at the end of the book are drawn up on the same broad principle as the hymns, and some special ones are added for "Our Country," "before and after holidays," for times of "dangerous sickness," and for those connected with the school who are in "trouble or sorrow." Altogether the compilation is a model of what such a book should be, and it richly deserves the widest use in the Council schools of the land.

The musical score is written for piano and a solo voice (Soprano or Tenor). It is in 3/2 time and consists of four systems of music. The piano part is in the lower register, and the solo part is in the upper register. The tempo is marked 'Moderato' with a quarter note equal to 100 beats. The score includes dynamic markings such as 'p' (piano), 'cres.' (crescendo), 'mf' (mezzo-forte), and 'dim.' (diminuendo). The lyrics are: 'Love Divine, all love excelling, Joy of Heaven, to earth come down, Love Divine, all love excelling, Joy of Heaven, to earth come down, Fix in us Thy humble dwelling, fix in us Thy'.

LOVE DIVINE, AL LOVE EXCELLING.

First system of the musical score. It features four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The vocal parts enter with a forte (ff) dynamic, singing the lyrics "Je - su, Thou art all com - pas - sion,". The piano accompaniment begins with a piano (p) dynamic and includes a crescendo to a forte (f) dynamic.

Second system of the musical score. The vocal parts continue with the lyrics "Pure un - bound - ed love Thou art ;". The piano accompaniment provides harmonic support. The system concludes with the vocal parts singing "Vis - it us with Thy sal - va - tion,", marked with a piano (p) dynamic.

Third system of the musical score. The vocal parts sing "Vis - it us with Thy sal - va - tion, En - ter ev - 'ry trem - bling heart,". The piano accompaniment continues with a mezzo-piano (mp) dynamic. The system ends with a final chord in the piano part.

PRODUCED AT THE WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1905.

HYMN OF FAITH
CANTATA

FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS ARRANGED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURES BY

EDWARD ELGAR

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

IVOR ATKINS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

THE TIMES.

Mr. Atkins has done his work well, and shows his wide experience among the chorus, while his writing for the orchestra is strikingly free from modern extravagances, and he has an invaluable sense of quiet dignity.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Some passages are of special charm and significance, especially that in which the chorus sing without accompaniment the familiar text, "Faith, the substance of things hoped for," &c. There is neither space nor time for details, and I sum up in saying that Mr. Atkins may take courage from the character of his latest venture and go on to higher things.

STANDARD.

This represents, so far, Mr. Atkins's largest work, and marks a great advance on his previous efforts. . . . The work is worthy of high praise, as an earnest and expressive composition; and in the orchestral part Mr. Atkins reveals a true feeling for tone-colour and variety, which stamps the work as far away from the ordinary and a welcome departure from the usual cathedral service type of music.

MORNING POST.

The hymn extols Faith, and the composer's treatment of the words is scholarly, yet not dry. The music, with its ecclesiastical subject-matter, shows modern influence and here and there that of Elgar, yet not so as to suggest direct imitation. The work, commendably short, promises well for Mr. Atkins's future as a composer.

DAILY NEWS.

Mr. Atkins has evidently been influenced by the music of his librettist, and, as far as the orchestra is concerned, by the modern school in general. Strangely enough, the most striking music of the new work is to be heard in the orchestra, which, by many picturesque touches of appropriate instrumentation, illustrates the text with the happiest effect.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

In this work Mr. Atkins has shown his capacity for musical development quite extraordinarily. I find it to be a great improvement upon the excellently good work which he has before given to us. Not only does his thought rise to a higher range than heretofore, but there is a far greater grip of his musical material, and a greater condensation of means. "In the Name of our God," and the "Alleluia" which immediately precedes it, "Rejoice," show a grip and a tendency towards the intellectual side of music which are very satisfactory; his melody is fluent, but never inclined to run to seed or to become blank, and there is many a touch of real beauty in his orchestral treatment, where all of it is musically.

ATHENÆUM.

Mr. Atkins shows skill in musicianship yet it never becomes unduly prominent. . . . The Hymn under notice is excellent of its kind, and festival authorities will no doubt soon give its author an opportunity of displaying his powers on a larger scale.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The composer has produced an exceedingly well proportioned work. In sustained dignity of utterance, the music reaches a high level. It has real solemnity without any dryness, and the sensuous beauty frequently attained in the colouring has no touch of either tawdriness or vulgarity. There is something of Sir Hubert Parry's influence perceptible in the strong texture and fine construction of the music, together with a richness of colour which is outside the range of Sir Hubert's simple palette. . . . The music is eminently natural, and two unaccompanied passages for the chorus achieve a genuinely impressive effect by very simple means. And there is not a bar that can be styled sentimental, pretty, or sensational, which is negative praise of a high order.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

The musical treatment is in the modern continuous manner, without break, the alternating choral and solo sections forming one organic whole. Representative themes are employed, and with no little skill. One standing for Faith is the most important. A motive given at the outset by the brass gives an ecclesiastical stamp to the work, and use is made of part of the ancient hymn tune, "Vexilla Regis." But Mr. Atkins has the gift of melody, if not as yet of a very individual type; and there is lyric charm in the solo, "Unless the Lord had been my help," which is gracefully scored. The orchestration throughout is very good, and the voice-writing is effective.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE.

Of the cantata as an art work I have no hesitation in speaking in terms almost superlative. Mr. Atkins is at once solid and interesting. There is not a dull moment; everywhere the music has a contagious warmth. One has the impression that all was given off at white heat. There is nothing laborious, nothing of the dry-as-dust style traditionally attributed to cathedral organists, nothing of the universally despised Kapellmeister-musik. On the contrary, Mr. Atkins, while in warp and woof having some kinship with Bach, is in colour and feeling as modern as Strauss. The solo, with its exquisite accompaniment, is especially beautiful, even where all was beautiful. Mr. Atkins has made his mark, and if he continues to progress at the same rate will, before many years, attain the highest rank.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star."The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—STAFFORDSHIRE CORRESPONDENT, The Musical Times."Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Grimsfithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City'. . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press."No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette."In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel."Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

A SONG OF EDEN

FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS TAKEN FROM "PARADISE LOST"

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price One Shilling.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The music is of high merit, and marks another advance on the part of a composer whom the most supercilious cannot now afford to pass over as negligible. . . . It seems characteristic of this composer to write good, honest, utterly intelligible music, and he has done so here, not even at times shrinking from simplicity, as knowing that simple utterance is always the best when dealing with subjects which lack their fullness inexpressible. But with all his reticence Dr. Brewer has not failed to write music which, while clear, interesting, and effective, is also in accord with the spirit of the text to which, if it do not add strength, it gives artistic charm in no mean degree.

STANDARD.

It is a melodious setting for chorus and orchestra of some words taken from "Paradise Lost." The orchestral part has a none too common quality in works of the kind, in that it shows a sense of colour. If it is not a large work, it is distinctive, and fulfilled its purpose admirably.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Dr. Brewer in this score scarcely cares to search out anything of a highly complex character, quite rightly choosing, in a work necessarily brief, choral harmonies of a recognised value, in his expression of his high theme. . . . The work ends with a natural development out of the musical material that has gone before, and it will remain as an excellent example of its kind, in which the composer while not sinking his personality, nevertheless realises that he naturally "owes a cock to" convention.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Not only are the voices sympathetically and effectively treated, as has always been the case with Dr. Brewer's music, but the orchestra is handled with much more freedom than hitherto, and in many passages an excellent colouring is attained. . . . Throughout the work there is abundant evidence of Dr. Brewer's power to produce pleasant and euphonious music, while there are many touches which add to pleasantness, distinction and character.

ATHENÆUM.

The music is well written and well scored, and, owing to its comparative simplicity, it no doubt be of general use.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL.

It opens with a leading theme in chords, the tenors and basses proclaiming "Now, Heaven in all her glory," the altos joining on the words "Earth in her rich attire." The orchestra then gives out a new theme, immediately followed by an impressive unaccompanied chorus a capella in seven parts to the words "These are Thy glorious works." Of importance is the section that follows, an orchestral interlude of fifty-two bars based on the leading themes employed in the work. In the choral number that follows the composer introduces another striking theme, of which great use is made hereafter. Yet another theme makes its appearance in the Andante in D flat on the words "Fairest of stars; last in the train of night," the composer here making use of the "Star" theme from his oratorio "The Holy Innocents." The constant changes of tempi give rise to variety of treatment of both the choral and orchestral parts, and the composer seems to have created a work full of colour and impressiveness that is likely to be favourably received by both performers and audience.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE AND EXPRESS.

Dr. Brewer's work occupies about a quarter of an hour. It is scored with modern fullness, and in style displays the happy medium between the grand, solid church style and the newer and more emotional manner.

GLOUCESTER JOURNAL.

With each work from his pen Dr. Brewer shows greater mastery and command of musical resources. The effect produced upon the hearer by the "Song of Eden" is that of a work thoroughly well thought out, wisely planned, and skillfully worked out.

GLASGOW HERALD.

A composition of lofty aim and approximate beauty and force.

THE REFEREE.

A reverent and scholarly setting of passages derived from Milton's "Paradise Lost." To take such a text is to measure oneself with a giant mind, and if the composer has not skimmed the surface meaning of the lines, he at least may be credited with courage and loftiness of aim. Moreover, he has not striven to make his abilities appear greater than they are. He has written honestly, sanely, earnestly, and skillfully, and his production is worthy of esteem and a place amidst the best modern music of the Church.

LLOYD'S WEEKLY NEWSPAPER.

Dr. Brewer has found in "Paradise Lost" the material for inspiring "A Song of Eden." This composition is brief in character requiring only fourteen minutes for performance.

JOHN GILPIN

BALLAD FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

THE POEM WRITTEN BY

COWPER

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

VOCAL SCORE, TWO SHILLINGS.

TONIC SOL-FA, ONE SHILLING.

Full Score, 36s.; String Parts, 9s. 6d.; Wind Parts, &c., 20s. 3d.

THE TIMES.

In many respects Dr. Cowen has accomplished much in this "trifle." The ballad occupies but twenty short minutes in performance. His humour, it is true, is often of a very obvious kind; but it may be that in a work like this, evidently intended for small choral societies, for which it is admirably adapted, a certain amount of obviousness must be arrived at. . . . But on humour Dr. Cowen does not wholly depend, for he writes now and then passages that come near to being beautiful, as in the accompaniment to the words "And my sister's child." The tune which is used at the verse "For saddle-tree science reached had he" is excellent, and so is that at the beginning of the end, "Away went Gilpin." In short, the ballad is a very good example of what such ballads are expected to be, not too long, not too extortionate in the demands it makes on either chorus or orchestra—or, for that matter, on the hearer.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

By a happy inspiration, Mr. Cowen has preferred to skim along the surface between Cheapside and Ware, guided by the genius of poor Cowper in one of his rare moments of cheerfulness. . . . His music is, in its way, as humorous as the words, and I cannot sufficiently praise the finesse with which he has surmounted certain very obvious difficulties due to the unchanged rhythm of the ballad, and the unavoidable need to suggest without monotony the best of the horse's hoofs. . . . The orchestration is as brilliant and fanciful as anybody can desire. It "keeps the game alive" in most strenuous fashion, and to it is largely due the fact that there is not a dull bar in the work.

STANDARD.

The humour of the amusing ballad has been very happily caught, and its most diverting situations are illustrated with a directness and point that considerably increase their comicality. . . . As will be surmised, coming from the pen of such a consummate master of orchestration, the accompaniment abounds with deft and subtle touches that prompt the imagination of the listener, and increase the significance of the words. . . . The work was sung and played con amore, and at the close Dr. Cowen received quite an ovation.

MORNING POST.

The success of his new work was never for a moment in doubts. The attention was arrested from the opening, and the humorous suggestions, such as the allusion to the good old song "The Roast Beef of Old England" and the realistic imitation of the braying of an ass, were readily seized and greatly relished. The work is wonderfully graphic; it abounds in amusing details and pursues its course brilliantly without flagging. It all goes with a snap. Sung con amore by the chorus it was received with acclamation, the composer being cheered with true Welsh enthusiasm. There can be no doubt that "John Gilpin" is destined to become widely popular.

DAILY NEWS.

It is easy for the choir, defective, and it is not over elaborated. . . . The bright, skilful little work would probably be even more effective if sung by a smaller choir.

PALM MALL GAZETTE.

The result is a triumphant piece of delightfully humorous music, in which music is by no means forgotten in the humour. It has been strange to note how Dr. Cowen, who, by the way, wrote this Choral Ballad specially for the Cardiff Festival, has increased his grip upon music to such an extent that at the present moment whatever whim or fancy may occur to him, he finds it well within the limits of his intellectual outlook, and can express it precisely as he wishes to express it; that is to say, if one may steal a simile from literature, that every word is precisely suited to the idea, just as in his case (I speak now of "John Gilpin") every idea is suited to the music. The work springs along from the outset. The Gallop of Gilpin, right down to the egotistical cry of the author (that gentle humorist, Cowper),

And when he next doth ride abroad,
May I be there to see are realised without any violence, without the smallest indication of excessive thought, without any attempt at exaggeration, and yet with a pitter-patter and a swing which enhance every detail, from such a phrase as "Away went Gilpin," to the "Stop Thief"—matters which proclaim the work to be literally a miniature masterpiece.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"John Gilpin" proved to be exceedingly clever, and its simplicity makes it a suitable work for small choral societies, with whom it is certain to become popular. . . . "John Gilpin," in a word, is a delightful composition.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1603. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

ODE TO THE NORTH-EAST WIND

SET FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

FREDERIC CLIFFE.

VOCAL SCORE, PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Tonic Sol-fa, 9d. Full Score, MS.; String Parts, 7s. 6d.; Wind Parts (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

Like the poem, the composition is manly, direct, and purely English in style; the composer has made the most of every suggestion in the words, and, among other things, the second number, "Hark, the brave North-Easter!" contains delightful musical allusions to the chase, and is followed by a "nocturne" which may be interpreted as the dreams of the hounds. Fiftal passages occur for a moment or two at a time, one a phrase of suave beauty, and the whole might be taken as an orchestral picture of a canine Queen Mab. A charmingly graceful, flowing chorus follows next, in which the four-part female chorus is used with great skill. The last chorus has a broad tune in the manner of a folk-song, and gathers up the chief theme of the "dream" movement.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

He seems to rejoice in the howl of the nor-easter over a Yorkshire moor, but as an artist he restrains his ecstasy, and so orders the outcome of it that I should not be surprised to find choral societies all over the country taking up the "Ode to the North-East Wind." The composer has a sharp eye for contrasts, and the couplet referring to hounds, "Go and rest to-morrow in your dreams," suggested a nocturne which forms the central episode of the piece. Mr. Cliffe excels in dainty music of this kind, and the effect of the nocturne coming after the turbulent greeting to the wind is wholly charming. That turbulent greeting, by the way, is not wild beyond measure. Everywhere there is a proper restraint in consideration of the intelligible, the orderly, and the beautiful. This, in brief, is a summary of the new work as dictated by my own impressions, and I congratulate Mr. Cliffe upon another festival success in the programme.

MORNING POST.

The music is quite easy to follow; there is a distinct English flavour about it. Now if, on the one hand, composers who seek to be "up-to-date" often become too elaborate and vague, those who seek after cleanness of form, and whose aim is to please rather than astonish, run the danger of being accounted old-fashioned, or it may be commonplace. Mr. Cliffe's music is easy to follow at a first hearing, but it is never open to the latter charge. It is distinctly good, and the very ease with which the composer expresses himself makes one overlook much clever workmanship. The picturesque scoring and the grateful writing for the voices will no doubt win popularity for the work.

DAILY NEWS.

It is a robust work, and is certainly well suited to the rhetoric of the poem. Mr. Cliffe, jocund and open though he be in general effect, has been wise enough to strike a deeper note, to lift, as it were, the surface-thought of his feeling out of any sentiment of commonplace. His conception of the south-west wind is altogether delightful, and there is some strong choral work in the finale.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The work, a short one, which was well performed and given an enthusiastic reception by a large audience, is likely to find general popularity owing to its melodious and forceful themes. It is essentially English, direct, and straightforward in treatment, while containing many happily descriptive passages. It has evidently been written with an eye to popular favour.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It is a work which has both brilliance and charm, and, having regard to the nature of the poem, in which neither mood nor metre is subjected to any material variation, the success of the composer in giving variety of effect is quite remarkable. . . . The whole work has a vigour and a freshness quite in keeping with the subject, and the power which it evidences enhances the surprise one has long felt that Mr. Cliffe has not done more than he has. . . . Mr. Cliffe has done more than turn Kingsley's poem into an effective composition; he has caught its atmosphere admirably. There is the breeziness of the poetry in the music; there is also its distinctively English sentiment; and while he has secured variety he has also given his music coherence.

MORNING LEADER.

Mr. Cliffe writes choral music such as Yorkshire loves—melodious, with well-marked rhythms and solid harmonies, and there is a splendidly healthy, open-air spirit in all which appeals to the North-country imagination. He displays more especially in the nocturne, gifts of fancy which prevent the music from becoming merely boisterous, and the scoring is throughout excellent.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In his treatment of the lines the composer has adopted a characteristic directness which will without doubt serve to make it immensely popular. It is all very obvious, because the subject makes no call upon subtlety or psychology. The composer has adopted Handel's advice to the amateur composer, when he hung his music out of the window—he has given it "some fresh air." The work teems with tunefulness. If the composer had sat down and, recognising the barrenness of recently-issued publishers' lists of novelties, deliberately set about to write a pleasant, easy, and effective work for the market, he could not have succeeded better. It must not be inferred from this that there is anything unworthy or cheap in the "Ode to the North-East Wind." On the contrary, it is full of cleverness, musically to a degree. . . . It may well be prophesied that soon Mr. Cliffe's Ode will go the round of the choral societies.

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.

Mr. Cliffe is a craftsman needing not to be ashamed. He has not given the world anything better than this Ode. It is a work in which the orchestra and the chorus alike delight. He thrills and he enthuses by his musical portrayal of his text. There is a feeling of the presence of icebergs as he sings of the black north-easter, and there is the reflex of the pride of the parson-poet in the doings of our conquering fathers who sailed over seas. There is most grateful music for every voice. That assigned to the ladies' voices is of the most captivating and entrancing, while that for his men's voices has the true manly ring in it, something of the salt spray, and of the field sports which have done so much in making England mistress of the seas. He must be an alien who did not feel proud of the setting of the last stanza of the Ode, who did not feel its bracing effect as the men and women of Hallamshire gave it full-larynxed utterance—"Blow, thou wind of God." The instrumental workmanship is not less delightful than the vocal. Mr. Cliffe uses the full orchestra in the manner of the mature musician. . . . Whatever may be the future of works heard during the Festival, "The Ode to the North-East Wind" will have a long and popular survival.

LEEDS MERCURY.

The difficulty for a composer undertaking to set the lines was their lack of variety in idea and treatment, but Mr. Cliffe has provided a point of repose by introducing an instrumental Nocturne hinting of dreams and the subdued echoes of the hunt. The rest consists of strong, vigorous, and simple choral writing, full of picturesque and even dramatic effects, such as the Sheffield chorus love. It is a thoroughly successful little work, which will undoubtedly add to the composer's repute.

YORKSHIRE DAILY OBSERVER.

It is English music to the core, one may say, looking to the age in which we live. I do not know whether Mr. Cliffe would feel altogether complimented by the comparison of his Ode with Bennett's "May Queen," but, remembering the new orientation in the republic of music which has ensued from the observatory of Bayreuth, that genial work by his once-famous Yorkshire predecessor presents as good a parallel as I can think of at the moment. The English note is heard in the straightforward style of the declamatory passages and the tunes of the melodic part-writing. . . . The pith of the matter is—and at this I may leave it—that Mr. Cliffe has written a work which is at once popular and good music. The audience does not need to be educated up to it. Its acceptance this evening was instant and enthusiastic.

THE STRING-ORCHESTRA

FOR

JUVENILE AND OTHER AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

IN many Schools and Amateur Musical Societies in England the String-Orchestra is much cultivated both for ordinary practice and for performance to audiences. In this way the student becomes best acquainted with the masterpieces of music, and his love for the art is fostered all the more, as he not only learns to experience the joy of helping to produce, but also has the satisfaction of listening to, what is really good. The choice of suitable orchestral pieces, of merit and yet not too difficult, is however very limited. Classical music answers the purpose best, as more than any other it is apt by its marvellous simplicity and depth to form and elevate the taste of the young. Falling in with the often expressed desire of eminent teachers, we are now publishing, as an addition to our "Music for the Home," in serial form, a selection of classical pieces for String-Orchestra, in Full-Scores and separate Parts under the title of

"The String-Orchestra for Juvenile and other Amateur Orchestral Societies"

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

DR. HEINRICH SCHMIDT,

TEACHER AT THE ROYAL SEMINARY AT BAYREUTH.

1. Each book of the Series contains at least four classical pieces for String-Orchestra, full-score and separate parts.
2. The music may be used both for purposes of tuition and performance.
3. Each number is preceded by biographical notes on the composer. The musical forms and foreign terms are explained, and the bowing and fingering for the various instruments conscientiously indicated.
4. Every fifth bar in the full-score and parts is numbered to facilitate the finding of any particular passage.
5. Each book forms as it were the skeleton for a Concert. The first number is generally an Overture, and the first and last of every book are so arranged as to allow of their being performed either by String Instruments alone or with the accompaniment of Piano, Organ, or Harmonium.
6. The second and third numbers are mostly short, pleasing classical movements from Sonatas or Quartets, for String Instruments only, whereas the last number corresponds in its construction and character with the first.
7. If desired, songs and recitations may be introduced between the various numbers.

Full Score, 3s. ; Piano or Harmonium (Organ), 1s. 6d. ; Orchestral Parts, each 8d.

MR. HENRY BEAUMONT

(THE GREAT ENGLISH TENOR).

For Oratorio.

The King, Aug. 19, 1905, says: "Mr. Henry Beaumont is an oratorio tenor of eminence, and in this direction few English tenors are so widely popular as he, or so much in demand. His voice is wonderfully reminiscent of Sims Reeves; there is the same timbre, the same expression."

The Buxton Advertiser, Aug. 30, 1905, says: "Mr. Beaumont is one of the best, if not the best of oratorio tenors, and his voice reminds one very forcibly of the late Mr. Sims Reeves. He received the heartiest of welcomes, and sang with all that verve we are accustomed to in him."
The Derbyshire Advertiser and Journal, Dec. 30, 1904, says: "To say that Mr. Henry Beaumont is a tenor recalling with credit to himself
Mr. Sims Reeves is a high compliment, but it is not undeserved."

Address, 11, Warwick Road, Maida Vale, London, W.

MR. A. LIVINGSTONE HIRST,

B.Mus., F.R.C.O. (TENOR).

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S "EVERYMAN."—RICHMOND NEW PHILHARMONIC.
(First Performance outside Leeds and London.)

"Mr. A. Livingstone Hirst sang the tenor part with appropriate energy and character, and deserved the warm appreciation which his efforts received."—The Herald.

"Mr. A. Livingstone Hirst sang the part of Death very effectively, infusing into his voice a tone fitted to the character."—Richmond Times.
"Mr. A. Livingstone Hirst, as Death, was admirable."—Black and White.

"The great solos allotted to Death were very capably sung by Mr. A.
Livingstone Hirst, who had evidently made a thoughtful study of the more than ordinarily difficult music. Not only was his part sung with highly artistic feeling, but he infused into it a character which it would have been almost impossible to have improved."—Surrey Comet.

"As to your own performance as Death, in 'Everyman,' I cannot speak too highly."—MR. JAMES BROWN, Mus. Bac. (Conductor).

"HIAWATHA."—COWES.

"Beautiful voice—clear enunciation and excellent timbre . . . a very fine reading, culminating, as he told of the Ascension of Christ, in a magnificent top B."—Isle of Wight Herald.

"Mr. Livingstone Hirst's good tenor voice was heard with appropriate tenderness in 'Onaway, awake,' and he likewise gave a finished production of the religious spirit associated with the lines 'Then the blackrobe chief.'"

QUEEN'S (LARGE) HALL.

"Mr. A. Livingstone Hirst's excellent tenor voice and artistic style were well fitted to interpret the music allotted to the hero, and in his solos and in the duet with Madame S—, he gave much satisfaction to his hearers."—Stage.

"Mr. Livingstone Hirst made a decided success in the title-role."—Lady.

"Your fine voice and artistic reading of the part were admired by all."—MR. E. PRITCHARD (Composer and Conductor).

"Llandysilio," Montpelier Road, East Twickenham.

MR. ALFRED KENNINGHAM

ALEXANDER WEBSTER(PRINCIPAL TENOR, St. Peter's, Eaton Square, W.).
12, Ordnance Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.MR. WILLIAM WILD(TENOR).
(Pupil of Andrew Black, Esq.)

Of the "Sir Charles and Lady Hall South African Concert Tour," 1895; London (Queen's Hall) Concerts, and principal Provincial Choral Societies; Manchester (Conventmen's) and Richter Concerts. Also of the Constantinople Choral Society's Concerts.

"The impersonation of Rinaldo has been sustained by Mr. William Wild, whose the Choral Society of Constantinople had especially engaged from England for this production. He possesses a fine tenor voice of sufficient strength, and above all, uses it very artistically."—Stamboul Journal, March 19, 1904.

"Mr. William Wild, who has been specially engaged by the Constantinople Choral Society, is the possessor of a fine tenor voice of a very sweet quality, and entirely under command. His rendering of the important tenor solos was brilliant, while his artistic merits are enhanced by his modest demeanour."—Levant Herald and Eastern Express, March 21, 1904.

"The tenor, Mr. William Wild, who had come especially from London to sing 'The Crusaders,' proved a great acquisition to the Society. His voice is a pure and very sweet tenor, over which he has complete control. In his solo work and in connection with the chorus, he showed himself a true artist, and it is to be regretted that engagements in England prevented him from giving the public more opportunities of hearing him in this city."—Le Moniteur Oriental, March 26, 1904.

(BARITONE. Westminster Abbey.)

TEWKESBURY FESTIVAL—"ELIJAH."

SEPTEMBER 21, 1905.

The Worcestershire Echo, September 22, 1905.

The feature of the performance was the singing of the part of the Prophet by Mr. Graham Smart, who showed a very fine conception of the same. He used his beautiful voice with fine effect, his greatest success being in the recitatives, notably "It is enough, and his last solo, 'The mountains shall depart,' which is so often 'scampied.' Mr. Smart, who has certainly a bright future, has been heard twice at Worcester in connection with the Musical Society's concerts.

9, Wymering Mansions, Elgin Avenue, W.

MR. ARTHUR WALENN

(BARITONE).

Now Booking for Next Season.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S "EVERYMAN."

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, RICHMOND, May 3. Of this Concert—The Herald says: "Mr. Arthur Walenn's fine baritone voice was heard to much advantage in the exacting solos for Everyman."

The Surrey Comet: "Mr. Arthur Walenn gave to the character of Everyman the deepest expression and impressiveness, at the same time avoiding that exaggeration which would tempt a singer of less culture."

The Richmond Times: "Of the soloists, the place of honour must certainly be given to Mr. Arthur Walenn, who, as Everyman, had so much to do. It was always difficult, requiring great variety and expression, to ward off a suspicion of dullness that might otherwise have crept in. In Mr. Walenn's hands nothing of the kind happened; he has a bass voice of very pleasing quality, well under control, and was evidently thoroughly acquainted not only with the music itself, but with the spirit of the work."

South Wales Daily Telegraph: "HIAWATHA" (conducted by the composer). "Mr. Arthur Walenn was heard to real advantage. The first part was full of poetry and imagination, and in the 'Vision' ('True is all Iago tells us') he sang with a dramatic intensity which was little short of a revelation."

Tunbridge Wells Courier: "ELIJAH."—"Mr. Arthur Walenn afforded us an intellectual and musical treat in his embodiment of the idea of the Prophet Elijah. To enact a character of this kind, an arduous duty is imposed on the singer, who not only requires a voice of good power and range, but an artistic insight into the nature of the subject to be dealt with is imperative. That Mr. Walenn fulfilled these attributes is undeniable, and nothing but praise can be accorded him for a really superb delineation of the part."

Liverpool Daily Post: "THE MESSIAH" at Liverpool—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was very successful in sustaining the bass solos, both voice and vocalization being excellent."

20, Ashworth Mansions, Elgin Avenue, London, W.

MR. JAMES COLEMAN

(BASS)

(Vicar Choral, Lichfield Cathedral).

Of the Crystal Palace, London, Birmingham Festival Choral Society, and principal Provincial Concerts.

NOTTINGHAM.—"Few basses have come to the front of late years so finely equipped for their work as Mr. James Coleman. . . . He created quite a triumph in 'Honour and Arms,' which was magnificently sung. . . . In lighter selections he demonstrated a rare control over his voice, which is big in register as in volume, and throughout sang with the finish and touch of a true artist."—Nottingham Daily Guardian, Nov. 8, 1905.

"ELIJAH."—"Mr. J. Coleman as Elijah was an unequalled success from first to last. His voice is admirably adapted to the music, and he has evidently made a careful study of it. To enumerate all his successes would be to go through all the numbers allotted to him. It must be sufficient to mention 'Is not His word like a fire?' and 'It is enough.'"—Smethwick Telephone, Nov. 11, 1905.

BIRMINGHAM TOWNS HALL.—"Mr. J. Coleman had to yield an encore after his impressive singing of 'Till Death,' giving an expressive rendering of 'The Devout Lover.'"—Birmingham Daily Mail, Oct. 9, 1905.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD.

'The most absolute building in Oxford.'

King James I.

'Magdalen College,' wrote Lord Macaulay, 'is one of the most remarkable of our academical institutions. Its graceful tower catches, afar off, the eye of the traveller who comes by road from London. As he approaches, he finds that this tower rises from an embattled pile, low and irregular, yet singularly venerable, which, embowered in verdure, overhangs the sluggish waters of the Cherwell.' These words of the great historian are as true to-day as when they were written. Whoever founded in the unknown long ago the Hospital of St. John Baptist must have had an eye to the 'beautiful for situation' and picturesque surroundings. That Hospital—a non-academical institution and independent of the University—existed for 'the relief of poor Scholars and other "miserable" persons.' On its site a new foundation, known the world over as Magdalen College, Oxford, was founded by Waynflete, Bishop of Winchester, in the year 1448, 'in Honour of the blessed Virgin, St. Mary Magdalen, St. John the Baptist, St. Peter and St. Paul, the glorious Confessor St. Swithun, and all the Tutelar Saints of the Cathedral Church of Winton.' The buildings were begun in 1474—the labourers receiving 4*d.* a day and the 'row-masons' 4½*d.* to 6*d.*—and eight years later the College was in full working order. On August 9, 1492, the 'first corner-stone' of the new bell-tower, 150 feet high, was laid by the President of the College, and this majestic structure—one of the glories of Oxford—appears to have been completed in 1504-5, when the bells were thereunto removed from an old bell-tower, probably part of the Hospital buildings. Upon the completion of the tower a 'clock of new iron' was inserted which 'a mason, a painter, and a beer-brewer contracted to make for the sum of £10, to go sufficiently and truly for a year and a day from All Saints' Day of 1505.'

The Chapel, a T-shaped sanctuary in perfect harmony with its beautiful surroundings, contains a sculptured reredos having a painted altar-piece, 'Christ bearing His Cross,' assigned to Ribalta. Of the organ more anon. In the niches of the porch are five figures representing St. John Baptist, King Edward IV., St. Mary Magdalen, St. Swithin, and the founder (Waynflete), as shown in the photograph on page 783. The noble hall is remarkable for its 'linen-fold' panelling on three sides of the room, the portraits which adorn its walls, and the fine screen of Jacobean work. Not the least attractive feature of the buildings are the Cloisters (c. 1590), with the curious allegorical figures placed on the buttresses, e.g., a statue of Moses with the Tables of the Ten Commandments in his hands, an emblem of Divinity; Æsculapius, typifying physic; the stork feeding her young ones with her own blood, signifying affection, and so on. The Founder's Tower contains a magnificent room, formerly the lodging of the President, lighted on each side by a splendid oriel window. Some fine old tapestry, the gift of Prince Arthur, son of Henry VII., is therein preserved.

An out-door canopied pulpit is a specially interesting and unique feature of the College. From its elevated position, near the entrance-gate, a sermon was annually preached on St. John Baptist's day to a congregation assembled in the quadrangle, the ground being strewn with rushes and grass, and the buildings dressed with green boughs, in commemoration of the preaching of the Baptist in the Wilderness. The use of this pulpit, which had long been discontinued, was revived in 1896, when the sermon was preached by the present Bishop of Stepney (Dr. Cosmo Gordon Lang), then a Fellow and Dean of Divinity of the College. Beyond the New Buildings (erected in 1733) is the Grove, or deer-park—not a deer-park in name only, but an enclosure where those graceful animals have actually browsed for two hundred years. In the plan of Oxford made by Ralph Agas in 1578 the Grove is divided into several sections described as 'Mag. Colledge Gardaines, Orchardes, Pastures, and Walkes.' These Walks, including that known as 'Addison's Walk,' are most beautiful in their sylvan charm and peaceful serenity. Well may old Antony à Wood extol Magdalen's lovely grounds as 'pleasant meanders shadowed with trees. At some times of the year you will find them as delectable as the banks of the Eurotas, where Apollo himself was wont to walk and sing his lays.'

The following architectural notes on the Great Tower and other parts of the College buildings have been kindly contributed by Mr. Ronald P. Jones, M.A., a former undergraduate.

'The bell-tower is one of the few Gothic examples in England intended to stand detached and complete in itself down to the ground, like the Italian Campanile. Though it now rises from a lower range of buildings, these do not project beyond the tower itself, so that the proper effect can still be obtained from the High Street or from the small quadrangle (or rather triangle) which lies between it and the Chapel. It was designed on the principle (also followed by the Italians in such cases) of concentrating all the decorative interest on the upper story, leaving the rest severely simple. Thereby not only is a large amount of plain wall surface obtained as an effective contrast, but the particular purpose of the tower is made clear by the emphasis laid on the upper part in which the bells are hung. The octagonal pinnacles are carried on projections of the same plan rising from the ground instead of the usual angle buttresses, and that which contains the staircase is somewhat larger than the others. This gives a variety of effect to the different sides, which is further increased by a slight variation in the form of the arched window-heads. Thus it is noticeable that the north and west sides convey an impression of greater strength and power, while the east and south are more delicate and graceful. Perhaps it would be too much to attribute to the designer any deep intention in this, but it is at least remarkable that the stronger sides are mainly seen over the College buildings, while the others appear rising above trees. The eight pinnacles and the battlements are richly carved and pierced, and the band of quatrefoils, with strongly-marked string-courses above and below, seems to tie the design together admirably. The whole belfry could not be surpassed as a piece of exquisite proportion, and it is free from the over-elaborate surface decoration which characterizes so much work of this period.

'The west doorway to the Chapel is another feature of special beauty. The detached outer rib, which echoes the outline of the arch, is an excellent means of relieving the stiffness of the straight mouldings in the angles. It occurs again on the west side of the Founder's Tower, and was repeated in Mr. Bodley's "St. Swithun's" building opposite: but otherwise it appears to be unique in England. On the porch, and elsewhere throughout the buildings, much use is made of the heraldic lily which is taken from the College Arms. An interesting point about the Cloisters consists in the upper rooms being brought forward over the "walks," whereas in the cathedrals the cloister always projects from the general face of the buildings surrounding it.

'The view of the Hall and Chapel, with the Founder's Tower on the right, and the Great Tower in the background, is one of the finest architectural compositions in this or any country. I gain immensely in effect from the fact that the Great Tower is set at a slight angle to the Chapel, owing to the direction of the High Street at this point. As was so often the case, the mediæval builders, by following the natural conditions of the site, obtained an unexpected and delightful result in grouping, which the classicists would have missed by a too strict adherence to symmetry in planning.'

From the north side of the 'Founder's Tower' to the north-west angle of the cloister, the upper story is occupied by the Library: a set of rooms in the north front, opening from the main Library, and two rooms in the 'Founder's Tower' are also used for Library purposes. The main Library is fitted with large cases set at right-angles to the walls, and at the north end with wall cases. The printed books number about 25,000 volumes, those on one side being for the most part theological, those on the other classical and historical works. The more recent books relating to natural science are in the annexe. The Library includes a fair number of early printed books, among them one of the three known copies of the first book printed in London—the work of Antonius Andreas, on the Metaphysics of Aristotle, printed in 1480 by John Lettou—and specimens of the presses of Caxton, of Fust, and of the early Oxford printer Theodoric Rood. Among the manuscripts, which are kept in a small room near the Library door, there are some volumes of special interest—a Gospel-book written and illuminated for Cardinal Wolsey; a twelfth-century Pontifical of English use, noted in his own handwriting, is also preserved in the manuscript-room. His mitre and staff, long treasured in the College, were lost in the time of the Commonwealth: but his pontifical sandals remain, and are now placed in a glass case in the Library.

Before treating of the music of the College reference may be made to a few social matters connected with this ancient seat of learning.

Royal visits have been paid by Edward IV., Richard III., Henry VII. and his son, Arthur, Prince of Wales, Queen Katherine Parr, James I. and his eldest son, Henry, have all been entertained within its walls. The entertainment of Queen Katherine, 'convivio longe splendidissimo,' in 1548, cost the College the sum of £27 13s. 4d., her Majesty being described as 'nuper defuncti Henrici Octavi optimæ memoriæ principis uxor postrema.' In this regal connection the contest between the Fellows and James II. in 1687-8 must be mentioned, of which a full account is given in Mr. Wilson's admirable volume.*

The eminent men of Magdalen include Cardinal Wolsey—a Fellow, Bursar, and Dean of Divinity; Sir Thomas Bodley, of library fame; John Hampden; Joseph Addison, and the notorious Henry Sacheverell: coming to later times, we find Roundell Palmer (the first Lord Selborne), Robert Lowe, and Charles Reade, the novelist. Mention must be made of Martin Joseph Routh, President for nearly sixty-four years, who died (1854) in the hundredth year of his neums with an occasional trace of alphabetical notation; an important MS. of Jorandes; a MS. of the Defensor Pacis; and what is perhaps the autograph MS. of the Gesta Pontificum of William of Malmesbury. Several of the MSS. were given to the College by its Founder, whose copy of the College Statutes, with an inscription in age. It was Dr. Routh who gave this piece of advice to the late Dean Burgon, as the rule which he had found most valuable in his own experience as a scholar: 'You will find it a very good practice, sir, always to verify your references.' Would that all writers followed this Routhian advice.

There is no need to give particulars of the May Day carol sung annually at the top of the great tower, as this ancient custom was fully described in THE MUSICAL TIMES of June, 1900. On the first Monday in Lent—which is one of the special Commemoration days for the remembrance of the Founder and benefactors—during the singing of a metrical version of the Benedictus at Morning Prayer, the Bursar distributes the following amounts in the Chapel: to the President, 16*d.*; each actual Fellow, 8*d.*; each Probationer-Fellow and Chaplain, 6*d.*; each Demy and Clerk, 4*d.*; and each Chorister, 2*d.* 'ab uberiorem refectionem.' This benefaction of £3—founded that even Fellows were capable of escapades, though no such delinquencies can now be laid to their charge. We learn that, in 1548:

One Williams, a Bachelor of Arte, pulled a Priest from the Altar after he had past the Gospel, and flong away his book; whereby that day the Statutes were broken and he ran into wilfull perjurie.

And he with other yong men, some bringing hatchets, came into the church, and marred there such books as were not bought for x^{li}.

An amateur Æsculapius and a Fellow, Laurence Style by name and an old chorister, obtained leave to study medicine, probably with a view to avoiding theological pitfalls. In July, 1555, he took to wearing 'an indecorous dress, most unsuitable for a clerk,' for which he was severely censured, and ordered never to wear such a dress outside his own room. Two years later he made an

VIEW OF THE COLLEGE FROM THE PRESIDENT'S GARDEN.

by a trio of former members of the College—originally included the sum of 4*s.* 'to be spent in the purchase of straw for the prisoners in Oxford Castle,' an amount which has been commuted by the payment of a capital sum for the benefit of prisoners in Oxford jail. Another quaint benefaction is that of Simon Perrot, who left the sum of £1 to be divided, on the Monday before St. Mark's Day, among the President and Fellows present at his Commemoration, in addition to 5*s.* 4*d.* to be divided among the choristers, and 1*s.* 4*d.* to the Præceptor Choristarum; the last-named amount is annually paid to Dr. Varley Roberts in four fourpenny-pieces.

Freaks in University life are usually associated with undergraduates, but Magdalen's records show unsuccessful attempt at medical practice, and was charged with administering an unwholesome dose ('cataplesia minus salubria') to a Chaplain of Queen's! Mr. Style was thereupon warned not to make further similar ventures until he had been licensed by the University to practise the healing art, and at the same time he received an injunction 'to attend all the divine offices from the beginning to the end.' As Mr. Wilson says, 'whether this was intended for his spiritual benefit, or to keep him occupied and secure the safety of the public, does not appear.' In the 16th century some of the junior Fellows, perhaps by way of deriding those who wore the tonsure, took to shaving their own heads; but their tonsorial jest was turned against themselves by an order (more than once enforced by loss of commons) that they should wear night-caps until their hair had grown again! One John Mansell—who made himself especially troublesome and was frequently ‘put out of commons’—not only shaved his head and refused to wear a night-cap, but actually stole apples from the garden, interrupted ‘public exercises,’ and used ‘indecorous words.’ While on the subject of night-caps reference may be made to an eccentric President (Thomas Goodwin, c. 1650) who, having a cold head, was accustomed to wear a peculiar head-gear, which caused him to be known by the name of ‘Nine-caps.’ Addison (Spectator, No. 494, Sept. 26, 1712) gives an amusing account of a candidate for a Demyship, who found himself led into a dark room and confronted by a person (Goodwin) ‘with half-a-dozen night-caps upon his head, and religious horror on his countenance.’ The young man trembled when Goodwin demanded whether he (the would-be Demy) was ‘of the number of the elect,’ and asked for full particulars of his conversion, whether he was prepared for death, &c., inquiries which suggest that Goodwin’s zeal and earnestness were greater than his discretion.

The Quire consists of twenty-nine; wherein
There are four Chaplains, who by turns do say
The Clergy-prayers, and more eight Clerks there been,
And sixteen Choristers, o’er whom bears sway
One, who doth teach them how to sing with ease,
Whose nimble fingers on the organs play
Gravely-composed Church-music: and all these
With different notes, which sweetly do accord,
Sing Allelujah to the living Lord.

Heylin’s Memorial of Waynflete.

Magdalen has always been famous for its music. The choir of the Chapel formed an important part of the foundation; moreover, Waynflete decreed that in the event of a diminution of the College revenues the staff of chaplains and choristers should always be maintained at its full strength. In addition to four priests, eight clerks (singing men), and sixteen choristers, an ‘instructor of the choristers’ was to be added, if none of the Chaplains or Clerks were willing to undertake the duty; this office is now held by the organist, who, by-the-way, is not specified in the Statutes. Magdalen is the only college in Oxford or Cambridge which has a full choral service twice daily. In considering the musical aspects of the College, the organ may first claim attention.

The earliest mention of an organ in the Chapel occurs in the Liber Computi (account-book) of 1481, where a payment of one penny is entered for ‘glew pro organis emendandis.’ In 1486, William Wotton, ‘orkyn maker,’—supposed to have been the earliest organ-builder in this country—provided ‘a pair of organs’ at a cost of £28. In 1508 ‘a pair of organs,’ but costing £8 only, was purchased of John Chamberleyn, a London artificer. One Barbbeye was employed in 1520 to repair the little organs, and five years later the financial resources of the College were taxed to the amount of one penny, paid 'pro le wyer' for mending the organ. We may pass over the names of Hanson, Whyte, Baynton, Butson, Browne, and Chappington—all of whom had a hand in repairing the organs at various periods in the 16th century. Mention must however be made of a payment of 4d. laid out in frankincense for fumigating the Chapel 'post uestionem organorum,' but whether the burning of the organs was intentional, or the result of an accident, it is impossible to say. Dallam appeared on the scene in 1615, and later on repairs were made by one Yorke, to whom, between 1638 and 1641 (according to Bloxam), various sums were paid for 'repairing certain musical instruments at this time used in the Chapel.' It would be interesting to know the nature of these additional accompaniments used in the services of this sanctuary. Thomas Harris, the grandfather of Renatus, received (in 1637) the sum of £40 'pro ecclesia,' evidently for the purchase of a new organ.

Between 1642 and 1654 no mention of an organ is to be found in the College accounts, but that an instrument still remained in the Chapel is proved by the following entry in Evelyn's diary:

A.D. 1654, July 12.—We went to Magdalen College, where we saw the Library, and Chapel, which was in Pontifical order, the Altar only, I think, turned table-wise; and there was still the Double Organ, which abomination, as now esteemed, was almost universally demolished; Mr. Gibbon [? Christopher Gibbons], that famous musician, giving us a taste of his skill and talents upon that instrument.

This organ was soon afterwards given to Cromwell and conveyed to Hampton Court Palace, where it was placed in the Great Gallery, and it would seem that one of the Protector's amusements was to be entertained with this instrument during his leisure hours. It came back to Oxford at the Restoration, as the Liber Computi of 1660 records this disbursement:

Solut. pro transportatione organ. pneumat.
de Hampton Court £16 10s.

In 1737 this Harris organ found its way to Tewkesbury Abbey, where it still remains.*

Thomas Schwarbrook built the next organ (in 1737), and Messrs. Munday, Byfield, Blyth, and Bishop each and severally repaired the said instrument between 1742 and 1850. In 1855 Messrs. Gray & Davison built the present organ (of four manuals), the specification of which, allowing for the stop changes that have since been made, now stands as follows:

The Register of Magdalen choristers is almost complete, and dates from the year 1485 to the present time. These favoured young gentlemen receive their education at Magdalen School, an important adjunct to the College, founded by Waynflete in 1487. As a former head-master of the School, himself an ex-chorister, has said:

Bishop Waynflete, the pious and munificent founder of that college, did not look upon his Choristers as mere necessary appendages for the due performance of church offices. They were considered as much a part of the body corporate as the fellows, demies, and other members of the foundation. The founder ordered that in case of great scarcity or dearth, and the failure of the college rents, the number of Choristers should be reduced only, from sixteen to eight; whereas, if the scarcity continue, he wills the demies of his college to be 'totally suppressed,' and afterwards even the number of fellows was to be reduced, rather than the boys of his choir entirely abandoned. §

Among former choristers were four bishops and other dignitaries of the Church, while from their ranks came the following cathedral and collegiate organists: Nathaniel Gyles (Windsor), Thomas Tomkins (Worcester), William Hine (Gloucester), H. R. Bennett (Chichester), and Benjamin Blyth (Magdalen). Other well-known names are those of Charles Locket (the principal tenor at the production of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah'), Richard Redhead, and the Rev. E. Vine Hall.

Oh! happier they, whose fairer fortune falls
By Waynflete's tower, or Wykeham's sainted walls;
There watchful eyes are o'er their kind hearts tend,
And every Fellow is the Quire-boy's friend:
Till, train'd and tutor'd thoughtfully, ere long
The Boy, now made by consecration strong,
In some high Minster lifts the priestly song.

Ecclesia Dei (1848).

At the present time the choristers—who, it should be noted, wear academical dress—are boarded and well cared for at the Magdalen College School House, a handsome building, designed in 1894 by Sir A. Blomfield, and standing in grounds sloping down to the river on the opposite bank to that on which the College itself is situated. In former days those young songsters 'slept in truckle beds separately in the chambers of the fellows or chaplains.' Their dress was a kind of livery, probably not unlike a Christ's Hospital boy. When Wolsey was Dean of Divinity it belonged to his department to provide the livery which the founder had ordered to be worn by the College and its dependents. In 1501 the great cardinal rode all the way to London to buy cloth for the choristers, the bill for which amounted to £53 17s. 9d.; and he was paid 5s. for 'the new livery of Style,'—obviously a stylish chorister—'containing twoyards and a half.' This Master Style became the undergraduate who distinguished himself and very nearly extinguished a Chaplain of Queen's, to which incident reference has already been made. A MS. inventory of the year 1495 records, under pro pueris, 'tunics, red and white, and crimson, with orfrees [borders] of damask and velvet, one set of albs of blue damask, and two with apparels of red silk; and, lastly, a banner of St. Nicholas, the patron of children.' In former days the choristers waited at table in Hall; and in connection with the May Day function already referred to, we learn that 'The clerks [singing-men] and choristers, with the rest of the performers, are for their pains allow'd a side of lamb, &c., for their breakfast'; the '&c.' is not recorded. On the eve of St. Nicholas an entertainment, at the expense of the College, was given to the choristers in the Hall, at which the boy-bishop was chosen and presented with gloves, &c., as marks of dignity, for which payments occur in the Liber Compti of the College; and on Maundy Thursday the President was accustomed to wash the feet of seven choristers, to whom also a present of money was made at the charge of the College.

Brief mention only can be made of the Odes in celebration of St. Cecilia's Day which emanated from the College: e.g., one written by Joseph Addison about 1692; another (in 1693) by Thomas Yalden, a Demy, and set to music by Daniel Purcell, then organist of the Chapel; and another by Addison, with music also by Daniel Purcell, in 1699. It is curious to learn that, in 1722, the conduct of the President in permitting the presence of 'a vast number of ladies at "a concert of music" in the College Hall, was regarded by the "wise men" as very scandalous'; and that not much more than half-a-century ago the office of Academical Clerk, 'by some strange abuse, had not unfrequently been conferred on persons adapted neither by voice nor ear for such a situation,' i.e., singing in the Chapel choir!

Dr. S. S. Wesley's exercise for his degree of Doctor of Music—the eight-part anthem 'O Lord, Thou art my God?'—was performed in Magdalen College Chapel on June 20, 1839, the composer, who had matriculated at the College, presiding at the organ on that occasion.

Volume ii. of Bloxam's invaluable 'Registers of Magdalen College' contains a complete list of the Instructors of the Choristers and Organists from the year 1483 to 1857. 'It should be remembered, however, that at this early period the office of organist was not the department of a single individual, but of several of the musical staff of the College Chapel in turn.' Thus says Mr. John E. West in his book 'Cathedral Organists, past and present,' a source of useful information to which the reader is referred for further details concerning the Magdalen organists. It is interesting to find so early as 1500 the name of Perrot, considering that the bearer of a similar patronymic (Sir Walter Parratt) held the office three and a-half centuries later. One John Sheppard (organist in 1542) seems to have foreshadowed the highwayman propensities of his namesake, as he 'captured a poor boy at Malmesbury and brought him in chains to Oxford, probably with a view to pressing him into the service of the choir.' 'He was fined a week's commons,' continues Mr. Wilson (from whose 'History' we quote), 'on the ground that he had brought a stranger into College without leave. But about a fortnight later, some further details became known. His "immitte factum" had brought discredit upon the College; and as he had represented himself, on his journey to Oxford, as "the principal officer of the College after the President," the odium of his proceedings had fallen upon the Vice-President! Sheppard was again "sharply admonished for his impudence," but apparently escaped any further penalty. Richard Nicholson, Sheppard's successor, contributed to 'The Triumphs of Oriana' by composing the madrigal 'Sing shepherds all.' Is not that a curious coincidence?

The first most distinguished name in the roll of Magdalen organists is that of Dr. Benjamin Rogers in the 17th century. He, like Sheppard, got into hot water with the College authorities and was ultimately dismissed, though he received a pension of £30 per annum. Bloxam thus refers to one cause of Dr. Ben. Rogers's dismissal:

His troublesome behaviour in the Chapel, where usually he would talk so loud in the organ loft, that he offended the company, and would not leave it off, though he hath been sent to by the President not to make such a scandalous noise there. There were frequent complaints of him from the Clerks, to whom, especially the Chanter, he used to be very cross, in not playing Services as they were willing and able to sing, but out of a thwarting humour would play nothing but Canterbury Tune, wherein he minded not the honour of the College, but his own ease and laziness.

Mr. John S. Bumpus possesses a complete collection of the church compositions of Dr. Ben. Rogers, concerning which he writes:

This book (entirely in the autograph of Dr. Philip Hayes) contains five Services—in A minor, D, E minor, F, and G; the Magdalen May Morning Hymn; seventeen anthems; and the 'Act Song'—'Laudate Dominum, omnes gentes'—Psalm 117, for eight voices, written by Rogers for his degree of Mus. D., and performed (so a note of Philip Hayes' avers) 'in that great and solemn Act, celebrated in Sheldon's Theatre, on the 12th of July, 1669, being the third day after the dedication of it.' The Evening Service in G is very quaint and beautiful. It has solos for various voices with independent accompaniment, and short symphonies.

There is no doubt that Hayes intended publishing this volume at some time or other. The whole is beautifully written out in score with figured basses, and evidently 'passed for press.' After Hayes's death the book passed to Archdeacon Heathcote, of Winchester, then to his son, Rev. G. W. Heathcote, at whose sale in 1893 I purchased it, with a lot of interesting old church music.

A good number of the pieces in this book have been published at various times by Playford, Boyce, Page, Ouseley, Cope, Rimbault, and others. The last-named, in his Collection of Cathedral Services (Chappell, 1847), assigns the Service in G to Peter Rogers, a singing-man, at Windsor, Benjamin Rogers's father. But on what authority I know not. Hayes, who copied nearly all these things from Rogers's own manuscripts, unhesitatingly assigns it to Dr. Rogers, and says nothing of the father.

Considerations of space will only permit of the mere mention of such well-known names as Daniel Purcell, brother of the great Henry Purcell, Doctors William and Philip Hayes (father and son), Sir John Stainer and Sir Walter Parratt, all of whom held the office of organist.

During the beneficent regimes—covering the period between 1859 and 1882—of the two distinguished musicians last named, the Chapel services reached a very high standard of choral excellence which has been well maintained to this day. So world-wide is their reputation that there is no need to enlarge upon their beauty or to the effect they have upon the worshipper. Musically and devotionally they stand upon a very high plane. The Chapel has perfect acoustical properties, and the well blended and tuneful voices fall upon the ear with peculiar charm. One specially commendable feature is the deliberate manner in which the Psalms are chanted, whereby the incomparable beauty of those magnificent tone-poems is made manifest. The Psalmist's injunction 'Sing ye praises with understanding' is fully observed at Magdalen College Chapel, Oxford.

The present Instructor of the choristers and Organist is Dr. John Varley Roberts, a typical Yorkshireman. Born at Stanningley, near Leeds, he held his first organistship when only twelve years old at St. John's Church, Farsley. His subsequent appointments have been St. Bartholomew's Church, Armley, from 1862 to 1868, and Halifax Parish Church, where he had a fine choir of eighty voices, and a splendid organ which cost £3,000. While at Halifax he wrote the anthem 'Seek ye the Lord,' which has made known his name unto the ends of the earth. Upon the appointment of Sir Walter Parratt to St. George's Chapel, Windsor, Dr. Roberts was elected to his present office in 1882. His musical activities at Oxford have not been restricted to Magdalen, though the College services have the warmest place in his affections. He was organist of St. Giles's Church, 1885-93; conductor of the Oxford Choral and Philharmonic Society during the same period; and founder and first conductor of the University Glee and Madrigal Society. He has given University professorial lectures on harmony and counterpoint, and has been an examiner for University musical degrees. Dr. Roberts has composed much church music, e.g., some forty anthems, four complete services, in addition to an Evening Service, organ solos, songs, part-songs, &c.; an oratorio entitled 'Jonah,' and the cantatas 'Advent,' 'The Incarnation,' and the 'Passion'; while the editorship of the 'Parish Church Chant Book' and the composition of Chant Services furnish proof of his practical knowledge of parish church requirements. His great reputation as a church choir trainer is undisputed: in this connection his 'Treatise on a practical method of training choristers' (Henry Frowde, 1898) contains the results of his long and successful work in teaching choir boys.

Dr. Roberts has recently been the gratified recipient of a testimonial from the Foundation members of Magdalen College, an expression of goodwill which has taken the threefold form of an address, a handsome silver salver, and a cheque.

The inscription on the salver reads:

IOANNI VARLEY ROBERTS, MUS. D.

D.D. Amici Magdalenenses
A. S. MCMV.

The address, appropriately illuminated, is couched in the following appreciative terms:

To John Varley Roberts, Doctor of Music,
Organist of Magdalen College.

We the undersigned, a few out of the many friends whom you can number in the College, of which the Chapel and its services are so integral and important a part, have had the privilege of watching with special closeness, the unstinted and unflagging skill and resource which you have for a period now not far off a quarter of a century, devoted to the music of the College.

We believe that you have never been more energetic, never more successful in the discharge of your duties than you are to-day. We hope that your rare powers may be continued in their plenitude to you and to the College for a number of years to come.

In the meantime we ask you to accept this Address and the gifts which accompany it, as some recognition and record of your for which we feel equal admiration and gratitude.

Among the names appended to the above Address are the President and Fellows of the College, the Bishop of Stepney, the Rev. Dr. Ottley (Regius Professor of Pastoral Theology), the Rev. Dr. Russell (Vice-Principal of Brasenose College), Sir Benjamin Brodie, Bart., Sir J. S. Burdon-Sanderson, D.M., and the Rev. Dr. Lock (Ireland Professor of Exegesis and Warden of Keble College), in addition to many other former Fellows and Foundation members of the College.

DR. J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

ORGANIST AND INSTRUCTOR OF THE CHORISTS.
(Photograph by Messrs. Hills & Saunders, Oxford.)

Two other appended names must also be mentioned as of special interest in pleasantly linking the past organists with the present holder of that office—Mr. J. F. R. Stainer, M.A. (eldest son of the late Sir John Stainer) and Sir Walter Parratt.

For valued assistance in preparing the foregoing article the writer acknowledges his indebtedness to the Rev. H. A. Wilson, M.A., Fellow, Librarian, and Founder's Chaplain of the College; to Dr. J. Varley Roberts, Instructor of the Chorists and Organist; to Mr. John S. Bumpus; also to Mr. Ronald P. Jones, M.A., for the use of his excellent photographs and his architectural notes.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

SCHUMANN'S MUSIC IN ENGLAND.

The first performance in England of Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri' was given by the Philharmonic Society in 1856, to which reference will subsequently be made. It may not be generally known, however, that this performance was anticipated by two presentations of the work in the land of Moore's birth. These were given, at the Antient Concert Rooms, Great Brunswick Street, Dublin, on February 10 and March 8, 1854, by a society called the Royal Choral Institute, conducted by John William Glover.

An advertisement of the repeat performance calls the cantata 'Schumann's great work on Moore's poem,' and in a notice (in Freeman's Journal) of the first concert we read:

This was originally set to a translation of Moore's beautiful poem, and the music has been now re-adapted to the poet's own lyrics, specially for the concert of last evening.

Who made the re-adaptation is not stated. The orchestra on that occasion was led by R. M. Levey, and the conductor, Glover, received a dictated letter from Schumann (he being ill at the time) thanking him for 'the excellent performance of the work.'

While we are on Irish soil the opportunity may be taken of calling attention to an article which appeared in The Express (a Dublin daily newspaper) of May 22, 1869. Here it is, quoted in extenso:

SCHUMANN.

Schumann is a composer who has caused more controversy between musical critics than almost any man of his time. There is, however, one point on which they well nigh all agree, viz., his originality. This is, beyond a doubt, his great feature, being never far-fetched, as some of the German compositions of the modern school are.

Most people in the present day would scoff at the notion of Schumann being compared to Mendelssohn. Certainly Mendelssohn was a very great composer. But, if we consider, originality is not his great feature. He founded his style on that of Bach. And, as he admits himself, he copied him and his school very closely, as may be seen in the similarity of structure between his Fugue in E minor (No. 1) and that of Sebastian Bach in D minor, published with the 'Chromatische Fantasie,' and more especially in his oratorios ('St. Paul,' in the greatest degree), of which, if we compare the recitatives with those in the 'Passion Musik' of Sebastian Bach, we shall find their exact counterparts in a great many instances.

Now, Schumann followed no school. We might almost say he founded his own, as Sebastian Bach did. We all know how little Bach was thought of in his own day. Why? Because he was original, and did not copy the style of Corelli, as did his great contemporary Handel. In exactly the same way is Schumann now cried down, who, though to Bach's height he never will attain, still, it may be, will occupy no mean place in the list of musical celebrities.

Another so-called fault in Schumann is said to be his want of melody. But in answer to this accusation we only say, 'Examine his music with the intention of finding a melody, and seldom, if ever, will you fail.' This error arises from not looking into his music, so as to understand it. All the points of a really good composition will never be seen through at first sight. We have to examine its details, either by frequent playing or listening.

Mendelssohn's music has often been accused of this want of melody. But we all see now how full of it it is. And so Schumann. We need only look at the lovely slow movements of the B flat and C major symphonies, at his 'Kinderszenen,' and we shall find melody, and that of the most beautiful kind, to our heart's content.

But Schumann has one feature which bids fair to rival even his originality, viz., his attention to the form of his compositions. In this beauty of form Mendelssohn shone, as did Bach, Handel, Mozart, and all great composers, with the exception of Schubert, in some cases. Schubert, however, did not lack it in his songs, though in some orchestral compositions his ideas, beautiful as they are, are too rambling.

All sides allow the beauty of Schumann's quintet in E flat. And why? It is clear and sparkling. In the first of these epithets lies the true cause of its popularity. Far be it from us, however, to impeach it as a composition on account of its clearness of detail. On the contrary, it is one of the most beautiful of the composer's concerted pieces.

One remark, in conclusion. We often hear it said when we ask, 'Do you like Schumann's works?' 'Oh! yes, his little pieces very much.' Here is shown the whole reason of his unpopularity. His little pieces are exquisite, clear, and (for the most part) easy. People therefore say, 'We will not trouble ourselves with abstruse works,' and do not go farther than the little pieces. Thereby, if there did not exist men like Herr Manns, Mr. Ella, &c., who would bring forward and perform these 'abstruse' pieces, as well as they can be performed, Schumann's nobler compositions would, at all events for a time, be laid on the shelf.

The writer of the above article was an enthusiastic young Irish musician, Charlie Stanford by name. In a recent letter having reference to the above article, Sir Charles Stanford says: 'Poor style; but I was only 16, and a wild Schumannite preaching in the wilderness.'

To return to London and the first English performance of 'Paradise and the Peri.' This took place at the Philharmonic Society's concert of June 23, 1856, 'By Command' of Queen Victoria who, with the Prince Consort, honoured the concert with her presence. Sterndale Bennett conducted, and the principal soprano part was sung by Madame Jenny Goldschmidt Lind, as the programme records her name. The English words were adapted specially for the performance by William Bartholomew, whose proof copy of the text is before us. It was this performance that caused Mr. J. W. Davison to begin a leading article in the Musical World thus:

Robert Schumann has had his innings, and been bowled out—like Richard Wagner. Paradise and the Peri has gone to the tomb of the Lohengrins.

At that time Madame Schumann was in London, paying her first visit to these shores. At the New Philharmonic Society's concert of May 14, 1856 (conducted by Dr. Wylde), she played her husband's Pianoforte Concerto, this being the first performance in England of that ever-beautiful work. It may not be without interest to quote, in parallel columns, two criticisms of Madame Schumann's playing at her recital of June 30, within a month of her husband's death:

Musical World.

The reception accorded to this accomplished lady on her first coming to England will no doubt encourage her to repeat her visit. Need we say, to make use of a homely phrase, that she will be 'welcome as the flowers in May.'

Athenæum.

That this lady is among the greatest female players who have ever been heard has been universally admitted. That she is past her prime, may be now added without discourtesy, when we take leave of her, nor do we fancy that she would do wisely to adventure a second visit to England.

A change from criticism to Crystal Palace is made in recording performances at Sydenham of the following overtures:

Genoveva	-	-	-	January 10, 1857.
Manfred	-	-	-	April 4, 1857.
Hermann and Dorothea	-	-	-	February 22, 1862.
Julius Cæsar	-	-	-	September 26, 1863.
Braut von Messina	-	-	-	April 10, 1869.

Whether all these were 'for the first time in England' cannot with certainty be determined, but in all probability their English introduction can be placed to the credit of Sir August Manns, who conducted each performance. Certain it is that a selection from 'Manfred' was given for the first time in this country at the Crystal Palace on April 25, 1874, the English words having been adapted by Mr. C. A. Barry. The first performance of the complete work, with the text recited (Mr. Charles Fry), was given by Mr. George Halford, at the Town Hall, Birmingham, on April 16, 1896.

In March, 1868, Mr. Adolph Schloesser, an ardent admirer of the composer, gave a series of four Schumann evenings at the Beethoven Rooms, Harley Street, when he introduced the following works to English audiences:

Fantasie Stücke for pianoforte and clarinet, Op. 73.

Fantasie Stücke for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, Op. 88.

Stücke im Volkston for violoncello and pianoforte, Op. 102.

Märchenbilder for pianoforte and viola, Op. 113.

Märchen Erzählungen, Op. 132.

The Concertstück in D minor for pianoforte and orchestra (Op. 134) was introduced into this country by Madame Schumann (who played the solo part) at the Philharmonic concert of March 16, 1868.

Under the conductorship of Mr. A. H. D. Prendergast the Amateur Musical Union performed Schumann's 'Requiem' (not the 'Mignon' Requiem) for the first time in this country on June 18, 1869; the same Society had previously given a selection from 'Genoveva' on June 6, 1864. The Cambridge University Musical Society (conductor, Sir Charles Stanford) claim to have introduced the 'Fest' overture (Op. 123) and 'Faust' (Part III.), the latter on May 21, 1875. The Bach Choir performed 'The New Year's Song' (Op. 144), on April 6, 1878; and between 1879 and 1887 the London Musical Society performed 'The King's Son' (Op. 116) and 'The Minstrel's Curse' (Op. 139). Edinburgh, in the sixties, had a true Schumannite in the person of Sir Alexander Mackenzie who, as a first violin, performed several chamber compositions in the Scottish capital, one of his coadjutors being Professor F. Niecks, then the viola-player of the party.

While the foregoing résumé makes no pretensions to be complete, we may conclude these informal notes by mentioning that Schumann intended to visit England in 1854; and those who wish to see sprightly specimens of the Schumann controversy forty years ago may find them in the Pall Mall Gazette of March 19 and 23, 1866—two communications signed 'Z' and 'A' respectively. We have every reason to know that 'Z' was Mr. J. W. Davison, an anti-Schumannite, and that his doughty opponent 'A' was Sir George Grove, an arch-Schumannite.

AN UNKNOWN PORTRAIT OF HANDEL.

In an ante-room of Sir John Soane's Museum, Lincoln's Inn Fields, is a medallion portrait of Handel which is practically unknown. No biographer of the master refers to it, and we believe this presentment of the great composer has never before been published. The portrait is in the form hair, the coat, necktie, &c.—all point to its being the work of Roubiliac. So strongly does he hold this opinion that he thinks if the whitewash and distemper which cover the medallion were removed, the name of Roubiliac would probably be revealed. (Perhaps the Trustees of the Museum will allow this to be done.) A specially interesting feature of the portrait is the absence of the wig or of a plaster cast which Mr. George J. Frampton, R.A., the distinguished sculptor, has been kind enough to examine for the purposes of this reproduction. Mr. Frampton believes it to have been done from life, and to be the model for some monument of Handel; moreover, the details—the curl of the cap which forms the complement of all other representations of Handel, accessories characteristic of the period: but here we have the composer of the 'Messiah' in his un-wigged, homely aspect, while the firm mouth, strong chin, and massive jaw are quite familiar in all the other portraits of the master.

The question will naturally be asked: 'What is the history of this medallion?' To which we must reply: 'None, so far as can be ascertained.' The courteous curator of the Museum, Mr. Walter L. Spiers, A.R.I.B.A., writes: 'I am sorry to say that I can find no record of how it came into Soane's possession.' From the 'General Description [catalogue] of Sir John Soane's Museum' we learn that

In the year 1833 Sir John Soane obtained an Act of Parliament (3 Will. IV., cap. 4), intitled 'An Act for settling and preserving Sir John Soane's Museum, Library, and Works of Art, in Lincoln's Inn Fields, in the county of Middlesex, for the benefit of the Public, and for establishing a sufficient Endowment for the due maintenance of the same.

Sir John Soane, R.A., F.R.S., F.S.A., was Professor of Architecture at the Royal Academy of Arts; Architect to the Bank of England—of which building he designed the present four façades, as well as the rotunda, and most of the public offices—and a most distinguished member of his profession. Born near Reading, September 10, 1753, he died January 20, 1837, aged eighty-three years, at his house, 13, Lincoln's Inn Fields, the valuable contents of which—books, manuscripts, paintings, prints, drawings, maps, models, and other works of art—are now accessible to the public. The inference is that Sir John Soane acquired the Handel medallion in the ordinary course of adding to and enriching his splendid collection. It only remains to be said that we are indebted to Mr. R. J. Pitcher for having called our attention to this most interesting Handelian relic.

Occasional Notes.

MUSIC'S EMPIRE.

First was the world as one great cymbal made,
Where jarring winds to infant nature played;
All music was a solitary sound,
To hollow rocks and murmuring fountains bound
Jubal first made the wilder notes agree,
And Jubal tuned music's jubilee;
He called the echoes from their sullen cell,
And built the organ's city, where they dwell;
Each sought a consort in that lovely place,
And virgin trebles wed the manly bass;
From whence the progeny of members new
Into harmonious colonies withdrew;
Some to the lute, some to the viol went,
And others chose the cornet eloquent;
These practising the wind, and those the wire,
To sing man's triumphs, or in heaven's choir.
Then Music, the mosaic of the air,
Did of all these a solemn noise prepare,
With which she gained the Empire of the ear,
Including all between the earth and sphere.
Victorious sounds! yet here your homage do
Unto a gentler conqueror than you;
Who, though he flies the music of his praise,
Would with you Heaven's Hallelujahs raise.

ANDREW MARVELL.
(1621-1678).

His Majesty the King has made Sir Hubert Parry a Commander of the Royal Victorian Order.

Local historians, provided they be accurate, deserve every encouragement, therefore we welcome a tastefully got-up booklet entitled 'The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society: a retrospect,' printed at The Caxton Press, Nottingham, and ably compiled by Mr. Arthur Johnson. In these ninety-eight pages the ups and downs of this new flourishing musical organization are pleasantly recorded, together with a list of all the concerts given for the last fifty years. Although the seeds were sown by a pioneer amateur of Nottingham, Mr. Alfred J. Lowe, some sixty-years ago, the Society was not really organized until 1856. On November 4 of that year, the ninth anniversary of Mendelssohn's death, 'St. Paul' was performed for the first time in Nottingham, the conductor on that occasion being a native of the town, Edmund Hart Turpin by name, then 'a wildly enthusiastic musician of twenty.' The 'organist and pianist' at that concert was William Sheldermine, who soon after became the first permanent conductor of the Society. His successors have included such well-known names as Henry Farmer, John Adcock, Henry J. Wood, and Allen Gill, under whose energizing sway the Society has made good headway. It appears that in 1866 Henry Farmer received as conductor £25 per annum as compared with £350 paid to the holder of the office thirty years later; while the fees paid to individual performers have ranged from 5s. to £150.

With commendable judgment Mr. Johnson lights up the inevitable prosaic part of his 'Retrospect' with some amusing matter. For instance, in 1868, Madame Sainton Dolby suggested to the committee that some of her recent successes should be mentioned in the announcements of her forthcoming appearances, 'as a certain amount of puffing always benefits concert-givers and artists alike.' Perfectly frank, if nothing else. Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day' was a favourite work in the Society's earlier years. In the solo and chorus 'Give way now to pleasure' of that cantata, the chorus ejaculate the words 'too soon.' We are told that 'on one occasion, the late Mr. William Elliott (of respected memory), in his more than usually vigorous manner, managed to break out with "too soon," just one bar too soon, convulsing the choir with laughter almost to the extent of a breakdown.' At one time the Society was wont to assist the imagination of its audiences by inserting 'stage business' indications in its programme-books, e.g., in Costa's 'Eli'—an oratorio which the late Mr. J. W. Davison said was half 'Elijah,' yet not half so good:

'Till darkness melts in light' (He [Samuel] lies down).

'Bless the Lord,—O—my soul—bless—' (He falls asleep).

'Because the wicked forsake My law' (Soft music) (Samuel advances to Eli).

'And the Ark—the Ark—the Ark of God,

The Ark of God—is taken!' (Eli falls backward).

In a notice which appeared in a French paper of a performance of the 'Domestic Symphony' under Mr. Henry J. Wood's direction at Queen's Hall, the writer suggests that possibly Richard Strauss may have been inspired by the following lines in a Shakespeare sonnet:

Resembling sire and son and happy mother

Who, all in me, on a pleasing not do singy.

If the French printers of the 18th century thus maltreated our national poet, it is easy to understand why Voltaire regarded Shakespeare as a barbarian.

Mr. Algernon Ashton has volumized one of his hobbies in a book entitled 'Truth, wit, and wisdom,' which Messrs. Chapman & Hall, Ltd., have recently published. Here we have, according to the sub-title of the volume, 'a mine of information,' consisting of '525 letters to the Press, 1887-1903, from the pen of Algernon Ashton.' The receipt of these letters at the various newspaper offices appears to have afforded some sport to various sub-editors, judging from the headings which they themselves added—headings which Mr. Ashton retains: e.g. 'Ungallant Ashton,' 'Be soft! He comes again,' 'Ask us another,' 'What he thinks about it,' 'Mr. Algernon Ashton, a very curious person,' 'A. A. on the warpath,' and so on. The classified index of subjects written upon by 'A. A.' furnishes the following result:

Personal	112 letters	Sepulchral	109	} = 196 letters of grave import.
Miscellaneous	82	Monumental	62
Musical	71	Necrological	25
Political	52
Humorous	12

The 'old mortality' propensities of Mr. Ashton are shown in the above summary of his epistolary undertaking; indeed, the first and the last letter in the book treat of the graves of two distinguished Georges—Cruikshank and Grove. The following specimen dug out from this 'mine of information' serves to show the author's keenness of observation:

THAT EAGLE EYE!

To the Editor of The Pall Mall Gazette.

Dear Sir,—The Jubilee inscription which has just been chiselled on the pavement in front of St. Paul's Cathedral is still not quite correct, as the masons have outlined the date as "A.D. 1897," instead of "A.D. 1897." The full-stop between the A and the D ought certainly not to be missing.

Yours very faithfully,

44, Hamilton Gardens, ALGERNON ASHTON.
St. John's Wood, N.W.,
September 10, 1900.

To this letter is appended a footnote which reads: 'The omission was shortly afterwards rectified.' In the 'humorous' section we find a pungent communication, headed 'Murder in A flat':

Sir,—Notwithstanding the fact of my having been a professional musician all my life, I had hitherto no idea that murder—the most dreadful of all crimes—had any sort of connection with music. Yet a week or two ago, while perusing one of my usual daily papers, I came across the following headline, printed in large, conspicuous letters:—

"MURDER IN A FLAT!"

It was a revelation indeed!

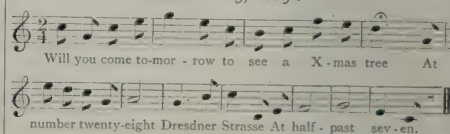

Is it not more of a revelation to discover that Mr. Ashton has had no experience of music that is murdered in the execution thereof? To return to the more grave aspects of 'Truth, wit, and wisdom.' It is interesting to find that Mr. Ashton abhors cremation, and still more interesting to learn that his 'own ultimate resting-place will probably be in Kensal Green Cemetery, where' he says, 'I shall lie embalmed in a brick vault.' May the day be far distant when the genial epistoler joins the distinguished company resting in that famous campo santo. In the meantime his calligraphic hobby, as set forth in these 443 pages, will provide pleasure and amusement to readers not a few.

In a report of the recent Norwich Musical Festival printed in an important London newspaper, Sir Hubert Parry's humorous setting of Browning's 'Pied Piper' is referred to as 'the most mirthful tragedy of Mr. Hamelin.'

Max Reger, whose portrait, together with some biographical details, we gave in our May issue, continues to make a great stir in musical Germany. He is unique amongst gifted composers in that he has waited till he reached the high opus number 90 before offering the public an orchestral piece. In these days, when babies write symphonies (and conduct them, too!), and every neophyte worries himself into hysterics and long hair because Dr. Richter, Dr. Cowen, Mr. Wood, or Mr. Dan Godfrey refuse to give his 'Autobiographical Poem for grand orchestra (Op. 1)' an early hearing, Reger's reticence is indeed a wonder. He wrote some orchestral works as a boy, but they doubtless went to make a bonfire when he commenced studying his beloved Bach. Since then he has written chiefly for the organ, and developed a style which for polyphonic complexity and modulatory freedom has not its equal.

That a musician like Max Reger, wielding the sceptre of contrapuntal ingenuity, should choose the title of 'Sinfonietta' for his first incursion into the Magic Flower Garden of the modern orchestra suggests a becoming, albeit old-fashioned, modesty. That he should employ an orchestra without trombones, and with only two extra horns, a harp and third kettle-drum to distinguish it from Mozart's symphony orchestra, savours almost of affectation. We expect something simple, something that might come as an agreeable contrast after the complexities of Strauss, Elgar, von Hausegger, Mahler, Delius, &c. The first page of the score seems to fulfil our expectations, for it conveys the impression that we shall rock ourselves upon the simple 6-8 rhythm of a pleasant Serenade. But turn over the leaves, and polyphonic puzzles and chromatic crabbednesses appear in ever-increasing profusion, until we realize that we have before us one of the most bewilderingly polyphonic and chromatic scores in existence. But we must express our delight that a strong young master has arisen to write a symphony without even a headline for a 'programme.' Here we have once more a powerful work which is meant to be taken as music and nothing else. That Germany is not deaf to his appeal is shown by the extraordinary fact that before even the score of this Sinfonietta was published, or the first performance, by the enterprising Musikalische Gesellschaft at Essen took place (on October 8, under Felix Mottl), no less than thirty-eight performances of the work were announced.

Forty years ago the late Dr. Swinnerton Heap was studying in Leipzig as the second holder of the Mendelssohn Scholarship. The ever-kind Moscheles took an interest in the young Englishman, his pupil, and at Christmas sent him the following invitation, which is dated December 23, 1865:

Will you come to-mor-row to see a X-mas tree At number twenty-eight Dresdner Strasse At half-past sev-en.

For the use of the above we are indebted to Dr. Swinnerton Heap's son, Mr. J. S. Heap, of Liverpool.

The programme of a benefit concert recently given in a certain English village contained the following item:

PIANO SOLO ... 8 tude in D flat ... Stephen Hiller, Mr. B. Weller.

This well and Weller-played piece was doubtless interpreted with a certain amount of octavetude.

Another musical landmark in London is being transformed out of knowledge. Moreover, it is one of the most interesting and not the least ancient of such reminders of the past. We refer to the house wherein Handel lived and died. This habitation—now No. 25, Brook Street, New Bond Street—has up to the present time been a private house; but the lower portion of the premises is now being turned into a shop, with the result that the front of the house will in future present a very different appearance from that of nearly two-hundred years. The first time that Handel's name appeared in the rate-books of St. George's, Hanover Square (in 1725), he was rated at £25 per annum for this house. About twelve years ago Dr. W. H. Cummings, in visiting Handel's domicile, discovered a fine cast-lead cistern, on the front of which, in bold relief, was this inscription: '1721. G. F. H.'; therefore, the great composer must have occupied the house for at least thirty-eight years. It was from here, too, that the funeral cortege started on that April day in 1759 to convey the remains of the mighty master to their last resting-place in Westminster Abbey. It is to be hoped that the commemorative tablet which has been on the front of Handel's house for many years will be replaced, and in such a position as to be easily read.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie, in his thoughtful utterances on 'Scholarship and composition prizes' (reported on p. 795), voiced the opinion of many others who are concerned for the welfare of young native musicians. Unless he obtain a more or less precarious livelihood by teaching, or has private means, the budding composer fresh from the schools faces the world with a poor outlook. It is at this period of his career, before he has felt his feet and claimed the attention of the public and the publishers, that he needs some practical help. Sir Alexander's 'patronage' suggestion is good. Who will volunteer to become patrons? His remarks on English opera, though somewhat of an old story, are no less worthy of serious attention.

The attention of composers is directed to the 'Cobbett Musical Competition,' offered under the auspices of the Worshipful Company of Musicians. This valuable opportunity consists of three prizes—(i.) (£50), presented by Mr. W. W. Cobbett, (ii.) (£10), presented by the Worshipful Master, and (iii.) a special prize (£10), presented by Mr. Hermann Sternberg. The subject of the competition is thus set forth:

The composition of a short 'Phantasy' in the form of a String Quartet for two violins, viola and violoncello. The parts must be of equal importance, and the duration of the piece should not exceed twelve minutes. Though the Phantasy is to be performed without a break, it may consist of different sections varying in tempi and rhythms.

Mr. Sternberg's special prize (£10) will be given 'to the competitor whose work offers in the opinion of the judges the best example of an art-form suited for a short piece of chamber music for strings.' The works selected for publication will be issued by the Musicians' Company, to whom the copyrights shall be assigned. The competition is open only to British subjects, and the manuscripts (score and parts) are to be delivered to Mr. T. C. Fenwick, Clerk to the Company, at 16, Berners Street, London, W., before the close of the year 1905.

An interesting outcome of the entente cordiale will be the visit of the London Symphony Orchestra to Paris early in the New Year, under, it is hoped, the highest possible patronage. Two concerts, to take place at the Châtelet Théâtre on the afternoons of January 10 and 12, are to be given under the joint-conductorship of M. Messager and Sir Charles Stanford. In these the Orchestra will have the valued co-operation of Madame Brema, Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Plunket Greene (all of whom are giving their services), in addition to 300 chorus-singers from Leeds, who will most assuredly give our French friends a magnificent display of English choral singing. This enterprise has not only been initiated by the London Symphony Orchestra, but each member of this excellent organization will forego his fee and, moreover, defray his own personal expenses. Such an event is unique in the history of English orchestral music: it is one that will enlist the sympathy and call forth the good wishes of all music-lovers on this side of the Channel.

'Three things have impressed me during my visit to London—St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, and the London Symphony Orchestra.' Thus said Herr Raabe at the conclusion of his recent and first visit to England.

Mr. W. Barclay Squire, of the British Museum, writes:

The note on the collection of madrigals called 'Il Trionfo di Dori,' in your issue of November (p. 721) needs some correction. The book was first published at Venice in 1592, and the dedication (not the imprint) is dated February 20. Complete copies of this edition are in the Liceo Musicale at Bologna and the Landesbibliothek at Cassel. The Verona copy mentioned in your note only consists of four of the six part-books. There are no editions of Rome (1599), Antwerp (1618), nor Geneva (1619); but there are Italian editions of 1596 (Antwerp), 1599 (Venice), 1601 (Antwerp), and 1614 (Antwerp), and German translations of 1612 and 1613 (Nürnberg) and 1619 (Leipzig). Particulars as to all these editions will be found in the second volume of Dr. Emil Vogel's 'Bibliothek der gedruckten weltlichen Vocalmusik Italiens' (1892).

With regard to the date of publication of the 'Triumphs of Oriana,' it is not safe to conclude that a book did not appear in the year that is recorded on its title-page because it is entered at a different date in the Stationers' Registers. The latter sometimes contain the names of books which were never published, as well as of books which had appeared at earlier dates.

On one occasion when the subject of 'immortal works' was being discussed, Brahms said: 'Yes, immortality is a fine thing if you only knew how long it would last!'

Edinburgh has lost a zealous musical antiquary by the death of Mr. Robert A. Marr, which, we regret to record, took place at his residence, 8, Cluny Place, Morningside, on November 9, at the age of fifty-five. Mr. Marr, who was an accountant in Edinburgh, had a valuable musical library in addition to a large collection of portraits of musical celebrities. He was the author of four useful little books: 'Music and Musicians at the Edinburgh International Exhibition, 1886'; 'Music for the People: a retrospect of the Glasgow International Exhibition, 1888, with an account of the rise of Choral Societies in Scotland'; 'Musical History as shown in the International Exhibition of Music and the Drama, Vienna, 1892'; and 'The rise of Choral Societies in Scotland.' Mr. Marr was always willing to give information to THE MUSICAL TIMES on any topic within his survey, and, like the late Mr. T. W. Taphouse, he took a warm and practical interest in anything connected with this Journal.

A ST. CECILIA'S DAY CELEBRATION.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON ON MUSIC.

The earliest known celebration of St. Cecilia's Day took place in the year 1683. In the following year it took place in the Hall of the Stationers' Company, where the festivals were held until 1703. The Account of the Warden of the Company contains this entry:

Received, the 25th of November, 1684, for the Musical Feast kept in the Hall - £2 . 0 . 0

This amount is entered under the head of 'Feasts and Funerals.' The Feasts need no explanation: the Funerals for which the Hall was used were those of persons whose obsequies were attended by a great concourse of relations and friends. On those occasions the Hall was hung with black draperies, which were kept for the purpose, and the corpse being conveyed over-night, was thence borne, followed by its long train of mourners, to its final resting-place. Stationers' Hall was long associated with feasts of music, especially the St. Cecilia Day celebrations. Dr. Blow composed no fewer than four Odes that were performed there; and in 1692 Henry Purcell not only composed an Ode to celebrate the day, but the counter-tenor solo in it—'Tis nature's voice'—was 'sung with incredible graces by Mr. Purcell himself'!

To pass from the end of the 17th to the beginning of the 20th century, an interesting celebration of St. Cecilia's Day took place on the day—November 22—when the Livery Club of the Worshipful Company of Musicians held high festival in the very same Hall of the Stationers' Company wherein Purcell sang and other old-world musicians had conducted their compositions. Mr. Clifford B. Edgar presided, and among the guests who honoured the Club by their presence were the Bishop of London and Dr. W. H. Cummings, Principal of the Guildhall School of Music.

The Bishop of London, in responding to the toast of 'The visitors,' began by saying: 'I am nothing of a musician: I wish I was.' In the course of his remarks he said: 'Music is one of the greatest rests that we have in this weary London. When I was a working missionary in East London, music was one of the most powerful influences which I experienced in my work.' He then went on to speak of an oratorio performance in Bethnal Green, at which 2,000 persons paid twopence each for admission, on which occasion '100 hooligans became spell-bound before the music of the Messiah.' When the Bishop made a few remarks in the course of the performance, one man shouted out 'When are we going to 'ave the 'allelujah chorus?' 'Give the people the best music,' said his Lordship, 'and they love it.' Referring to church music, he remarked upon that at St. Paul's Cathedral, saying, that after the anthem had been sung on some Sunday afternoon when he had been going to preach, he had asked himself, 'What more of a sermon could be needed than that? The words of the anthem go home to the soul better than any sermon.' The foregoing are some of the thoughts to which the Bishop gave expression, and his utterances on the uplifting influences of music are most valuable and encouraging.

As usual on these occasions music was made a special feature of an enjoyable evening, thanks to Mr. Arthur F. Hill, the Treasurer of the Club. The programme included two songs from a St. Cecilia Ode by Boyce, and similar excerpts by Blow, Purcell and Handel, in addition to a sonata for the violin by Nicola Matteis. Mr. Hill had also, as on previous occasions, prepared a dainty programme-book. This contained by way of frontispiece the facsimile of an elaborate card of invitation to the St. Cecilia's Day Celebration in 1696, which reads:

Sir,

You are desired to meet a Society of Gentlemen Lovers of MUSICK on Munday ye 23^d. of this instant Novemb^r 1696, being the Sequel of St. Cecilia's day, at 9 of ye Clock exactly, at St. Brides Church in Fleet-Street, where will be a Sermon & Anthem, & afterwards to dine at Stationers Hall, near Ludgate, where before Dinner there will be a Performance of MUSICK.

[Then follow the names of the eight Stewards, including those of Moses Snow, B.M., and Nicola Matteis, Gent.]

Pray pay 10s. at ye receipt of this Ticket & bring it with you.

No Servants will be admitted, care being taken for attendance.

Dr. Cummings, in response to the toast of 'Music,' expressed the hope that the sermon in St. Bride's Church and a performance of sacred music there might be revived as part of the celebration of St. Cecilia, and a capital speech by Sir Ernest Clarke was by no means the least attractive feature of a pleasant St. Cecilia celebration.

TCHAIKOVSKY.*

1840-1893.

Twelve years have come and gone since Tchaikovsky (to adopt the spelling of the name given in the book under review) drew his last breath at the age of fifty-three. His 'Life and Letters' were compiled and edited in the Russian language by his brother, M. Modeste Tchaikovsky, and issued in three volumes by M. P. Jurgenson, the well-known music-publisher, of Moscow. To this publication succeeded a German version (2 vols.), and now English readers are put in possession of the curious life-story of a very remarkable man and musician. At the outset it may be said that Mrs. Newmarch, in the attractive volume before us, has produced a most fascinating book. 'Wherever feasible,' she says, 'I have preferred to let Tchaikovsky himself tell the story of his life.' This is excellent, but none the less does she merit the highest praise for the skilful manner in which she sets forth the story of Tchaikovsky's career. In so doing she contributes to musical literature a biography that is in perfect taste and of absorbing interest.

Born in May, 1840, the son of a Russian Government official, Peter Ilich Tchaikovsky lost his mother when he was only six years old. He entered the world handicapped with a neurotic, indolent temperament, which developed into a morbid disposition and culminated in spiritual and mental disturbance when he had arrived at years of discretion. The only music in the house of his childhood was an orchestration, to which the boy owed his first musical impressions. This instrument he was never tired of hearing, especially in a Mozart composition (airs from 'Don Juan'), which, as played by the orchestration, awaked in him 'a beatific rapture.' At this early age he fell in love with Mozart, to whom he remained true throughout his life, as many instances in Mrs. Newmarch's book abundantly testify. His earliest creative attempts were in the nature of childish improvisations, 'just for myself alone when I feel sad,' as he records. He was never exploited as a musical prodigy, indeed his musical propensities were regarded as 'useless trifling,' and one of his friends suggested the avocation of an inspector of meat as a lucrative and suitable calling in life. Educated at the School of Jurisprudence at St. Petersburg, Tchaikovsky obtained a post in the Ministry of Justice, but in 1862, at the age of twenty-two, he entered the Conservatoire of Music at St. Petersburg, which Anton Rubinstein had founded in the previous year (1861). There he studied harmony and composition under Rubinstein, who had original methods in teaching the young ideas how to shoot. For instance, he set Tchaikovsky the task of orchestrating Beethoven's D minor pianoforte sonata in four different ways, whereupon the young student 'elaborated one of these arrangements, introducing the English horn and all manner of unusual accessories, for which the master reprimanded him severely.' A very warm and lifelong affection, however, sprang up between Tchaikovsky and both the brothers Rubinstein, Anton and Nicolas; on one occasion the latter lent the composer of the Pathetic symphony his dress coat in order that the youth might attend a ball. At the Conservatoire Tchaikovsky studied the flute, which he played in the orchestra; also the organ. For the latter instrument he composed nothing. On the completion of his academic course he became a professor of harmony and composition at Moscow Conservatoire until he relinquished all teaching engagements for the more congenial occupation of composition. The ups and downs of his professional life, including his excursion into the field of musical journalism, are most pleasantly related in Mrs. Newmarch's never-dull pages.

English readers will feel interested in the references to the land of 'Rule, Britannia.' As a young man, aged twenty-one, Tchaikovsky paid his first visit to London in 1861. 'London is very interesting,' he records, 'but makes a gloomy impression. The sun is seldom visible, and it rains all the time.' This was in the summer. He heard Madame Adelina Patti, who then made her English debut in opera, but he saw 'nothing particular' in her, though in later life she fascinated him. His later visits to England, as a famous man,—in 1888, 1889, 1893 (the year of his death)—will be fresh in the memory of the public, who will find pleasure in reading his impressions of our country and its institutions, including his visit to Cambridge and the honorary degree of Doctor of Music which was then conferred upon him, his conductorship of the Philharmonic concerts, &c. His visit to America in 1891 was not without its amusing experiences.

It is always interesting to find foreign musicians in bonds of sympathy with English literature: so with Tchaikovsky. As a young man of twenty-five he writes (in a letter):

I laugh heartily over Dickens's Pickwick Papers, with no one to share my mirth; but sometimes this thought incites me to even wilder hilarity. I recommend you to read this book; when one wants to read fiction it is best to begin with such an author as Dickens.

Again, much later in life and in a letter to his biographer-brother, Modeste, he sounds a pathetic note:

Modi, I am writing at night with tears in my eyes. Do not be alarmed—nothing dreadful has happened. I have just finished Bleak House, and shed a few tears, first, because I pity Lady Dedlock and find it hard to tear myself away from all these characters with whom I have been living for two months, and secondly, from gratitude that so great a writer as Dickens ever lived.

Once more, writing at the age of forty-three, he says:

I am devoured by impatience to master enough English to master Dickens easily, and I devote so many hours a day to this occupation that, with the exception of breakfast, dinner, and the necessary walk, I literally spend every minute in hurrying madly to the end of something. This is certainly a disease.

Another English author who made a great impression upon him was George Eliot. In this connection M. Modeste Tchaikovsky relates a specially interesting incident:

At this time we discussed subjects for a new opera. Peter Ilich's favourite author in later life was George Eliot. Once during his travels abroad he had come across her finest book, The Mill on the Floss, and from that time he considered she had no rival but Tolstoi as a writer of fiction. Adam Bede, Silas Marner, and Middlemarch stirred him to the greatest enthusiasm, and he read them over and over again. He cared less for Romola, but was particularly fond of Scenes from Clerical Life. For a time he seriously contemplated founding the libretto of his next opera upon The Sad Fortunes of the Rev. Amos Barton. He wished me to read the tale and give him my opinion. I must confess that, from his own account of it, I persuaded him to give up the idea.

I do not know if I actually convinced him, or whether he lost interest in it himself, but he never referred to this tale again when he spoke of other subjects for a libretto.

As may be assumed there are many references to the compositions of Tchaikovsky in the 782 pages of this admirable biography, to only a few of which reference can now be made. In regard to the '1812' overture the composer rightly designates it 'very noisy,' and goes on to say: 'I wrote it without much warmth of enthusiasm; therefore it has no great artistic value.' We are told that the principal subject of his first pianoforte concerto (in B flat minor) is a phrase sung by Malo-Russian blind beggars at a village fair at Kamenka:

In regard to pianoforte technique, he writes:

As I am not a pianist, it was necessary to consult some virtuoso as to what might be ineffective, impracticable, and ungrateful in my technique. I needed a severe, but at the same time friendly, critic to point out in my work these external blemishes only.

He played this concerto to Nicolas Rubinstein, who said the work was 'impossible,' that 'it needed to be completely revised,' and that if it were remodelled according to his requirements, he would bring it out at one of his concerts. 'I shall not alter a single note,' replied Tchaikovsky, 'I shall publish the work exactly as it stands.' He did.

One of his earliest creations, as it was one of Beethoven's latest, was a setting of Schiller's 'Ode to joy.' The fourth symphony (in F minor, and dedicated to 'My best friend') was his favourite composition. He looked upon his fifth symphony (in E minor) as a failure. 'There is something repellent, something superfluous, patchy, and insincere, which the public instinctively recognises.' The title 'Pathetic' bestowed upon the famous B minor symphony is due to M. Modeste Tchaikovsky, who thus records the incident:

The morning after the concert [which took place on November 18, 1893, new style] I found my brother sitting at the breakfast-table with the score of the Symphony before him. He had agreed to send it to Jurgenson in Moscow that very day, and could not decide upon a title. He did not wish to designate it merely by a number, and had abandoned his original intention of calling it 'A programme Symphony.' 'Why programme,' he said, 'since I do not intend to expound any meaning?' I suggested 'tragic Symphony' as an appropriate title. But this did not please him either. I left the room while Peter Ilich was still in a state of indecision. Suddenly the word 'pathetic' occurred to me, and I returned to suggest it. I remember, as though it were yesterday, how my brother exclaimed: 'Bravo, Modeste, splendid! Pathetic!' Then and there, in my presence, he added to the score the title by which the Symphony has always been known.

In an interesting letter (p. 496, and written in 1885) on 5-4 rhythm, he says: 'It would be curious, and certainly "an effort to be original," to write a piece with a simple rhythm of 2-4 or 3-4 time in 5-4 time.' The well-known pianoforte piece 'Chant sans paroles' was composed when he was twenty-seven, at Hapsal, while on a holiday tour in Finland during the summer of 1867. In regard to his use of the celesta in the 'Nut-cracker' Suite (or Fairy Ballet), the following letter speaks for itself; it is dated June 15, 1891, and written to his publisher, M. Jurgenson:

I have discovered a new instrument in Paris, something between a piano and a glockenspiel, with a divinely beautiful tone. I want to introduce this into the ballet and the symphonic poem. The instrument is called the 'Celesta Mustel,' and costs 1,200 francs. You can only buy it from the inventor, Mustel, in Paris. I want to ask you to order one of these instruments. You will not lose by it, because you can hire it out to the concerts at which The Voyevode will be played, and afterwards sell it to the Opera when my ballet is put on. . . . Have it sent direct to Petersburg; but no one there must know about it. I am afraid Rimsky-Korsakov and Glazounov might hear of it and make use of the new effect before I could. I expect the instrument will make a tremendous sensation.

As is more or less the case with hypochondriacal men, Tchaikovsky was not without a sense of humour in his mental equipment. For the Russian coronation festivities of 1883 he was asked to arrange the popular 'Slavsia' from Glinka's opera 'A life for the Tsar' for performance by a chorus of 7,500 voices. After accomplishing this somewhat uncongenial task he sent the arrangement to M. Jurgenson with the following remarks:

There are only a few bars of 'original composition' in the work, besides the third verse of the text, so if—as you say—I am to receive a fee from the City of Moscow, my account stands as below:

For the simplification of sixteen bars of choral and instrumental music, to be repeated three times - - - - -	3 rs .
For the composition of eight connecting bars - - - - -	4 rs .
For four additional lines to the third verse, at forty kopecks per line - - - - -	1 rs . 60 k .
Total - 8rs. 60k.	= 16 s . 11½ d .

This sum I present to the City of Moscow. Joking apart, it is absurd to speak of payment for such a work, and, to me, most unpleasant. These things should be done gratuitously, or not at all.

He makes an amusing reference to a critic who, speaking of the variations in the Third Suite, said 'that one variation describes a sitting of the Holy Synod and another a dynamite explosion'!

Tchaikovsky's love affairs occupy no inconsiderable portion of this biography. His infatuation for Désirée Artôt; his mysterious marriage with the 'rather good-looking' Antonina Ivanovna Milioukov—a union which lasted two months only; and his friendship with Nadejda Filaretovna von Meck, a widow. The last-named lady was not only a great admirer of the composer, but she greatly befriended him financially. Much correspondence of an intimate nature passed between them; but strangely enough to the end of their days they never exchanged a word, scarcely even a casual greeting. M. Modeste Tchaikovsky refers to Madame von Meck as his brother's 'best friend and benefactress.'

It is time, however, and only fair, to refrain from further quotation from Mrs. Newmarch's excellent book—one that, from a reviewer's point of view, contains as many plums as a Christmas pudding, to use a seasonable simile. Enough has been said to induce the reader to peruse these entertaining pages. The get-up of the volume is above reproach, and its twenty illustrations include a photograph of the fine portrait, painted by Kouznetsov in the year of Tchaikovsky's death. By kind permission of Mr. John Lane, the publisher of the English edition of the 'Life,' we are enabled to give this as the special portrait supplement in the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. No truer, or more living likeness of Tchaikovsky exists.

MR. RANDEGGER AND THE NORWICH FESTIVAL.

Mr. Randegger brought away with him from Norwich some tangible proofs of the esteem in which he is held by those who have been associated with him at the Musical Festivals there which he has conducted since 1881. The principal artists (Mr. Ben Davies acting as their spokesman) presented the veteran musician with a handsome solid silver loving-cup on which, in addition to the names of the donors, is engraved:

Presented to CAVALIERE ALBERTO RANDEGGER, as a small token of the respect, esteem, and admiration of the principal singers of the Norwich Musical Festival, 1905.

The Executive Committee, at the hands of Sir Charles Gilman, gave a massive silver Monteith bowl, mounted on an ebony plinth and bearing the following inscription:

Norfolk and Norwich Triennial Musical Festival.

Presented to ALBERTO RANDEGGER, ESQ., by the Committee of Management as a token of their appreciation of his valuable services as conductor during the last twenty-four years. October, 1905.

The London Symphony Orchestra—their first appearance as an organized body at a provincial Festival—showed how much they esteemed the conductor-in-chief at Norwich by begging him, 'as one of their best friends,' to accept a silver inkstand to which they had all subscribed.

Mr. Randegger, with that geniality which characterizes all his utterances, made suitable and appreciative acknowledgments of this trio of gifts. As his remarks on the London Symphony Orchestra have more than personal or local import, we quote from a report in the Eastern Daily Press of the speech he made in acknowledging the gift of the inkstand. After saying that the band 'were indeed the prima donna of the Festival—there was no mistake about that,' and that 'their playing had been a great treat to him,' he paid a further tribute to the skill of English orchestral players in these words :

He believed they [the London Symphony Orchestra] were doing a great service to the nation. The composers who had come down to Norwich had been surprised and delighted to find with what readiness the orchestra had read the music; they had been surprised to find that they had played it at sight just as though they had had it for practice at home for weeks. Signor Mancinelli, who had been all over the world, told him that at Buenos Ayres there was an orchestra to which he had to teach the notes and the value of the rests; and so it was with many countries. Most people in England had no idea how far behind ourselves foreign orchestras were. There were good orchestras in Paris, and Italy, and Germany—in two or three places—but in order to get a good performance they had to rehearse very very many times. They played well—but they took a long time to do it.

Not to be outdone by the principals, the committee and the orchestra, the Norwich Festival Chorus also gave proof of the affection in which they held their chief by giving him, at the hands of Mr. T. King, a massive silver salver thus inscribed :

Presented to ALBERTO RANDEGGER, ESQ., the conductor of the Norwich Musical Festivals (1881-1905), as a token of esteem from the chorus. October, 1905.

A pair of silver flower vases were given to Mrs. Randegger, who in reply, said : 'I thank you all from the bottom of my heart. You have been perfectly sweet, lovely and dear, and I shall love and treasure these things always.' In the fulness of his warm heart, Mr. Randegger must have felt similar sentiments towards his many kind and excellent colleagues—solo singers, chorus, and band—who were associated with him at his last Musical Festival, that of Norwich in 1905.

SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE ON SCHOLARSHIPS AND COMPOSITION PRIZES.

Any utterance on the above subjects by the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music is entitled to respect by reason of his long experience and ripe judgment on matters affecting musical students. At the recent dinner of the Musicians' Company, Sir Alexander Mackenzie gave expression to the following weighty words :

'It is just because so much is being done for music that I am led to make the few remarks I have to offer in response to the toast of "Music." Some of us cannot help thinking that the time is come to say that the tide of benevolent intentions is not always being made to flow in the right direction. I never witness the appearance of brilliant young talent without wondering what the future may have in store for him. While every advantage and encouragement in the way of scholarships, prizes, honours, and so on, are held out to him while he is still a student, the moment his apprenticeship ceases he has to face an appalling amount of apathy and indifference. The persistent founding of new scholarships will not help him—rather the contrary. Some of us think that we have already enough in the way of scholarships, because those who have to deal with their administration know that not infrequently difficulty arises in finding sufficiently worthy recipients for them. Moreover, it occasionally happens that the most talented candidate is debarred from holding a scholarship, because he is too poor to maintain himself during the prescribed tenure.

'Again, composition competitions, now so much in vogue, have also their serious drawbacks, for very obvious reasons. The very best is rarely secured through the rather undignified competition medium, whereby hundreds of things are called into being which have no very particular reason to exist. It would be infinitely better to adopt the system which has always obtained in the sister art of painting, and give commissions to men of marked ability or great promise, be they elderly or young. Given leisure to produce something worthy of a composer's talent, you would probably secure better value for your fifty-pound notes; and by this return to the old system of "patronage," as it were, composers would feel that they had some chances of getting work, and greater possibilities of the publication of their serious efforts. Believe me, the student is being uncommonly well served and looked after in these days. It is the ex-student, the young professional musician, who most requires encouragement and assistance. I am not so much concerned—in fact, not at all—about the artistic as about the material, the bricks-and-mortar, side of the question. Let our Institutions who are educating—and educating well—young musicians, be relieved of the gruesome thought of what is to happen to them.

'I am one of those who believe that until we have an English Opera House—which will provide work not only for the composer, but for conductors, vocalists, chorists, orchestral players, &c.—matters will remain in their present unsatisfactory state. The retort that we have no operatic composers hardly holds water. We cannot say that until we have given our composers a chance. On higher grounds, all who know their musical history will admit that the national art of Germany, France, Italy, Bohemia and Russia has been created chiefly by the help of the lyric stage. But to us it is denied. We have English opera scholarships, and no Opera House.

'I am quite aware that no single individual, society, or company can bring this about, especially in these perturbed times; and no one is rash enough to think that it can be achieved in a hurry. But nevertheless it ought never to be lost sight of. I say all this because I know that you would like to see your good intentions towards our art turned into the most useful and practical channels. Perhaps if some of you would take counsel with those who know most about the seamy side, and the real needs of English music, before and not after you have settled in your minds the manner in which you wish to help music, you would succeed in doing even more good to the art than you are doing at present.'

Herr Peter Raabe, in conducting the concert of the London Symphony Orchestra at Queen's Hall on November 23, made his first appearance in England. The son of a painter, he was born at Frankfurt-on-the-Oder, November 27, 1872. His father's sister was the esteemed actress, Hedwig Niemann-Raabe, wife of Albert Niemann, the original representative of Siegmund at Bayreuth. A student at the Royal High School, Berlin, Herr Raabe made such good progress that at the age of twenty-two he was appointed musical director of the principal theatre at Königsberg. In 1899 he became conductor of the Dutch Opera House, Amsterdam, where he gained a high reputation in his interpretations of Wagner. After directing, in the summer of 1902, a cycle of nine symphonies with the Kaim Orchestra at Munich, Herr Raabe was appointed conductor of the band upon the retirement of Dr. Felix Weingartner, a position he holds with distinction.

EXETER CATHEDRAL COLLEGE OF VICARS CHORAL : A QUINCENTENARY CELEBRATION :

1405-1905.

In the article on Exeter Cathedral which appeared in our issue of October, 1902, brief reference was made to the College of Vicars. The following additional notes, historical and otherwise, upon that ancient institution, may prove acceptable in connection with a recent commemorative event.

maintenance the canon, as the vicar's master (Dominus), was answerable. Thus the original number of vicars was twenty-four, all of them being in holy orders as priests. The 'maintenance' of some of them at least appears to have been insufficient, for in the year 1205 Bishop Marshall granted them the church of St. Swithun in Woodbury, near Exeter, with all its appurtenances; and the priest-vicars are still the impropiators of the tithes, and patrons of the benefice.

Of succeeding bishops who added to the worldly endowments of the vicars the most notable was Bishop Brantyngham who, in 1388, built them a Public Hall, chambers, and a kitchen, with all suitable offices (at Exeter), in order to enable them to live in community—pro Vicariorum cohabitazione vilâque communi. In this connection an exceedingly interesting fact has lately been brought to light by the Acting Town-Clerk of Exeter, Mr. A. E. Dunn. Among the city records is a document showing that on the site of the Hall had once stood a building which had been used a hundred years before as a singing-school for the boys of the cathedral choir. The Public Hall would seem to have early fallen into decay, as towards the close of the 15th century the present College Hall was erected by John Ryse, chaplain to King Edward IV., and treasurer to Bishop Oldham (1504-19).

In 1401 King Henry IV. formed the twenty-four priest-vicars into a Corporation under the style and title of 'Custos et Collegium Vicariorum de Choro Ecclesiæ Cathedralis Exoniæ,' with the privilege of a common seal; the charter of incorporation, however, does not appear to have been acted upon until four years later (1405), when the first Custos was elected. In 1547 the original number of twenty-four was reduced to eight priest-vicars, or 'petty canons,' and twelve lay-vicars (then first mentioned) were added. In 1563 there were but six priest-vicars and ten lay-vicars; a few years later a further reduction was made, viz., to four priest- and eight lay-vicars, their present number. During the troublous times of the Commonwealth the vicars were deprived of their ancient Hall, which was turned into a place for storing and selling wool; but at the Restoration the building reverted to its rightful owners and ancient use.

The present Hall has an open timbered roof, traceried windows, and a stone chimney-piece on which are carved the arms of five benefactors. The internal walls are elaborately panelled in wainscot oak. A western gallery contains oil portraits, painted on the oak panels, of seven distinguished bishops of Exeter; and a portrait of Archbishop Temple, by Mr. A. Moulton Foweraker, son of one of the present

THE HALL OF THE COLLEGE OF VICARS OF EXETER CATHEDRAL.

(Photograph by Miss Kate M. Clarke, of Exeter.)

The history of the College of 'Priest-Vicars' of Exeter Cathedral begins with that of the see itself. When Leofric, the first bishop, removed the episcopal 'Stool' from Crediton to Exeter he transferred eight monks from the monastery at Exeter to Westminster, and in their place the prelate instituted twenty-four secular canons for the daily and nightly services of the church. To assist each canon in his duties a Vicar (or substitute) was assigned, for whose priest-vicars, has recently been added. The Royal Arms surmount the panelling at the east end, while the two shields flanking them bear the date 1629. Among the framed and hanging portraits is that of Tobias Langdon, a former priest-vicar, and a musician of some repute in his day. All that remains of the old furniture is a large, handsome oblong table, with twelve chairs of the Jacobean period.

The 500th anniversary of the founding of the College was appropriately observed on October 11, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion at 8 a.m., the Bishop of Marlborough (the Dean) being the celebrant; after which the members of the College and the cathedral organist, by the kind invitation of the Custos (the Rev. William David), breakfasted with him at his residence. To this succeeded Matins and Litany, the settings of the Te Deum and Benedictus the substance of these notes—was first elected to that office on St. Matthew's Eve, 1868, and has worthily filled it ever since. Although he has long passed the Psalmist's span of 'three score years and ten,' he still sweetly and truly intones the service in the beautiful Cathedral of Exeter.

THE ENDOWMENT OF A COUNTRY CHURCH ORGANIST IN THE 16TH CENTURY.

Among the documents preserved in the archives of Magdalen College, Oxford, is the will of one Edward Ascough, of Wynthorp (now Winthorpe), a village on the Lincolnshire coast, two miles north of Skegness. The Librarian of the College, the Rev. H. A. Wilson, has kindly made the following digest of a portion of the aforesaid testamentary dispositions:

Edward Ascough of Wynthorp, in his will dated 4th July, 1520, leaves all his lands in Wynthorp to his wife for her life. After her death, 10 acres in the south common of Wynthorp are to go to the use of Magdalen College, provided that the College [as lords of the manor of Candlesby, Lincolnshire] grant to the vicar and churchwardens of Wynthorp for the time being a copyhold of other 10 acres (the boundaries of which are specified) for a term of 93 years, for the payment of the wages of one organ-player within the said church of Wynthorp. 'If it fortune that there be none organ-player,' the profits of the 10 acres are to go to the chantry-priest at Wynthorp, to pray for the testator's soul, and every day in the mass to say a special collect, so long as there is no organ-player; the College is to receive the profits every 14th year by way of fine, paying all taxes.

There are further directions as to the course to be followed if the College should not agree to this arrangement.

It is not known whether the proposed arrangement was carried out. In all probability the ten acres which it was proposed that Magdalen College should grant in copyhold to the vicar and churchwardens were held in copyhold by Edward Ascough, and that the term for which this rather complicated arrangement was to be made was probably the unexpired period of his copyhold. Anyhow, every credit must be given to Edward Ascough for his good intentions in providing 'for the payment of the wages of one organ-player within the church of Wynthorp.'

'The Sunday School Hymnary' is the title of 'a 20th century hymnal for young people.' The words and music of the book have been edited by the Rev. Carey Bonner, the General Secretary of the Sunday School Union, by whom the volume is issued. The scope of this manual of sacred song, containing no fewer than 610 hymns, is so comprehensive that it caters for bairnies of 'under seven,' and teachers who may be snow-crowned with age. Every care seems to have been taken to satisfy all requirements, and the charm of variety finds its full outlet in these pages. Some of the tunes strike us as being rather flippant for devotional purposes and as not conducing to reverence, but tastes differ, and standards of devotion vary; still, we should have been glad if the combined dotted quaver and semi-quaver element had been less in evidence. More of the tunes might with advantage have been transposed into lower keys, and a larger proportion been set forth as a melody with simple chordal accompaniment instead of the monotonous tonic and dominant of harmonized vocal parts. Novel features of the book are 'some notes' by the editor, on 'some hymns and their authors,' with portraits of Mrs. Luke, Mr. Midlane, Bishop Ken, Keble, and Horatius Bonar, together with a facsimile of a hymn written by the last-named divine. A wealth of indexes, an antiphonal arrangement of some of the hymns, no less than the graded arrangement of the hymns, are some of the features of a compilation that is sure to command attention and meet with success.

being Gibbons in F, which were grandly sung without accompaniment. The Bishop of the diocese preached a stirring and appropriate sermon, taking for his text Romans xii. 4, 5. A notable feature of this Quincentenary Service was a fine anthem, Laudemus viros gloriosos, specially composed for the occasion by Dr. D. J. Wood, organist of the cathedral.

Luncheon was afterwards served in the College Hall—the Custos presiding—at which the Sheriff of Exeter, the Bishops of Exeter, Marlborough, and Crediton, the members of the Chapter, and other friends, to the number of fifty, sat down. The Mayor of Exeter was unavoidably prevented from being present. Evensong, with the hymn 'Now thank we all our God,' closed the proceedings of a memorable day in the history of the cathedral.

The venerable and much-beloved Custos—the Rev. William David, M.A., to whom we are indebted for WINCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

The organ has recently been renovated and much improved by the insertion of new pneumatic stop action and seven new stops, all of which have been successfully carried out by Messrs. Hele & Co. The new stops are as follows: Swell, Violin diapason (8 feet); Great, Double open diapason, No. 1 (16 feet), Open diapason, No. 1 (8 feet), Open diapason, No. 2 (8 feet), Doppel flöte (8 feet), Principal, No. 1 (4 feet), and Flauto traverso (4 feet). These additions have not only greatly added to the dignity of the instrument, but they have rectified certain shortcomings in the diapason tone—after all, the true genesis of the instrument—which formerly were all too palpable. The donor of these new stops in the great organ, Mr. Charles Boyd, is so delighted with the work already done that he has asked the Dean and Chapter to accept a further present of a 32-foot reed stop to the pedal organ; he has also offered to improve one of the existing stops in that important department. Mr. Boyd's gifts to the cathedral organ are 'in memory of his friend, the late Dr. G. B. Arnold, and in recognition of the manner in which the musical portions of the service are being cared for at the present time.'

The renovated instrument was reopened on November 14, when Dr. William Prendergast, the cathedral organist, performed the following pieces:

Fugue in G minor	- - -	Bach.
Larghetto in F sharp minor	- - -	S. S. Wesley.
Sonata iv.	- - -	Mendelssohn.
Andante in G	- - -	Tombelle.
Chorus, 'Fixed in His everlasting seat'	- - -	Handel.

Sketches No. 1 (C minor)	- - -	Schumann.
No. 2 (C major)	- - -
Voluntary in G	- - -	John Stanley.
Méditation— élégie (1st Suite)	- - -	Borowski.
Toccata (Sonata xiv.)	- - -	Rheinberger.

On the previous Sunday the music at the services included compositions by nearly all the organists of Winchester Cathedral, ranging from Thomas Weelkes (c. 1597) to the present holder of the office, and including Christopher Gibbons, John Reading, Daniel Rosingrave, Vaughan Richardson, James Kent, Peter Fussell, G. W. Chard, Dr. G. B. Arnold, and last, but not least, Samuel Sebastian Wesley.

The London Church Choir Association held its thirty-second annual Festival in St. Paul's Cathedral on October 26, when the service included new and elaborate settings of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in the key of B flat, composed by Mr. Montague F. Phillips. The anthems were Sterndale Bennett's 'O, that I knew where I might find Him,' and Beethoven's 'Hallelujah' ('Mount of Olives'). Special hymn-tunes were composed by Mr. G. C. Richardson, Mr. Carter Jenner, the Rev. G. C. E. Ryley, and Dr. Walford Davies. The whole of the music was impressively rendered by a choir of about 1,000 voices selected from some sixty Metropolitan churches. Mr. F. B. Kiddie rendered efficient aid at the organ, and Dr. Walford Davies, organist of the Temple Church, again proved his fitness for the important duties of conductor.

Dr. Edward Cuthbert Bairstow, organist of Wigan Parish Church, has been appointed organist of Leeds Parish Church. There were 320 candidates for the post, and Dr. Bairstow—to whom the Yorkshire Post refers as 'a strong man in every way'—is to be warmly congratulated upon having obtained so important an appointment. He was born in 1874, and, like Sir Walter Parratt and Dr. A. L. Peace, is a native of Huddersfield.

At the weekly organ recital given on November 7 at St. Peter-upon-Cornhill, the rector, the Rev. George Bell Doughty, B.A., took for the subject of his address 'Reminiscences of the late Miss Elizabeth Mounsey,' many years organist of the church, basing nearly the whole of his remarks on the illustrated article on Miss Mounsey which appeared in our November issue.

'Hymn-tunes and their story' is the title of a book by Mr. James T. Lightwood, which will shortly be published by Mr. Charles H. Kelly, Paternoster Row. The author has attempted to compile, in a popular form, the history and development of hymn-tunes from the time of the Puritans to the present day, while the section on 'old Methodist tunes' will contain much new and interesting information.

The fine organ recently erected by Messrs. Lewis & Co. in the Bute Hall of Glasgow University was formally inaugurated by Mr. Harold Ryder, the University organist, on October 26. The instrument has the advantage of being placed in a hall possessing excellent acoustical properties, and its fine qualities were ably demonstrated in the carefully chosen pieces played by Mr. Ryder.

The Requiem of Brahms will be sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, to the accompaniment of a full orchestra, on Tuesday evening, December 5, at 7 p.m. The seats under the dome, in the transepts and nave of the cathedral are free to the public. Sir George Martin will, of course, conduct.

Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was sung at the Oratorio Service held at Brixton Church on Sunday afternoon, November 5, by the Brixton Oratorio Choir (100 voices), accompanied by a full professional orchestra. Mr. Welton Hickin was at the organ, and Mr. Douglas Redman, organist of the church, conducted.

The Singing of the Future. By David Ffrangcon-Davies, M.A. Oxon. With a Preface by Sir Edward Elgar, Kt., Mus. Doc.

[John Lane.]

A clever book, a valuable book, a readable book. Such is the judgment, resulting from a careful perusal of its pages, that must be passed upon this volume, written by one of the foremost of English vocalists. 'Brains' is its keynote; the use of brains its dominant tone. A truth is here enunciated which should reach the ears and stimulate the understanding of all who are concerned in the cultivation and use of the most perfect of all instruments, the human voice—a truth which has constantly been set forth in the pages of this Journal. Given the voice, a singer should be a combination of poet and musician. 'Music and singing,' says our author, 'are a united territory, ruled over by intellect and soul, and reached by way of the senses.' A man, or a woman, may have the God-endowed gift of a beautiful and rich-toned voice, but 'plenitude of voice does not always ensure plenitude of brains.' To apply this principle to the practical matter of tone, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies is not far wrong when he says 'every intelligent student ought to know when his tone is "right" if he use his brain,' and the book is full of similar axioms having a direct bearing on the technique of which its author is so safe a guide.

To quote even a tithe of the wise things contained in this important volume would convey an inadequate idea of the wealth of thought to be found therein. For example: 'The sheet-anchor of vocalists ought to be pure pronunciation.' Again: 'The "colour" of correctly spoken words, and the "sustained rhythm" of sung words, constitute the whole of the vocal art.' To quote further: 'Singers must begin their studentship with the singing of thoughts; for thought is the fount of language, and language the fount of tone'; and, once more, 'The quickest way to fine tone is via fine pronunciation.' All this, of course, applies equally to soloist and chorus-singer. If in giving so much prominence to the all-important matters of distinct pronunciation and intelligent (brain-charged) utterance, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies has done nothing else than earnestly and convincingly offering this good advice, he will not have written his book in vain.

The author divides his subject under two main heads; (i.) 'What is singing?' with the twin sub-sections 'breathing' and 'tone'; and (ii.) 'Style, oratorio, opera.' These are all developed with masterly and scholarly skill in a wealth of language that in some places is perhaps superabundant. The student will search these pages in vain for a series of look-down-your-throat diagrams, nor will he find such technicalities as 'the shock of the glottis,' &c.; on the other hand he will light upon a rich storehouse of mental fare which, properly digested and assimilated, cannot fail to nourish and strengthen his artistic life. The many references to that arch-artist, Sims Reeves, are of the greatest value and interest. 'What do you think about the Prophet—what sort of man was he?' was the question Reeves asked Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies when the latter sought the great tenor's advice upon interpreting the part of 'Elijah' in Mendelssohn's oratorio. 'No word,' says our author, 'of thoracic, cricothyroideal, or epiglottic matters!' Reeves's was that true art which conceals art, that is born of naturalness, that is nurtured by a poetic temperament, and that is brought to full fruition by a constant application of brain-power.

It is towards the attainment of the highest ideals that Ffrangcon-Davies has all his life long been striving, and in which he has so well succeeded, though he would be the last to admit that he has attained those heights. In his enthusiasm for all that is good and true in vocal interpretation, he desires to lend a helping and a guiding hand to those who are setting out upon and who are pursuing the same journey towards the same desired haven. Hence his book 'The Singing of the Future' is one that should be carefully read and re-read, thoughtfully pondered, and then acted upon by all—he they singers or not—who desire to raise the interpretative standard of an art wherein the soul of man can find its fullest expression. 'The singer's Art must embrace the whole of man's nature, and if this art is to be justly called natural, it must deal with all subject-matter known to the mind and soul as well as to the intellect and senses of man.' No one can dispute the truth of these words.

The Life of Johannes Brahms. By Florence May.

[Edward Arnold.]

Opinions differ concerning the composer of whom Schumann prophesied that he would open up new paths. One thing, however, is beyond dispute: his music is now, at any rate in this country, much in vogue, and therefore it is not surprising that more than one 'Life' of him should appear in the English language. In the year 1871 Miss Florence May was studying the pianoforte with Madame Schumann at her home in Lichenthal, a suburb of Baden-Baden, and there she made the acquaintance of the composer, and for a while received pianoforte lessons from him. Brahms, as a teacher, is something of a novelty, and in an introductory chapter Miss May gives her personal recollections of the lessons she received from him and her general intercourse with the composer. Although there is much of interest in the first volume concerning the early days of Brahms—his visit to Weimar, his devotion to the Schumanns, and so on—there is nothing actually new. Max Kalbeck's first instalment of the composer's 'Life' has so far practically exhausted the subject.

In the second volume there are noteworthy descriptions of music and musicians in Vienna and Carlsruhe between 1862 and 1864, a period which, considering all that has taken place since, seems to us very remote. In the former city, Goldmark, whose reputation is now European, was only just 'rising to fame'; in the latter the great conductor, Hermann Levi, who has passed away, had just succeeded Joseph Strauss as court capellmeister. Mention is made of a visit paid by Brahms to Wagner, at Penzing, and the former is said to have been much pleased at his reception. It would be curious to have Wagner's own account of the visit.

The author notes the fact that from an early period Brahms determined 'to give supreme dominance in art, as in life, to understanding rather than to emotion'; and it is undoubtedly on account of that determination that it is so difficult to judge of much of his music until the intellectual side of it ceases to engage attention too prominently. Miss May is very enthusiastic about Brahms as a composer, although she does not hesitate to point out works which do not satisfy her. Enthusiasm is, of course, a good thing, and one may perhaps excuse many a superlative. A little restraint, however, would in places have been welcome; excessive praise does not always carry the greatest weight.

An account is given of a meeting—of, in fact, the last meeting between Frau Schumann and her husband's dearest musician-friends, Brahms and Joachim, in 1894, and it is justly described 'as of pathetic interest.'

The volumes contain two useful catalogues of Brahms's compositions, and the ten illustrations, mostly portraits of the composer, add to the attractiveness of Miss May's narrative. All who have to travel the road of 'first performances' know full well the pitfalls that await them. In regard to first performances of the compositions of Brahms in England, some dates herein given need correction, e.g. (vol. ii., p. 200), the B flat piano-forte concerto was first played in this country not by Sir Charles Hallé, but by Mr. Oscar Beringer at the Crystal Palace concert of October 14, 1882, the year of its publication.

The Wreck of the Hesperus. For chorus and orchestra. Poem by Longfellow. Music by Hamish MacCunn.

Spring-Time. Cantata for chorus and orchestra. Poem by Mrs. Malcolm Lawson, music by Sigmund Stojowski.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

Mr. MacCunn's setting of Longfellow's poem has won such pronounced acceptance at the daily performances at the Coliseum that description and criticism of the music may be brief; in view however of the adaptability of the work for parish entertainments some particulars should be pointed out. At the Coliseum it has been sung accompanied by magic-lantern slides, and so given it would be as attractive in the provinces as in London: but Mr. MacCunn's music is quite independent of pictorial accessories, and well able to stand on its own merits. While duly illustrative of the text, the composer has eschewed complexities and written with directness of expression that is happily in consonance with the simple pathos of the incident. A fairly trained choir will find no difficulty in securing an effective rendering of the work, nor need the choir be large.

The text of 'Spring-Time' is an English version of an ode by Horace, and deals with the vernal season of the year in a way that admirably lends itself to musical treatment. M. Stojowski's music reflects its jocund vein, and light-heartedness and gracefulness prevail. The work only occupies eighteen octavo pages, and while artistic in design is simple in character.

O flame of gold; The Christian Martyrs (Les Martyrs aux Arènes); The trumpet sounds; Jesu, our only hope of heaven; Rataplan (La Retraite); The Chase; Soldiers' Song; Thine is the glory; A Holiday Song; Dear land of beauty. By Laurent de Rillé.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

These ten unaccompanied part-songs or choruses for men's voices (tenors and basses) are selected specimens from the compositions of a composer whose works are highly popular amongst the numerous men's voice choral societies in France. They are mostly light, melodious, easy pieces likely to be welcome practice as a relief from more severe studies. But de Rillé can also command the intensely dramatic note. This is well illustrated in his fine chorus 'The Christian Martyrs' ('The Martyrs of the Arena'). All his music is well written for the voice. It belongs to that class of music that sounds so much better than it looks rather than to that larger class that looks so much better than it sounds. It is certain that both choirs and audiences will derive much pleasure from these pieces. The English words are by Mr. Paul England and Mr. W. G. Rothery. It may be well to add that this edition (in the 'Orpheus' Series) is issued by arrangement with the composer, and may therefore claim to be regarded as one that is specially authorized.

HANDEL, ERBA, AND URIO.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—Has it ever been noticed that on the shore of Lake Como, facing Pliny's villa, there is a place called Urìo, and ten miles away a small town, Erba? The names of these places, presumably old, remind us of the priests to whom are assigned a Te Deum and a Magnificat, extensively used by Handel in 'Saul,' 'Israel,' &c. The coincidence is curious because, taking the 120 Italian-looking names in the index of the Oxford History (Part IV.), I find only twelve (including, by-the-bye, Stradella) in the indexes of the three parts of Baedeker's Italy.

Another curious thing is noticeable, when we turn to the Urìo MSS. (Grove art. Urìo), and examine them on the assumption that they are all derived from Handel's copy. Any explanation requiring two or more archetypes is handicapped with a high initial improbability, without equivalent advantages. The original heading seems to be 'Te Deum. Urìo. Con due Trombe, &c., &c.'; this is found on the first sheet of a score said to be in an Italian hand. On a second, but certainly later manuscript, we read 'Del Padre Franço Urìo (sic) Bolognese.' Now Urìo was a Milanese. His best-known work, Op. 2, however has in the title '... del Padre Francesco Antonio Urìo ... In Bologna ...' His Op. 1, on the contrary, has '... da Francesc ... In Roma ...' Have we not here the source of the mistaken heading, and of the 'Jesus of Bologna' with a conjectural date (apud 1682), which appears on the cover of the first MS.? The third manuscript has simply 'Te Deum. Urìo. 1660'—another false date.

Finding each of these manuscripts improving on the probable original heading, we may as naturally take the 'Del Rd Sgr Erba' of the one Erba MS. to be an expansion of 'Erba,' as suppose that the laziness of some copyist has dropped the 'Dionigi.' And I ask, in sheer ignorance: Are 'Rd' and 'Sgr' possible Italian abbreviations? Has 'Reverendo Signore' many or any precedents in such a connexion? Is it not, in any case, an easy reproduction of 'The Rev. Mr.'?

Supposing provisionally, then, that Handel's copies were headed 'Te Deum. Urìo.' 'Magnificat. Erba,' while the composer may very naturally have stayed at villas near these neighbouring places, why should we not be content? Why suppose that Padre Urìo's full title has been whittled down, shorn even of a preposition, and spatchcocked here? Parallel cases there may be, but they must be very rare. Indeed, had we an almost certain 'Te Deum. Pisa.' and a plausible 'Magnificat. Lucca,' who would dream of interpreting them as anything but places?

'Magnificat. Erba' is conjectural, of course, but so is 'Dionigi Erba'; and the work passed as Handel's without question for a century.

There is another point worth mentioning. Of the four instrumental movements in a Serenata—written, apparently, when the practice of da Capo was firmly established, and probably in Handel's possession in 1709—two are used in 'Israel,' and one probably in 'Acis.' Of the fourth the fugue-like subject reappears vid Urio in 'Saul,' as 'Retrieve the Hebrew name.' Though different to the eye, the subjects are found to be essentially identical. Which is the more likely, a reminiscence, conscious or unconscious, on the part of Handel, or a coincidence between two works taken at random? Of course, the force of this argument would be somewhat diminished should the subject prove to be hackneyed.

In the year 1709, when he was very popular with the nobility, Handel may easily have been in this neighbourhood, perhaps on his way home, for nothing certain is known about his movements after July 12, 1708. Nor would he, probably, neglect to study the Lombardic style, which he reproduced later in 'Ottone.' In Italy he was practising different styles; his French canzonets, written in Italy, contain evidence of careful study; and at Hanover, in 1710, he composed some very successful imitations of Steffani's duets. Indeed, between July, 1708, and 1710, there is an unaccountable shortage in his productions. Essays in Italian church music would be welcome as filling up a gap.

Some have pointed to a difference in style between the Magnificat and three earlier Psalms, forgetting that of these one is an adaptation of a German work, a second is in the form of a German cantata, while the dating of the third and earliest, Ap. 4 or 11, 1707, is the very first proof of Handel's having reached Italy. They must represent, therefore, his German style.

Dr. Gauntlett, it must be confessed, stoutly maintained that the counterpoint of the Urio was too good to be Handel's. But the greatest musicians may make mistakes. Schumann, if I rightly understand a passage in his letters, took for a composition of J. S. Bach what afterwards turned out to be a youthful exercise by Mendelssohn.

Handel's copy of the Magnificat may reasonably be placed between 'Saul' (in which Urio was used) and the commencing of 'Israel,' which caused him to leave the copy incomplete. That he had the original manuscript in his possession when writing 'Israel' is pretty certain from the fact that the final chorus, which he did not copy, is closely reproduced in 'Israel.' The bare possibility that the manuscript had been lent him just for these few days need not be considered. Assuming therefore that he was copying a manuscript belonging to himself, of which the use of Urio would remind him, and which was probably imperfect, it is far more likely that he should copy a work of his own, either with the idea of reviving it, or to make it more available, than that he should make a fresh copy of a work by Erba.

Though many reasons might be given why Handel should have originally attached or inserted later the date of place, I cannot quote a similar instance—the circumstances were quite exceptional. Possibly an instance might be found among his manuscripts. Against this may be set the fact that Erba and Urio are not known to have written any similar works. Again, some may have difficulties about the style in Handel's case; others may have an equal difficulty about Erba and Urio. But it seems more probable that expansion should have taken place, than that the composers' names should be altered as we find them. And it is far more likely that Handel should have written works in adjacent places, than that he should have picked up works by composers not connected. If it be urged that the works might be picked up together at Milan, this at least involves the admission that the heading in England was 'Te Deum. Urio'; for the 'Bolognese' could never have emanated from Milan.

Then there is the fugue subject. And there seems to be no real parallel to such borrowings in Handel's practice; even if one could be found, he nevertheless far more often used his own works. If a man miss his train once in ten mornings, it is still nine to one, on a doubtful day, that the train be not missed.

I am, yours truly,

P. ROBINSON.

THE SCOTCH ANCESTRY OF THE MACFARRENS.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—In the October issue of your Journal I had hoped to find a biographical article on the late Walter Cecil Macfarren, but I observe there is only a paragraph in which the reader is referred to a biographical sketch which appeared in your issue of January, 1898. In that article there is a paragraph which reads as follows: 'The subject of our sketch is often taken to be a Scotchman by reason of the "Mac" in his name; but he can lay no claim to that nationality. Once, at a Scotch banquet, he felt much aggrieved at finding his "Highland War Song," for male voices, set down in the programme as "Traditional"!'

Permit me to say that the writer of that biographical sketch was not well-informed. Not only was Walter Macfarren connected with Scotland, but he and his brothers George, John, and probably Basil, owed everything to their grandfather, John Jackson, son of William Jackson, a farmer living at the 'Barns of Clyde,' New Kilpatrick, Glasgow. This John Jackson would have been born about 1750 to 1755. He learned the trade of a bookbinder in Glasgow about the year 1780. He removed to London, and became so successful that he bought the house, No. 24, Villiers Street, Strand, for something over £836, and in which Sir George and Walter Macfarren were both born. He had a son and a daughter. The son, a distinguished artist, died in 1874, and the daughter, Susannah, married George Macfarren.

The Jackson family had many distinguished members. In the parish church burying-ground of Eastwood, near Glasgow, there is a stone to the memory of Andrew Jackson, dated 1663. This was just before the outbreak of the Covenanted persecution of Claverhouse, when many ancestors of the Macfarrens fought at Bothwell Bridge, and many were martyred. George Jackson was executed in Edinburgh in 1684 for fighting at Bothwell Bridge. Thomas Jackson was despatched to plantations in Virginia, but was done to death on the passage. John and Annatella Jackson were sent to the same place, but perished by shipwreck on the voyage. William Jackson refused to take the oath of abjuration, and, upon being banished from Scotland, he settled near Londonderry. President Andrew Jackson and General Stonewall Jackson were his descendants; so that the Macfarrens came of people of talent.

I could enlarge upon the Jackson branch of the family, but I have said enough to clearly show that it was the Scottish blood in the Macfarrens' veins which raised them to the position they occupied.

Yours very truly,

JOHN H. JACKSON.

167, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

October 28, 1905.

[So far as the Macfarrens are concerned, the above interesting information—with its patriotic ring of 'Scotland for ever'—is for the most part confirmed in H. C. Banister's 'George Alexander Macfarren, his life, works, and influence' (1892); at the same time it is only fair to this Journal to say that the material for the biographical sketch of the late Mr. Walter Macfarren was obtained from that gentleman's own lips, and that he read and corrected a proof of the article. Doubtless he should have qualified the ancestry statement to the effect that he could not claim Scotch nationality on his father's side, despite his northern patronymic.—Ed. M. T.]

AN OPENING IN WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—In Kalgoorlie, Western Australia, there is a good living to be made by a thoroughly competent musician. He must be a good pianist, or violinist, have a thorough knowledge of voice-production and singing, and be able to conduct a choral society and orchestra. The musical people here simply yearn for a capable musician and teacher of singing, but unfortunately he is not to be found in Western Australia. Dozens of young men and women with good voices are anxious to learn singing and to belong to a good choral society. Others would like to join an orchestra, that the works of some of the best masters might be studied and performed—not comic opera or dance music. Whoever comes must be a thoroughly competent man—one in whom the people can have confidence, otherwise he will not be a success. The writer is convinced that an income of from £500 to £800 per annum could easily be earned. The population of Kalgoorlie and Boulder (three miles distant) is nearly 25,000, so there is full scope for an energetic and properly equipped professional man. The climate is one of the best in Australia, with the exception that for a month or two at Christmas the heat is somewhat oppressive. The goldfields here are the richest in the world, wages are high, and money is plentiful. It is only fair to say, however, that there are several teachers here. Should this letter be the means of a capable man settling here, I feel sure he will be grateful for having read it.

Kalgoorlie,

DEAR SIR,—In the February issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES Mr. Alfred Hollins gives a résumé of his Australasian tour, and amongst other interesting things he mentions the peculiar chimes of our Town Hall clock; but as he is slightly in error, and, moreover, only gives the three-quarters, it may interest your many readers if I give you the chimes in full. 'THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS' IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Three years ago our Concertverein introduced Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations into Vienna. Director Ferdinand Löwe was so decidedly successful with that work that soon afterwards he felt justified in producing the 'Cockaigne' overture, with which he was equally fortunate. He was followed by Felix Mottl, who, as conductor of the Philharmonic Society, performed the overture 'In the South' before an admiring audience; and finally, only a few weeks ago, Director Löwe delighted us with a superb reading of the Introduction and Allegro for strings. Thus the production of 'The Dream of Gerontius' on November 16 took place before an audience already acquainted with Elgar's music, and eager for further samples. To introduce the work, moreover, Dr. Eusebius Mandyczewski, a few days before the performance, lectured on Elgar and his oratorio to the members of the Leo Society, consisting of the most distinguished circles of Vienna, when he illustrated his remarks by some selections from the work.

The performance at the concert of the famous Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde was conducted by Director Franz Schalk, one of the Kapellmeisters at our Court Opera House. A sincere admirer of the work, he had prepared chorus and orchestra with the rarest devotion, with the result that the great and wonderful beauties of the score were fully and convincingly revealed. We owe it to his deep and penetrating insight into the spirit of Elgar's music that the whole performance was steeped in an atmosphere of religious and artistic exaltation which held the audience enthralled from the first note to the last.

The rôle of Gerontius was sung with the greatest finish by Herr Felix Senius, of St. Petersburg. His splendid voice, his eminently musical nature, as well as his fine artistic temperament fitted him to be an ideal Gerontius.

His singing in the death-scene in the first part, of the soul's approach before the throne of God, and many other details will not easily be forgotten. Herr Richard Mayr, a very able baritone from the Court Opera, was the Priest. He sang the music with expression and dignity, his powerful voice sounding imposing even in the large room. The rôle of the Angel was entrusted to Frau Rosa Stwertka, a hitherto unknown singer with a rich, full and well-trained voice of great beauty.

The public received the excellently prepared performance with every sign of appreciation and delight. At the end of both parts of the work there was a great display of enthusiasm; Director Schalk and Herr Senius were especially admired and praised. To crown the event there was only one thing needed—the presence of the composer, to whom the audience would have been only too delighted to express their admiration.

'THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS' AT ABERDEEN.

Mr. W. Lister and the Musical Institute of Aberdeen have had the honour and satisfaction of giving the first performance (on November 3) of Elgar's now celebrated work in this far northern city. It called for no little courage on the part of all concerned to undertake the task with the prospective resources available, and a doubtful possibility of public support. But ample preparation, skilful training, and a bold expenditure in ensuring an efficient orchestra, resulted in what is admitted on all hands to have been one of the notable achievements in the musical annals of the granite city. The choral sections were especially well done, and bore witness to the thoroughness of the training of the choir. The soloists were Miss Mabel Braine, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Joseph Lycett. The local members of the orchestra were strengthened by a dozen players from the Scottish Orchestra. Ten band rehearsals had been held. Mr. Lister, who had closely studied the score and was able to conduct with firmness and assurance, is to be heartily congratulated on the success of his enterprise. There was a large audience.

'THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS' AT THE ALEXANDRA PALACE.

The Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. Allen Gill, gave a striking performance of Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' at the Palace on November 4. Since the disbandment of the Finsbury Choral Society the Alexandra Palace Choir has had a considerable reinforcement of singers, with the result that this organization can now claim to be, both as regards numbers and efficiency, the premier choir in the Metropolitan suburban area. Their readiness in attack and the quality of their tonal production, allied to a broad sonority which is seldom heard in London, were very manifest in their performance of Elgar's exacting choruses, and had their enunciation been clearer the effect of their rendering of the Chorus of Demons and 'Praise to the Holiest' would have been much enhanced.

The soloists were Miss Edna Thornton (the Guardian Angel), Mr. John Coates (Gerontius), and Mr. Charles Knowles (the Priest and the Angel of the Agony.) All three impersonations are now quite familiar to the public, and it suffices to say that the artists lived up to their well-deserved reputation. The band, largely composed—as regards the strings—of amateurs, was sometimes a little overpowering to the soloists, but generally speaking quite worthy of the occasion, and responsive to Mr. Allen Gill's insistent baton. It was a reading of the work of which everybody concerned may well be proud. The enormous audience that, in spite of most tempestuous weather, filled the centre transept, were obviously satisfied and delighted with the performance.

Messrs. Ellis, of New Bond Street, have just issued Part I. (A—Powell) of an interesting catalogue of rare books on musical literature, mainly derived from the libraries of the late Mr. Julian Marshall and Mr. T. W. Taphouse. The catalogue is strong in Arne (52 entries), and it contains a fine copy of the third edition of the Forbes Cantus (1682), in addition to many other bibliographical treasures.

NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The Twenty-eighth Norwich Festival (October 25-28) presented several distinctive features. In the first place it was the final appearance of Mr. Randegger, who has conducted every Festival since 1881, and, after a quarter of a century's faithful work, deserves the rest he is seeking. That his labours have been appreciated is indicated by the presentations from all quarters—soloists, chorus, orchestra, and officials—that took place, and to which reference is made on p. 794. It may possibly have been with some view of lightening Mr. Randegger's responsibility that the conductorship was on this occasion placed, as we may say, "in commission." No fewer than sixteen composers attended the Festival to conduct their own works and listen, with more or less enjoyment, to those of their colleagues, affording a spectacle which—though something of the kind was done in Bristol in 1896—must be well-nigh unique in the history of musical festivals. Seven of these composers brought forward something new, the chief novelties being cantatas by Sir Hubert Parry and Mr. Mancinelli. The setting by Sir Hubert Parry of Browning's 'Pied Piper' has already been described in THE MUSICAL TIMES, so it may suffice if I give briefly the impression made by its performance. The humour of the poem is admirably reproduced, and not overdone, save that a rather lighter touch in the orchestration would have been more in accord with the genial spirit of the music. The chorus-writing is admirable, full of point, and capable of any amount of effect. There are parts for two soloists, short but characteristic, which were sung with a quiet appreciation of their humour by Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies.

Mr. Mancinelli's 'St. Agnes' is a cantata based on a Latin poem by Giuseppe Albini, of which Mr. Claude Aveling has prepared an English version. It tells the story of the virgin martyr St. Agnes, of how the youth Furios struck blind for insolently gazing on her beauty, how the flames are powerless to do her harm, and how she meets her death at the hands of the Roman headsmen. The hymns of the Christians form a background to the simple story, for which the composer has written some music which is striking and clever, if not always convincing. For an Italian his vocal-writing seems less easy than might be expected, and the declamation is often forced. The orchestra is treated with power, and the effects, if occasionally rather bizarre, are full of colour. The overture, which is developed at considerable length, has unmistakable charm of melody and colour, and flows more easily than the vocal music. Mr. Mancinelli conducted, and put much colour and energy into his reading of the work, which also owed not a little to the fine singing of Miss Muriel Foster, as St. Agnes, the other two parts being most ably sung by Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Andrew Black.

The other novelties may be treated more briefly. Mr. Granville Bantock introduced a setting of the Epilogue to Browning's 'Frishtah's Fancies,' for tenor soloist (Mr. John Coates). It is a strong, brilliant piece of work, orchestrated with a luxuriousness that is appropriate to an Oriental subject, and full of vitality. It may perhaps be said that in it 'the voice is an excellent accompaniment to the instruments,' but when we recollect that this is just what Madame Mara said of Haydn's 'Creation,' it seems likely that even this objection may disappear in time. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor introduced a set of five choral ballads, for the text of which he had recourse to the Slave Songs of Longfellow, a poet who has already served him well. In this case the composer has entered thoroughly into the spirit of the poetry, and in colour and pathetic expression his music is excellent, while in form it is only a slight tendency to diffuseness that is liable to adverse criticism. And this possible fault will be less apparent when the ballads are heard separately. Three were entirely new, while the other two were given by the Leeds Choral Union last season. A set of five 'Bohemian Poems,' by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke, for baritone (Mr. Andrew Black), was also new. They show his freshness of ideas and variety of rhythms, but they also have a certain lack of finish which may in part be attributed to the composer's apparent difficulty in impressing his intentions on an orchestra, but are also to some extent due to his method of composition. Mr. Herbert Bunning's scena, 'Sir Launcelot and Queen Guinevere,' for tenor (Mr. Ben Davies) and orchestra, is a composition showing good musicianship, but not much individuality; it is smooth and pleasant, but hardly conveys the spirit of romance which the subject suggests. A quasi-novelty was provided in two songs for soprano (Miss Agnes Nicholls), 'Sea-wrack' and 'Bonfires,' by Mr. Hamilton Hartly, who made his first festival appearance to conduct them. Though not new, they had been orchestrated for the occasion, and they possess genuine poetic fancy and charm, though it was not easy to do them justice at five minutes past eleven at night. In the absurd length of the programmes Norwich still follows the example of the 'bad old times' of concert-giving, and in this respect a reform is much needed.

The other conductor-composers included Sir Charles Stanford, who opened the Festival with a fine performance of his Leeds Te Deum, and Sir Edward Elgar, whose 'Apostles' met with an interpretation which realized well the mood of the music, and must, I think, be regarded as the finest achievement of the Norwich Chorus. Sir Edward also conducted his brilliant Introduction and Allegro for strings; Sir Alexander Mackenzie his beautiful orchestral ballade 'La Belle Dame sans Merci'; and Sir Frederick Bridge the 'Morte d'Arthur' overture. Dr. Walford Davies introduced his deeply impressive 'Everyman' overture, which, though not unwisely discarded as a prelude to the cantata, forms a fine commentary on it. Dr. Frederic Cowen conducted a spirited performance of 'John Gilpin'; Mr. Edward German gave his 'Welsh Rhapsody,' and Mr. Arthur Hervey his tone-poem 'In the East,' and as all these three were first heard at the Cardiff Festival a year ago, their inclusion in the programme furnished a compliment to Cardiff all the more striking because it could hardly have been designed. Mr. Frederic Corder's two clever and musical part-songs in canonic form for female voices brings to a close this long list, which includes most of our contemporary composers, and has certainly given a hall-mark to the Norwich Festival of 1905.

The choice of so much modern music left little room for any of the great classics, but 'The Messiah' and 'The Hymn of Praise' were given, and a careful and sympathetic performance was provided of the final scene of Act I. of 'Parsifal,' which, though of course it cannot produce its proper effect in a concert-room, seemed to me less incongruous than usual amid such surroundings. Mr. Kreisler played violin concertos by Bach (in E) and Bruch (in G minor), which, with the concertos of Brahms at Sheffield and Beethoven at Bristol, complete the quartet of 'B's' this great artist has interpreted at the three October Festivals.

Following the example of Birmingham in 1903, when the precedent was set of engaging an orchestra en bloc instead of recruiting from various sources for the occasion, the services of the London Symphony Orchestra were secured for the Festival, and, apart from the obvious advantages belonging to an organized band, it is doubtful whether any other could have come so successfully out of the trying ordeal of playing under seventeen different conductors on three successive days. It was unfortunate that with such an orchestra at hand there was only one symphony in the programme—that of Tchaikovsky in E minor.

I have already ventured on the opinion that the chorus-singing reached a higher standard than ever before, and one incomparably higher than was the case not so many years back. Credit for this must be given to Dr. A. H. Mann, who as chorus-master has done good work for the Festival of his native city.

The vocalists, other than those already mentioned, were Madame Albani, Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Ada Crossley, Miss Mildred Jones, and Mr. Robert Radford. Dr. Bunnett acted as organist, and Mr. F. Oddin Taylor retained the position of honorary secretary which he has held with ability since 1893, being efficiently assisted by Mr. A. H. C. Taylor in that capacity.

The Musical Association opened its thirty-second session on November 21, when Mr. Thomas Casson read a paper on 'The development of the resources of the organ.' The annual dinner was afterwards held at the Trocadero Restaurant, the President of the Association, Sir Hubert Parry, C.V.O., in the chair.

BEETHOVEN'S 'LEONORE.'

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

It looked strange to see on the theatre bill of the Royal Opera House at Berlin for the evening of November 20 the announcement that 'Leonore,' an opera in two acts, by Beethoven, would be given 'for the first time.' Strange indeed it must have looked to the general public; but those who have studied the life of the great composer are aware that the opera 'Fidelio, oder Die eheliche Liebe,' produced at Vienna, at the Theater an der Wien, on November 20, 1805, was only performed three times. The city was in the hands of the French troops, and Beethoven's patrons and friends had fled. No great work was ever produced under such distressing circumstances, and it is not at all surprising that it failed. The critics of the principal papers complained of the opera. The Allgemeine Musik Zeitung said that the music was not remarkable for invention, while as to the 'Leonore' Overture No. 2, which then preceded the opera, it was said that it could not stand comparison with the composer's 'Prometheus.' No critic at the present day would venture thus to express himself. After the third performance Prince Lichnowsky, Seyfried, Clement, and other prominent musicians fought—for such is the right term—for six hours, finally obtaining from Beethoven his promise to make a great many cuts before the opera was given again in the following year. The pruning pencil went vigorously to work, and had it not been for a violent scene between Baron Braun and the composer, the opera thus shortened, and in many places to the great hurt of the music, might have had more success than in the previous year. Beethoven, however, after two performances, withdrew his score.

It would be an utter mistake to think of the first version as a sort of sketch, which was afterwards filled in by a more powerful and experienced hand. It is nothing of the kind. In the latest version there are certain gains, but also certain losses. 'Leonore' is not of mere historical interest, as some of those present at Berlin, who had not opportunity to study many small points of difference, or to weigh the effect of the more important ones, seemed to think. 'Leonore' has colour and individuality of its own; and it contains some of Beethoven's most dramatic, most powerful writing. From a dramatic point of view, indeed, the third act seems even greater than that of 'Fidelio.'

I refrain from entering into detail; indeed, without the help of music-type examples, nothing really interesting can be done. Of the performance little need be said. Everyone worked with the best goodwill, if with varying success. The cast was follows:—Leonore, Frau Plaichinger; Florestan, Herr Kraus; Marzelline, Frau Herzog; Rocco, Herr Knüpfen; Don Pizarro, Herr Hoffmann; and Don Fernando, Herr, or perhaps it is better to say, Mr. Griswold. Dr. Richard Strauss conducted ably, but showed that some portions of the work appealed to him far more strongly than others. All the scenery and costumes were new. The work will be given again on December 1 and 10. Something remains to be said about the man who restored the score. This was Dr. Erich Prieger, of Bonn.

For very many years this worshipper of Beethoven has been zealously trying to gather together the complete material of the original score. Although much of it passed into the hands of Schindler, the friend and biographer of the composer, the remainder became scattered in all directions. How Dr. Prieger went to work to find the missing sheets would form a story of romantic interest; the autographs belonging to Schindler have been for some long time in the Berlin Royal Library. Only a man thoroughly in earnest could have thus carried out his idea. The world in general can scarcely understand the trouble and thought which such a labour of love must have cost him. However, success has crowned his efforts, and perhaps one day he will give a detailed account of his researches; for not only has he gathered together a complete score of the first version, but also complete material for that of the second.

At the Royal Academy of Music the John Thomas (Welsh) Scholarship for vocalists has been awarded to Mary Ann Davies (of Llanelly). The Macfarren Scholarship, which entitles the holder (a British-born subject) to three years' free tuition at the Academy, will be competed for in January next.

THE AUXETOPHONE.

At a meeting of the Northern Scientific Club in Newcastle-on-Tyne, held on November 4, the President, the Hon. C. A. Parsons, C.B., F.R.S., showed and explained the Auxetophone as applied to the violin, violoncello, and double-bass, and also gave a demonstration with it as applied to the gramophone. The Auxetophone is the invention of the lecturer, whose name is so widely known in connection with steam turbines, and Mr. Short. Its chief result is that of increasing enormously the volume of sound produced by any instrument used in connection with it. As applied to the gramophone, the stylus which runs on the record opens or closes by its motion a valve through which air at a constant pressure is forced, the valve being connected with a trumpet which performs the same functions in the apparatus as in the ordinary gramophone. Not only is there an increase in the quantity of the tone, but the quality is vastly improved, and a more natural tone is produced than is usually the case with gramophones. Dr. Johnstone Stoney has shown mathematically that by the Auxetophone attachment the harmonics are strongly reinforced, which will account for the improvement in tone above mentioned.

In the case of stringed instruments, attachable movable arms, very finely balanced, have been specially designed by Mr. Short, which offer very little inconvenience to the performer. The vibrations are thus transmitted to the valve already spoken of, and directed by means of the trumpet to the listener. Speaking generally the tone is unchanged in character, but the first overtone, the octave of the fundamental note, is so strongly reinforced as to render the auditor sometimes uncertain as to which of the two notes is intended by the performer.

At the demonstration on November 4 selections were played on two violins, violoncello, and double-bass, singly and in concert. When the string quartet was being played, the volume of sound was equal to that produced by a large body of strings, even though the trumpet-mouths were turned away from the audience.

In the scientific world so many things which, to the casual observer, are of theoretical and experimental interest only, develop under patient and skilful investigation into practical utility, that it would be unwise to pass by the Auxetophone as a mere toy, or as a matter of just passing interest. Do there not seem to be possibilities lying before it in regard to organ-building?

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The thirty-fifth season began on November 9—the locale being, as usual, the Royal Albert Hall—with a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, that must be placed amongst the best given by this Society. The choir this season is an exceptionally fine body of voices, and it was delightful to listen to the rich and artistically controlled volume of vocal tone, and the impressive rendering of the choruses elicited the warmest signs of appreciation from an enormous audience. Modern composers may flourish, but Mendelssohn remains. Mr. Dalton Baker's reading of the part of the Prophet was consistent, if lacking in distinction. Madame Emily Squire sang the soprano solos with notable purity of style, and the other principal vocalists were Madame Kirkby Lunn and Mr. Lloyd Chandos. The second quartet party consisted of Mesdames Edith Patching and Amy Dewhurst, and Messrs. Vivian Bennetts and Montague Borwell, who admirably fulfilled their duties. Mr. H. L. Balfour occupied his accustomed place at the organ, and the entire performance was stamped with the hall-mark of success.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

'THE APOSTLES.'

This enterprising body commenced its season by giving a performance of Elgar's oratorio 'The Apostles' at the Queen's Hall on October 30. As this was the second performance of this difficult work given by this Society, it was natural to expect that they would improve upon their previous highly creditable record, and this expectation was satisfactorily realised. No pains or expense seem to have been spared in order to do full justice to the composer's ideas. The choral sections were sung with considerable effect, and served to exhibit punctilious training.

If we missed ideal resonance in the great climaxes and moving fervour in the expression, there was still much to admire in the purity of the tone and certainty of attack. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted with much ability. He is gaining firmness and cool control—qualities much in demand in this sometimes complicated work. The soloists were Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Lakin, Mr. Gervase Elwes, Mr. Ivor Foster, Mr. Francis Braun, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies. A special acknowledgment of the fine performances of Mr. Elwes and Mr. Braun may be recorded. The band, which was a competent one, was led by Mr. Henry Lewis, and Mr. C. H. Kempling was the organist.

ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

'MEFISTOFELE' AND 'ANDREA CHÉNIER.'

The revival, on October 31, of Signor Boito's opera 'Mefistofele,' was an interesting event, for the work had not been mounted in London since 1893, and although it is unequal in merit it is so unconventional, and contains so much originality of conception, that it possesses a freshness to ordinary operatic procedure that is refreshing. Its weakest portion is the instrumentation, and it is somewhat surprising that the composer has omitted to revise it during the many years since its première. The beautiful duets, 'Lontano, Lontano,' and 'La luna immobile,' the quartet in the garden scene, Margherita's intensely pathetic soliloquy, 'L'Atra notte,' and the grandiose finale of the 'Classical Sabbath' roused, as of old, enthusiastic applause, and these numbers alone should secure the work occasional performance. Signora Giachetti doubled the parts of Margherita and Elena, and achieved success in each. Signor Zenatello sang with due fervour as Faust, Signora Zaccaria appeared as Marta and Pantalís, and Signor Didur ably sustained the title-role.

Signor Umberto Giordano's 'Andrea Chénier' was played for the first time in England, in Italian, on November 6. The work was not unfamiliar, an English version having been presented by the Carl Rosa Opera Company at the Camden Theatre on April 26, 1903. In criticising the opera it should be remembered that it dates from 1896, in which year, on March 28, it was produced at La Scala, Milan, and that since then Signor Giordano has written 'Fédora' and 'Siberia.' The composer has been given by Signor Luigi Illica a well-constructed libretto, which relates in dramatic fashion the love of the Comtesse Coigny's daughter, Maddalena, for the French poet, André Chénier, who was guillotined three days before the end of the 'Reign of Terror'; but although the music is impassioned and melodious, it fails to impress the listener with sincerity, except in a few numbers, the most memorable of which are the song of an old woman—who gives up her nephew to the call for recruits—and the final duet between the lovers just before they go to the guillotine. The principal parts were well played by Signora Strakosch, Madame de Cisneros, and Signors Zenatello and Sammarco.

The only other event calling for record was the reappearance, after an absence of some eighteen years, of Signor Battistini, a baritone gifted with a beautiful voice, who returns to London a matured artist. He made his réentrée in the title part of 'Rigoletto' on November 15, and deepened the favourable impression then created by his impersonation, on November 21, of Valentine in Gounod's 'Faust.'

'GWENEVERE' AT THE CORONET THEATRE.

Messrs. Ernest Rhys and Vincent Thomas's Celtic lyric play, 'Gwenevere,' produced on November 13, is, to quote from Mr. Rhys's preface, 'an attempt to bring poetry and music together on the stage, with a sense throughout of their lyric dependence upon one another, and their ideal equality in art.' Such an endeavour is commendable, and Mr. Rhys has written a libretto that, from a literary point of view, is certainly in advance of the majority of operatic books of the last century. Unfortunately, however, he has failed to realise sufficiently the requirements of the stage; and, although his characters talk poetical English, they are too undeveloped to excite interest. In his previous opera, 'Eos and Gwenvril,' Mr. Vincent Thomas showed dramatic perception; but in 'Gwenevere' he would seem: to have been paralysed by the strong lyrical element in Mr. Rhys's book, with the result that his music lacks the point and strong emphasis demanded in a dramatic work. He has, however, written some graceful songs and choruses, amongst the former being Launcelot's 'Song of Dinadan,' and Gwenevere's ditty, 'If I were a girl now.' The story, which is set forth in three acts, deals with King Arthur and his Queen Gwenevere, and her love for Launcelot, and these characters were capably sustained respectively by Mr. Edward Iles, Miss Aurelia Révy, and Mr. Robert Cunningham, who were ably supported by Miss Kathleen Maureen as Morgan Le Fay, Mr. Frederick Ranalow, and Mr. Whitney Tew, who severally appeared as Modred and Merlin. The composer, who conducted the performance, was warmly applauded by a large and friendly audience.

COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

The seventh annual musical competition was held at Barrow-in-Furness on November 2, 3 and 4. In many respects this was the most successful of the series. Nearly eighty pianists entered in various classes, and there were good entries in the solo-singing classes. School choirs were not very well represented, but those that came sang excellently, and united to perform the cantata 'The Frogs and the Ox' (Bridge). Some first-rate male-voice choirs appeared, the premier position falling to the Workington Orpheus, under Mr. J. Scott. In the chief mixed choir section, Blackpool Orpheus Society, under Mr. Clifford Higgin, gained a first prize, and in the Madrigal section the Barrow Madrigal Society, under Mrs. Bourne, were the winners. Dr. McNaught adjudicated and conducted.

The preliminary announcements of the Morecambe Festival, to be held on May 9, 10, 11, and 12, 1906, have just been issued. Thirty-five classes and over forty pieces (none of which have been used before at Morecambe) are scheduled. The adjudicators will be Dr. W. G. McNaught, Dr. H. Walford Davies, and Mr. Ivor Atkins (of Worcester Cathedral). A festival choir and orchestra for combined performance at the evening concerts are to be formed. The works named are 'The Pied Piper' (C. H. H. Parry), 'The Revenge' (Stanford), and 'The Pilgrimage to Kevlaar' (Humperdinck). The secretary is Mr. H. Powell, Euston Grove, Morecambe.

The fourteenth annual 'Summerscales' competitions were held at Keighley on October 21 to 28. They were very successful in every way. Miss Edith Robinson adjudicated the violinists, and Dr. Coward and Miss Coward the vocal classes.

London Concerts and Recitals.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

A specially interesting feature to musicians of the Symphony Concert conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood on November 4 at Queen's Hall was the performance of Bach's little-known sixth 'Brandenburg' concerto in B. This work is peculiar in being written for two violæ da braccia, two violæ da gamba, violoncello, violone, and cembalo, represented on the occasion in question by violas, violoncellos, and double-basses. The absence of violins produced a rich, albeit sombre tone-colour, but the music was not lacking in brilliancy, the first and third sections being vigorously written. In the central movement the violæ da gamba are silent, and the number is built up with one long drawn-out melody, in which the drop of a ninth forms a conspicuous feature. By-the-way, this was not the first performance of the work in England, as claimed on the programme, a rendering having been given ten years previously, on November 14, 1895, at Steinway Hall, by Messrs. G. and H. Saint-George. The remainder of the selection on November 4 consisted of Elgar's 'Enigma' variations, the Adagio from Beethoven's 'Prometheus' music, and Dr. Richard Strauss's 'Sinfonia Domestica.' The last-named work was conducted by the composer.

Old masters reigned supreme at the concert on November 18, the programme comprising Mozart's 'Nozze di Figaro' and 'Don Giovanni' overtures, the composer's violin concerto in A, Viotti's violin concerto in A minor, and Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony. The revival of Viotti's work was interesting, for he was the last representative of the great Italian classical school of violinists. He wrote twenty-nine concertos for his instrument, of which the one heard on this occasion is the twenty-second and certainly one of the best. Its slow movement is described by Sir George Grove as 'a gem,' and the two other numbers abound in effective passages for the soloist. Full interpretative justice was done them by Herr Fritz Kreisler, and the performance drew forth enthusiastic applause. Mr. Wood's attention to the old masters should not pass unrecognized, for they are the best possible corrective to the demoralizing effects on purity of taste exercised by much modern music of sensational and ear-tickling character.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

On November 6, at Queen's Hall, the first concert of the second series of these enjoyable music-makings was given, when Dr. Hans Richter, the chief of chieftains, conducted with that Titanic force for which he is famous. As broad-minded as he is broad-shouldered, Dr. Richter had selected a programme which ranged from Weber to Richard Strauss—one that included such gems as Brahms's lovely 'Variations on a theme by Haydn' and Beethoven's ever-fresh 'Eroica' symphony, the latter now one hundred years old. In these noble creations, no less than the 'Euryanthe' overture and the symphonic poem 'Also sprach Zarathustra,' the London Symphony Orchestra fully sustained its reputation for splendid tone and all else that goes towards the attainment of perfection in interpretative excellence.

The programme at the second concert of the season on November 23 was as follows:

Overture, 'Benvenuto Cellini' (Berlioz); Symphony No. 1, in C minor (Brahms); Symphonic Poem, 'Don Juan' (R. Strauss); 'Siegfried' Idyll (Wagner); Prelude and Liebestod, 'Tristan und Isolde' (Wagner). Conductor, Herr Peter Raabe.

The occasion was specially interesting because of the fact that it introduced to a London audience Herr Peter Raabe, formerly conductor of the Dutch Opera House at Amsterdam, and now director of the Munich Kaim Orchestra, and to whom reference is made on p. 795. With such experienced resources it may be imagined that fine performances of the above-named pieces were secured. The reading of the symphony was, perhaps, less specially impressive than that of the Strauss and Wagner selections.

The Joachim Quartet began a series of five concerts at Bechstein Hall on November 20, when the programmes were entirely devoted to the whole of Beethoven's sixteen string quartets. Dr. Joachim was associated with his usual colleagues—Messrs. Halir, Wirth, and Hausmann. How they played there is no need to record.

The Royal Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Ernest Ford, began its thirty-fourth season on November 15 at Queen's Hall. The most important feature of the programme was Haydn's 'Oxford' symphony, which was rendered with admirable crispness and verve. A feature of the evening was the engagement of Mischa Elman, who, after playing with great expression and brilliancy in Wieniawski's 'Faust' fantasia, was presented by Mr. H. M. Morris, on behalf of the Society, with a gold watch and chain. The vocalists were Miss Elizabeth Parkina and Mr. Lane Wilson.

Mr. Richard Buhlig, an American pianist of German extraction and a pupil of M. Leschetizky, created some stir on his debut in London at Queen's Hall on November 7, by bringing forward a programme consisting of Brahms's two pianoforte concertos, with the composer's 'Tragic' overture by way of relief. The seriousness of the new-comer could not be doubted, and it was emphasised by his playing, which proved him to have not only complete command of the keyboard, but also to possess intellectual insight and a virile, emphatic style. The more delicate qualities of expression however seemed to be neglected, and his interpretations were consequently deficient in subtlety of charm. This defect marred the enjoyableness of his subsequent recitals at Æolian Hall on November 14 and 21; but at the same time Mr. Buhlig is an artist who commands respect, and his reading of Chopin's 'Funeral March' sonata was remarkably powerful and dignified.

Miss Evalyn Amethe, the clever young violinist, afforded good evidence of making satisfactory progress in her art, on November 7, at Æolian Hall. It should be added that the fair performer was supported by a contingent of the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Charles Williams. This was the first time an orchestra had been heard in this Hall. The effect was sufficiently satisfactory to justify repetition.

The Berlin Philharmonic Trio—comprising Frau Vita Gerhardt (pianoforte), Herr Anton Witek (violin), and Herr Joseph Malkin (violinello), gave a chamber concert on November 7 at Bechstein Hall, when these accomplished musicians played with enchanting finish Volkmann's Trio in B minor (Op. 5), Max Bruch's 'Scottish Fantasia,' and Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor.

A notable feature of Miss Louise Dale and Mr. Hamilton Earle's concert on November 10 at Bechstein Hall was the production of a song-cycle entitled 'The life of a rose,' written and composed by Madame Liza Lehmann. As indicated by the title the work is of slight character, but the songs, which are seven in number, are poetical in conception and graceful in character; the second number of the cycle, a little gem of daintiness, so enchanted the audience that it had to be repeated. With Miss Dale as vocalist and the composer at the pianoforte, the lyrics had an ideal interpretation. Mr. Earle's contribution to the afternoon included the first performance in London of three from the five stirring 'Bohemian Songs' by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke, produced at the recent Norwich Festival. These also were greatly applauded.

Miss Marguerite de Forest Anderson, an American lady, made her first appearance at Queen's Hall on November 10, and proved herself to be a flautist of much ability. Accompanied by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Mr. Henry J. Wood, she played a flute Concerto in G, by Mozart (Op. 99), said never before to have been performed in England.

The Misses Ruth, Margery, and Phyllis Eyre, daughters of two well-known and esteemed musicians, are a trio of remarkably clever sisters. The concert they gave on November 11 at Æolian Hall was most enjoyable. They co-operated in an expressive reading of Dvorák's pianoforte trio in E minor (Op. 26), played solos on their respective instruments with taste and skill, and anon sang vocal trios with delightful unanimity and refinement. The Misses Eyre are to be congratulated no less upon their versatility than in regard to their artistic temperaments.

At a concert given by Miss Hilda Wilson and Mr. Lane Wilson at Steinway Hall on November 14, these artists, with the co-operation of Madame Evangeline Florence and Mr. William Green, gave the first performance of a cycle of songs entitled 'Dorothy's Wedding-day,' written and composed by Mr. Lane Wilson. The work may be regarded as a sequel to 'Flora's Holiday' by the same composer, being of like unpretentious character and comprising melodious solos and quartets, pleasingly cast in the form of old dance measures. The accompaniment was played by Messrs. James Capener and F. A. Sewell.

Mr. Karl Klein, a young gentleman of nineteen summers, son of Mr. Bruno Oscar Klein, a composer well-known in America, made a good impression on his debut as a violinist at Queen's Hall, on November 14. Young Mr. Klein has somewhat to gain in repose and depth of expression, but, supported by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, he played with great intelligence and skill in Tchaikovsky's concerto and Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole,' and rendered with refined taste solos by Bach and Wieniawski.

Messrs. Fryer, Newmann and Walenn opened their second season of trio concerts on November 18, at Steinway Hall, with Sir Hubert Parry's pianoforte Trio in B minor. An effective performance of this genial and melodious work was much applauded. The other concerted composition was Beethoven's pianoforte Trio in B flat (Op. 97), and between these works Mr. Hugo Heinz gave a dramatic rendering of Herr A. von Fielitz's song-cycle 'Eliland.'

Mr. Albert Spalding, a young American violinist, who has been studying in Florence and Paris, made a successful debut at Queen's Hall on November 21 at a concert, when he enjoyed the co-operation of Mr. Henry J. Wood's orchestra. If Mr. Spalding's tone is somewhat thin, it is sweet and true, and his playing was distinguished by refinement and executive facility. Miss Amy Castles made her reappearance in this country after an absence of four years. During this interval she has acquired perfect control of her fine soprano voice, and may be said to have become a finished artist.

In commemoration of the death—which occurred on November 21, 1695—of Henry Purcell, Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton devoted their chamber concert of the twenty-first of last month entirely to this composer, from whose works an admirable selection was made. The programme included a sonata for trumpet, string quartet and pianoforte by the great English master, which has recently been discovered by Mr. Barclay Squire. Further distinction was given to this performance by the Queen having graciously given her patronage.

Miss Ruth Clarkson is a violinist of nineteen summers who commenced a remarkably successful student career by gaining the Dove Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, under the guidance of M. Emile Sauret, and completed it under the same master at the Chicago College of Music. This young artist gave her first concert in England on November 22 at the Queen's Hall, when, supported by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, she was heard in Max Bruch's Concerto in G minor, Sauret's 'Elégie et Rondo' (Op. 48), and Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole.' Miss Clarkson played with a purity of tone and style and executive fluency that elicited enthusiastic applause from a crowded audience.

RECITALS.

Miss Edith Miller, a Canadian contralto possessing a rich-toned voice of extensive compass, made a very successful debut at Æolian Hall on November 3. Miss Miller, who hails from Manitoba, studied first at the Toronto Conservatoire and afterwards with Mr. Randegger in London, and Madame Marchesi in Paris. Her programme contained examples of many schools, and her interpretations bore witness to musical and dramatic intuitiveness.

Miss Alice Chartres gave a recital, on November 6, at Bechstein Hall, and showed that she was gifted with a rich-toned contralto voice, which should repay further cultivation.

Miss Ruth Lynda Déyo, a pianist who has attracted considerable attention by the intelligence of her readings and sympathetic style, gave a recital at Æolian Hall on November 7, when the attractiveness of her playing was again made evident, to the enjoyment of a large audience.

Miss Florence Schmidt, after an absence of some years, made her reappearance in London on November 9 at Bechstein Hall, when she charmed a large audience by the beautiful quality of her voice and the significance of her singing. Miss Schmidt is to be commended for including in her programme some genuine British ballads, compositions that are strangely neglected by artists, seeing how invariably these ditties interest an audience when well sung. Two new songs, severally entitled 'At close of day' and 'A Secret' by Roger Quilter, are worthy of mention.

M. Louis Abbiate, at his recitals at Bechstein Hall on October 26 and November 9, proved himself to be a violoncellist of exceptional ability and an earnest musician.

The young Australian pianist, Mr. Percy Grainger, may be said to have increased his reputation by the spirited and fluent playing at his recital, on November 15, at Bechstein Hall. Although he occasionally defeated his purpose by lack of restraint, his readings were instinct with life and significance. Two new pieces—severally entitled 'Pagodes' and 'Lotus Land,' composed respectively by M. Claud Debussy and Mr. Cyril Scott—proved good examples of the modern impressionist school, whose principal aim would seem to be poetical vagueness.

Novelties in a programme cheer the heart of the critic, but when a lady asks him to hear sixteen new songs consecutively, the most experienced listener is apt to become somewhat dazed. We must therefore crave to be excused from commenting in detail on Mdlle. Marie Altona's programme at her recital (Bechstein Hall, November 16), but we would mention 'There lies a glowing summer' and 'Thou art the sun' by Arthur Hervey, 'A Greek song' by Cyril Scott, 'Fra i Campi' by Gioù Calcaterra, and 'Pour Consoler' by Louis Ancel.

Although not yet twenty years of age, Mr. Frank Merrick is one of the most enjoyable pianists of to-day; his readings are so essentially sane and at the same time full of imagination and power. To a singularly sensitive touch he allies great technical brilliancy, and these qualities gave a force to his interpretations of Beethoven's 'Appassionata' sonata and other pieces that carried conviction at his recital on November 16 at Bechstein Hall.

Miss Esther Palliser gave a most enjoyable vocal recital on November 18 at Bechstein Hall, introducing several new songs of great merit by British composers. Amongst these may be mentioned 'Prospect,' by Liza Lehmann; 'If we must part,' by D. Elliot; 'As a dream' and 'The Dove,' by Landon Ronald, and 'Willows,' by Cyril Scott. Miss Palliser asks for subscribers during December to a series of three recitals at Bechstein Hall for the encouragement of the younger British composers.

Other recitals worthy of note are:—Miss Ruth Howell and Mr. Howard Hadley, on November 8, at Æolian Hall; Miss Jesuman, a young soprano, on the same day, at Bechstein Hall; Messrs. Bennett and Fryer's three recitals, ending on November 23, at Messrs. Broadwood's; Miss Lilian A. Crow's violin recital, Bechstein Hall, November 10; the Misses Eugénie and Virginia Sassard's vocal recital, at Æolian Hall, November 14; Miss Evangeline Anthony's violin recital, Æolian Hall, November 17; and Miss May Fussell's violoncello recital in the same Hall on the same day.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society opened its tenth season by a performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' on November 11, at the Crystal Palace. The work received an excellent rendering under the earnest conductorship of Mr. Arthur Fagge, the singing of the choir being specially good. The solo parts were taken by Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Carrie James, Mr. Dennis Creedon, Mr. Julien Henry, and Mr. Francis Braun.

St. Peter's Choral Society gave the first concert of its twenty-first season at St. Peter's Hall, Brockley, on November 7, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from Hiawatha' was performed. The band and chorus numbered over a hundred. Dr. C. J. Frost conducted. Mr. John Curran and Mr. F. W. Barker assisted at the pianoforte and harmonium. The solo vocalists were Miss Clara Evelyn Smith, Mr. Henry Frankkiss, and Mr. Dan Price.

The name of Madame De Vere was, we regret to say, inadvertently omitted from the list of solo vocalists in the report of the Sheffield Musical Festival. Madame De Vere not only sang the important music assigned to Margaret in Berlioz's 'Faust,' but interpreted it with excellent effect.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, November 15, 1905.

Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari's musical comedy 'The Inquisitive Women,' which has already been produced in the majority of important German opera-houses, has at last reached Vienna. The performance at the Court Opera-house, under the inspiring direction of Gustav Mahler, was brilliant in every way; the chief rôles were interpreted by our best artists, and the mise-en-scène was above criticism. Mesdames Kittel, Forst, Gutheil-Schoder and Felsler, and Messieurs Mayer, Slezak, Weidemann, and Haydter did the fullest justice to the charming music, and were equally successful historically. Nevertheless the weakness of the libretto, and the absence of real dramatic grip in the music, proved detrimental to an otherwise delightful work, so that it did not remain long in the repertoire, but rather proved an agreeable intermezzo in our season, appealing more to the refined taste of the connoisseur than to the average theatre-goer.

Another interesting event was a concert performance of Gluck's 'Iphigenia in Aulis' by the Vienna Singakademie. The conductor, Herr Carl Lafitte, had chosen Wagner's edition of the opera, which seems strange, seeing that the performance took place in a concert-room, and Wagner's edition was specially prepared for the purpose of making the work available for the modern theatre.

Amongst the novelties produced by the Concertverein a great success attended Sir Edward Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings (Op. 47) which, under the direction of Ferdinand Löwe, was played with extraordinary swing and beauty of tone. The captivating originality of the work completely held the attention of the audience, and a storm of applause rewarded conductor and orchestra. At another concert Hans Pfitzner's overture to Kleist's drama 'Kätchen von Heilbronn' was brilliantly played and received with great favour. Pfitzner is certainly making headway in Vienna. His musical drama 'die Rose vom Liebesgarten' is retaining its place in the repertoire, and gaining more and more enthusiastic admirers amongst the public.

The Philharmonic Concerts, under the direction of Felix Mottl, introduced a new symphonic poem 'Odysseus' Heimkehr' by a young German composer, Ernst Boehe. The piece is not remarkable for thematic invention, but is beautifully scored, and it met with a friendly reception. Boehe has lately become known as the composer of some refined, poetic songs and, considering his youth, it will be safe to expect much from his unmistakable talent.

Amongst the important novelties in chamber-music Max Reger's string quartet in D minor must be mentioned. A work of almost unprecedented complexity, and therefore difficult to grasp, it is remarkably interesting throughout. There can be no doubt that the quartet made a deep impression, and its favourable reception meant as much for the composer as for the unsurpassable performance by the Rosé Quartet. A pianoforte quartet by Georg Schumann, conductor of the Berlin Singakademie, may also be classed amongst the successes of the season; the pianoforte part was excellently played by the composer. Finally, I am in a position to announce that a committee of distinguished musicians in Vienna and Austria generally has been formed for the purpose of publishing a complete edition of the works of Joseph Haydn in conjunction with Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel, who have already issued the well-known Gesamtausgaben of the other classics.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The second Philharmonic concert, on November 17, was devoted to Berlioz's 'Faust,' with Miss M. Herdman and Messrs. Charles Saunders and Charles Tree as soloists. The whole performance was excellent. The chorus and orchestra acquitted themselves very creditably, and it is a matter of pride to the Society to have performed so exacting a work without importing more than two instrumental players. Nothing can better illustrate the ability of the conductor, Dr. Koeller, who has created the orchestra out of much raw material. Miss Herdman, the soprano soloist on this occasion, was formerly a pupil of Dr. Koeller's and a member of the Society's chorus. She has just finished her studies under Mr. Visetti at the Royal College of Music, and bids fair to take high rank among concert sopranos, being the possessor of a fine voice and much natural musical ability.

The 'marvellous boy,' Mischa Elman, visited us on November 3, under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society at an extra concert, and simply astounded the audience by his precocious talent.

The Queen's College concerts began with two appearances on November 10 and 11 of the Kruse Quartet, of whose excellence there is no need to speak. Their performance of Beethoven's great Op. 131 was magnificent.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Max Mosse's drawing-room concerts opened on October 26 at the Grand Hotel. Miss Marie Hall, so closely associated with Birmingham, made her farewell appearance here prior to her American tour. With Mr. Mosse she took part in Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins, and played a number of solos, being accorded an enthusiastic reception. Mlle. Tosta de Benici pleased the audience by her refined pianoforte playing, and Madame Zara Minadieu was successful in her vocal contributions.

The first Halford Concert took place in the Town Hall on November 7. The orchestral numbers were Beethoven's overture 'Zur Weihe des Hauses,' Haydn's Symphony in C (No. 1 of the Salomon set), Tchaikovsky's Elegy for strings, and Wagner's 'Meistersinger' overture. For the Haydn symphony the strings were reduced in number, and as near an approach to the 'old Papa's' orchestra as possible was effected, with excellent results. Mr. Fritz Kreisler, in giving a fine performance of the solo part in Mendelssohn's violin concerto, was ably supported by the orchestra. His playing of Wieniawski's 'Airs Russes' (with orchestral accompaniment) pleased so much that he was recalled four times, but no encores are granted at these concerts. Mr. Halford received a hearty welcome on resuming his duties as conductor.—At the second concert, November 21, the programme consisted of Elgar's 'Froissart' overture, Svendsen's Symphony in D (Op. 4), and Wagner's 'The Flying Dutchman' overture. Mr. Percy Grainger created a great sensation as the soloist in Tchaikovsky's pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor, and in pieces by Schumann and Liszt.

At the second Harrison Concert, held in the Town Hall, November 13, the London Symphony Orchestra appeared for the first time in Birmingham with Sir Edward Elgar as conductor. The programme included his overture 'In the South,' the Introduction and Allegro for strings, and the song-cycle, 'Sea Pictures,' Miss Edna Thornton being the vocalist. Other pieces were Mozart's 'Figaro' overture, two Slavonic dances by Dvorák, and the third symphony of Brahms. Conductor and orchestra received ovations, and the concert was highly appreciated.

Concerts calling for notice were the vocal recital in the Masonic Hall, October 24, by the local tenor, Mr. H. Ripley-Evans, assisted by Miss Olive Rider (pianist) and Mr. Arthur Hyth (violinist); and the Town Hall concert, October 31, of the Handsworth Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Johan C. Hock. At this, the Serenade in E flat (Op. 7) by Richard Strauss, and the Spring Song ('Varsang') by Jean Sibelius, were heard here for the first time. Mrs. Henry J. Wood charmed the audience with songs by Grieg and other composers, her husband accompanying at the pianoforte. Mr. Hock played Haydn's violoncello Concerto in D, Mr. Wymark Stratton conducting, and Mr. Albert Fransella gave brilliant renderings of Benjamin Godard's flute Suite (Op. 116). The orchestral playing was very creditable to the Society.

On November 14, Miss Nellie Finch (soprano) and Mr. Arthur Cooke (pianist), both local artists, gave a successful concert in the Temperance Hall, when a varied programme was excellently rendered.

The only choral concert since my last notice took place on Saturday, November 11, when the Choral Union gave a popular programme devoted to Gounod—including the 'St. Cecilia' Mass, with Miss Laura Taylor, Mr. Philip Ritte and Mr. James Coleman as principals. Band and chorus were in good form. Mr. Thomas Facer conducted.—A wind instrument concert was given at the Midland Institute School of Music, on November 4, when students played quintets, for pianoforte and wind, by Mozart and Rubinstein.

On November 1, Sir Edward Elgar commenced a course of five lectures at the University, the subjects being English composers, English executants, English critics. The second lecture, however, on November 8, was devoted to a study of Brahms's 3rd Symphony, preparatory to its performance at one of the Harrison concerts.

The D'Oyly Carte principal repertoire company gave a week's performances of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, from October 30. A week later, at the Grand Theatre, Mr. Hedmond regaled the public with 'The Queen's Jester'; and on November 20, Mr. Turner commenced a short season of English opera at the same house, but brought out nothing new.

The Festival Choral Society's performance of 'Everyman' occurs too late for the present letter.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Clifton Chamber Concerts were resumed on November 2, when there was a large attendance at the Victoria Rooms. The executants were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violinello). Beethoven's Quartet in F major (Op. 59, No. 1) and Dvorák's Quartet in E flat major were the concerted productions, and they received an excellent interpretation. Mr. Parsons played César Franck's Prelude, Choral and Fugue, and Mr. Alexander played Tchaikovsky's Meditation and Scherzo (Op. 42). The vocalist was Mr. Arthur Walenn.

On November 6 the jubilee of St. John's (Bedminster parish church) was celebrated by a special musical service, there being an augmented choir of 150 surpliced singers drawn from the various daughter churches of St. John's, accompanied by an efficient orchestra, of which Mr. F. S. Gardner was leader. Mr. C. W. Stear (organist of the Church of the Holy Nativity) was at the organ, and Mr. F. W. Hek (the organist of St. John's) acted as conductor. Prior to the service Handel's 4th Concerto was played. The canticles were those of Tours in F, and the anthem 'All men, all things,' from Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.'

A movement has been set on foot for giving concerts specially in the interest of young students, and on November 8 the first performance was held at the Redland Park Hall. Selections from the works of Bach constituted the first part of the programme, Mr. Edward Cook preceding the rendering by reading a paper on the composer. The instrumentalists were Miss Gertrude Wade (first violin), Miss Ida Home (second violin), Miss Gladys Home (viola), Miss Rosa Button (violinello), and Miss May Thomas (pianoforte). Miss Katharine Brownlow and Herr Sondermann were the vocalists.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Edinburgh Society of Musicians continues to grow in prosperity, and presents a formidable list of waiting candidates for Associateship. The first meeting was held on October 28, under the chairmanship of the president for the year, Mr. N. J. Affleck. A choice programme was submitted by Mr. Paul Della Torre, and included duets for two pianofortes, in conjunction with his pupil, Mr. Appleyard; Mendelssohn's D minor Sonata for violinello and pianoforte, with Mr. H. Murray; and songs by Mr. Marcus Dods.

Some most interesting recitals, distinguished alike for high artistic aim and excellence of achievement, have been given by local artists during the month. Miss Edith Walton, a thoughtful and cultured pianist, greatly enhanced her reputation by her recital on November 1; and the pianoforte and violinello recital of Messrs. Cargil and Millar-Craig (Mr. Cargil making his début as a public performer), on November 8, highly delighted their audience, and showed both artists to be refined in taste and fluent in execution. Mr. David Bayne gave a chamber concert on November 16, assisted by Messrs. Colin Mackenzie and Millar-Craig. Brahms's pianoforte trio in B, and three 'Lieder an der Mond,' by Swan Hennesy, for strings and pianoforte, were most effective numbers.

Of visitors we have had, on consecutive days, Masters Elman and Vecsey—both masters of their instrument—and a voice and violin recital by Miss Muriel Foster and Mr. Fritz Kreisler.

At the first of the 'Four Historical Concerts' given on November 15 at the University Music Class-room, under Professor Niecks's direction, Mdle. Wanda Landowska gave a highly interesting and successful harpsichord and pianoforte recital illustrating 'J. S. Bach and his contemporaries.' The notes contributed by the Reid Professor of Music to the programme were of the usual instructive nature.

The Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society—now in the thirty-fourth year of its existence—gave its first concert of the season on November 20. During its long and useful career, it was never in a more flourishing condition than at present, and its high aims are clearly demonstrated by the quality of the music performed. Weber's 'Ruler of Spirits' overture; Beethoven's 2nd Symphony; Elgar's 'Three Bavarian Dances'; the Prelude to Massenet's 'Eve,' and other pieces were rendered in the highest style of amateur attainment. Mr. T. H. Collinson ably conducted, and the vocalist of the evening was Miss Ella Platt.

The death of Mr. Robert A. Marr is referred to on p. 791.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

For some years past there has been a declining interest in music in the neighbouring town of Paisley, and some public-spirited citizens, viewing this with concern and regret, have drafted a scheme for the promotion of popular musical education. It is proposed to encourage the formation of public music classes by offering premiums to teachers, based on the success of their pupils in examinations for certificates, and by paying the examination fees of the pupils. The scheme also aims at raising the standard of performance in juvenile and adult choirs, and to the conductors of all choirs attaining a certain degree of efficiency a premium will be paid. The examination of the choirs will be in the hands of Mr. Joseph Bradley, conductor of the Glasgow Choral Union.

During the past month quite a number of miscellaneous concerts, chiefly by local musicians, have been given, and among the visiting performers have been von Vecsey and Madame Melba.

The chamber concerts organized by the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society have been very well attended. At the first (on October 30) Messrs. Henri Verbrugghen (violin) and Philip Halstead (pianoforte) played Haydn's Sonata No. 1 in G, Beethoven's 'The Kreutzer,' and Rubinstein's Sonata in G (Op. 13). The programme of the second concert, on November 6, was wholly sustained by the Verbrugghen Quartet (Messrs. H. Verbrugghen, B. Macgrath, D. Nichols, and J. Messias). The leading items were Beethoven's Quartet No. 5 in A and Dvorák's Quartet in F ('The Nigger').

The first concert of the Choral and Orchestral Union took place on November 14 before one of the largest audiences ever assembled in St. Andrew's Hall. The chief attraction was the first appearance at these concerts of Herr Kubelik who, in conjunction with the Scottish Orchestra, played Mendelssohn's violin concerto and Saint-Saëns's Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso for violin and orchestra. The only novelty on the programme was Elgar's meditation, 'Lux Christi,' in which the organ part was played by Mr. Thomas Berry. This combination of organ and orchestra has been made possible by the recent reconstruction of the organ in St. Andrew's Hall, and under the new conditions another field in concerted music is opened up to the management. It should be mentioned that Dr. Cowen was received with unmistakable cordiality on resuming his place at the conductor's desk.

The Choral Union performed Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion at the second concert on November 21. It is several years since this noble work has been heard in Glasgow, and in the present instance we have to record a performance of great merit. Formerly, when the tenor and bass sections of the chorus were separated by the organ-case, occasional unsteadiness was almost inevitable; but the reconstruction of the organ now admits of all sections of the choir being placed in front, and in this there was considerable gain, as was shown in the steady performance of Bach's difficult double choruses. A feature of the concert was the effective singing of the chorales. The solo music was entrusted to a capital quintet of vocalists—Miss Lillie Wormald and Miss Muriel Foster, and Messrs. H. Brearley, R. Radford, and W. Harvey. The accompaniments were given by the Scottish Orchestra, with Mr. Thomas Berry at the organ, and Mr. Luther Hall at the pianoforte. Mr. Joseph Bradley conducted with his customary skill.

The Stillie Bursary has this year been awarded to Miss Sara Kerr for pianoforte playing.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the first concert of the season of the Societa Armonica in the Small Concertroom of St. George's Hall, on November 4, under the conductorship of Mr. Vasco V. Akeroyd, a fine and well-balanced performance of Schumann's 'Rhenish' symphony was given. Miss Isabel McCullagh played the solo part in Spohr's violin Concerto No. 8, with cultured feeling and sympathetic insight. For the first time in Liverpool Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings was given, also a first local performance of Sibelius's legend for orchestra, 'The Swan of Tuonela.' The vocalist was Miss Meta Burig. The Carmen Sylva Orchestra played with effect Saint-Saëns's 'Danse Macabre' at their Hope Hall concert on the same date.

The first Schiever concert of the season was given at the College of Music on November 4. The programme consisted of Schumann's Quartet (Op. 41, No. 1); Brahms's pianoforte Quintet in F minor (Op. 34); and Goldmark's Suite for pianoforte and violin. Mr. Isidor Cohn was at the pianoforte, and associated with Mr. Schiever were Messrs. Alfred Ross, Mr. Carl Courvoisier, and Mr. Walter Hatton.

The Welsh Choral Union's performance of 'The Creation,' under the direction of Mr. Harry Evans, at the Philharmonic Hall, on November 8, showed this energetic Society to be in fine fettle this season.

The Liverpool Symphony Orchestra may now be described as firmly established. Under Mr. Akeroyd's direction, this carefully-chosen band gave a really admirable rendering of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony on November 13 at the Sun Hall, which was well filled at the popular prices charged. No words of any chronicler can express adequate gratitude for the work and aim of this organization.

The London Symphony Orchestra, with Sir Edward Elgar as conductor, played, at the Philharmonic Hall on November 14, the 'In the South' overture, and the Introduction and Allegro for strings, in addition to Mozart's 'Figaro' overture, and Brahms's 3rd Symphony, whilst Miss Edna Thornton artistically sang the conductor's 'Sea Pictures.'

The third Philharmonic concert on November 7 brought to a hearing Dr. Walford Davies's 'Everyman.' Miss Muriel Foster sang the music assigned to her with exceptionally fine taste and richness of voice, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies was at his best. The work made a distinctly favourable impression. At the fourth concert on November 20, the programme included Tchaikovsky's 4th Symphony, Liszt's symphonic-poem 'Mazeppa,' Bach's bourrée for Strings, and Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman' and Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overtures. The vocalist was Signor Moris Ancona, who made his first appearance in Liverpool, and created a remarkable impression. Dr. Cowen conducted both concerts.

Mr. T. Shaw's promenade concerts at the Tournament Hall are proving very successful, and we have had a visit from Mr. Kubelik.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Hallé concert on October 26, Mr. Raoul Pugno played Franck's 'Variations' for pianoforte and orchestra, in addition to a Mozart concerto (in E flat) with a pearly touch and a singing fluency reminding of the founder of the concert. The symphony was Schumann's No. 2 in C. At the concert on November 2 the symphony was one of Bruckner's, to which Dr. Richter is a little partial—the 'Romantic' in E flat—and Mr. Fritz Kreisler, the solo violinist, played the Mendelssohn concerto, and one of Mozart's (in A), with fine breadth of phrasing. The 'Dream of Gerontius' was performed for the fourth time on November 9, when the choir surpassed each of its three previous efforts. The principals were Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Andrew Black. César Franck came before us again at the concert of November 16, when his only symphony—in D minor—was played, and Miss Elsie Playfair, the solo violinist, played Max Bruch's 'Scottish Fantasia' and the 'Havanaise' of Saint-Saëns. Mr. Plunket Greene was the vocalist.

The Gentlemen's Concerts re-commenced on October 23, Dr. Richter, of course, conducting. Haydn's 'Clock' symphony, the overture to 'Zauberflöte,' and the fourth of Bach's Brandenburg concertos—for violin, two flutes, and string orchestra—were in the programme. Miss Elsie Schünemann was the vocalist. Young Arthur Catterall, in his playing of the Mendelssohn violin concerto, exhibited increased maturity of style. The second concert, on November 8, took the form of an afternoon recital, at which Mr. Kreisler played and Miss Beatrice Elliott sang.

On November 1 the Brodsky Quartet gave the first of their series of six chamber concerts, when the programme consisted of a Haydn quartet (in G), Brahms's pianoforte quartet (Op. 60), and Beethoven's quartet in B flat (Op. 130). Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus was at the pianoforte in the Brahms quartet. Last season the net proceeds of this series of concerts—contributed to the Students' Sustentation Fund of the Royal Manchester College of Music—were just over £165. At the second Brodsky Quartet concert, on November 22, Mozart's quartet in D, No. 10 in the Breitkopf & Härtel Catalogue; Beethoven's pianoforte trio in E flat (Op. 70, No. 2); and the Brahms Sextet in G (Op. 36) constituted the programme.

The generous list of artists for the first of Mr. Brand Lane's series of subscription concerts, on October 28, contained the names of Madame Suzanne Adams, Miss Marie Brema, Mr. John Harrison, and Mr. Santley, shining above the enticing name of Mr. Kubelik. At the second concert, on November 11, there was an excellent performance of 'Elijah,' the principals being Miss Helen Jaxon, Miss Dora May (a local artist), Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Dalton Baker. For the second Harrison concert the London Symphony Orchestra was engaged, with Sir Edward Elgar as conductor. The new work in the programme was the composer-conductor's Introduction and Allegro for string orchestra and quartet—ancient in design, romantically modern in spirit, with the Shakespearian motto attached, 'A smiling with a sigh.'

The second series of the new musical venture, the Promenade Concerts, commenced on November 18. The band—a section of the Hallé Orchestra—played popular pieces with great acceptance to an improved auditory. Mr. Speelman again conducted, and violin solos were contributed by Miss Edith Robinson—whom Manchester claims—and vocal solos by Miss Gertrude Bloomfield (another local artist) and Mr. Robert Radford. I understand that the members of the band are mutually interested in this renewal of an undertaking carried on energetically some years ago by Mr. Edward de Jong, and the experiment will be watched with interest. Mr. J. Campbell McInnes and Mr. Graham Peel, with Miss Shakespeare at the pianoforte, gave an interesting recital on October 30. Mr. McInnes sang a cycle of songs—'Camella'—by Mr. Graham Peel, and Miss Shakespeare played a prelude of his. Mr. Peel is a native of Manchester.

Four of the present and past students of the Royal Manchester College—Miss Minnie Williams (soprano), Miss Mary Spencer (pianoforte), Mr. Arthur Catterall (violin), and Mr. William Warburton (violinello)—gave a chamber concert on November 7, and—especially in the playing of Beethoven's trio in D major (No. 1 of Op. 70)—showed the thoroughness of the College teaching as well as the skill of the students. The series of Mr. Cross's popular weekly concerts commenced on October 28. St. Peter's Church, in the centre of the city, seems doomed. It has an excellent organ, with a fine vox humana stop; and when the late Mr. J. St. J. B. Joule was honorary organist there—a post he held for many years—there was no choir-singing equal to that of this church, not excepting that of the Cathedral. The ex-chorists of the Cathedral have formed an association for help and friendship's sake. On October 28 they held their second annual social gathering. The Bishop was present, and made an approving and quite humorous speech on the occasion.

At the first Schiller-Anstalt concert, on October 25, Mr. Pablo Casals (violinello), and Mr. Max Mayer (pianoforte), played the Brahms Sonata (Op. 38); Schumann's Adagio and Allegro (Op. 70); and Beethoven's seven Variations on the 'Zauberflöte' duet. Mr. Casals's solo was Bach's Sonata No. 3, in C.

Mr. Egon Petri has succeeded Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus as professor of the pianoforte at the Royal College of Music here at Manchester.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Actual musical events have so far been but few. On October 22 and 23 the energetic choir of Elswick Road Wesleyan Church, which numbers eighty on ordinary occasions, performed Sullivan's 'Festival Te Deum' and Handel's 'Israel in Egypt,' under the direction of their choirmaster, Mr. George Dodds. The second Harrison Concert, on November 20, created much interest, both personal and musical, on account of the appearance of Sir Edward Elgar and the London Symphony Orchestra, when the Newcastle musical public had the extremely rare privilege of listening to a Brahms symphony (No. 3 in F). Great was the contrast between this uncompromising work, with its severe reserve and almost unfathomable depths of quiet beauty, and the dazzling brilliance of the conductor's 'In the South' overture. Sir Edward Elgar's delightful 'Introduction and Allegro' for strings and the picturesque song-cycle 'Sea-Pictures' (soloist, Miss Edna Thornton) were included in the programme.

The Bohemian String Quartet opened the season of the Newcastle Chamber Union Society on November 10 with much success. We have had return visits from Mr. E. H. Lemare and Dr. Peace, and Kubelik has been appearing in various towns in the district.

On November 15 Mr. N. Kilburn delivered an interesting lecture at Sunderland on 'Beethoven's Later Quartets,' with illustrations. The South Shields Orchestral Society, now in the third season of its existence, is rehearsing no fewer than three symphonies, Mozart's in C ('The Jupiter,' so called), Beethoven's in C minor, and Mendelssohn's 'Italian,' in addition to Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture, Brahms's 'Hungarian Dances' and Schubert's 'Rosamunde' ballet music.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Norwich Philharmonic Society have now issued their programme for the season. At their first concert, under the direction of Dr. Bates, Mark Hambourg will be the solo pianist, and the Norwich Choral Society will contribute Hugh Blair's 'Trafalgar,' composed expressly for the Nelson centenary. At the second concert Professor Carl Halir will form the principal attraction, and Mendelssohn's violin Concerto and Tchaikovsky's '1812' overture will be performed. The third concert by the Choral and Philharmonic Societies will consist of Gounod's 'Faust.'

Mr. Arthur Bent's orchestra is also announced to give two concerts on December 7, Tchaikovsky's Serenade for strings (Op. 48) and Bach's Concerto for two violins and orchestra being the chief features.

The Saturday Popular Concerts have also started with a very satisfactory performance, under the direction of Dr. Bunnett, at which the Misses Lefroy and Mr. Knyvet Wilson were the vocalists, and Miss Dorothea Whitley contributed some violin solos. There was an audience of over 1,200 persons.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Sacred Harmonic Society commenced their Jubilee Season on November 16 with a performance of Berlioz's 'Faust,' which was, on the whole, not a brilliant rendering of this fine work. The soloists, excellent in every way, were Madame Sobrino, Mr. William Green, Mr. Andrew Black, and Mr. William Downing. Mr. Allen Gill conducted with his usual skill, and Mr. Lyell Taylor led the orchestra.

The Long Eaton Orchestral Society gave their first concert on November 9, when they were supported by the Meister Glee Singers. They were a safe attraction in any case, but specially so because Mr. Ford Waltham is a native of Nottingham. The orchestra, under the baton of Mr. Swift, played Handel's 'Largo,' Suppé's 'Light Cavalry,' Weber's 'Invitation,' and Raff's 'Festmarsch.' Mr. Frostick proved an attractive violin soloist.

A recital for two pianofortes on October 26 was deservedly well supported—not only on account of its rarity but the excellence of the programme, both in material and performance. The pianists were Miss Alice Hogg and Miss Emily Roseblade, who played compositions by Arensky, Schumann, Schutt, Chaminade, and Saint-Saëns. Vocal items were contributed by Mr. W. Higley.

Miss Barbara Thornley, who gave a pianoforte recital on November 8, was heard to great advantage in works by Chopin and Brahms. In the Sonata in A for violin and pianoforte by the latter composer she was supported by Miss Marie Hore, a Nottingham violinist of great promise. The vocalist was Mdle. Luquien, who introduced several attractive compositions by Miss Thornley. Violoncello solos were ably rendered by Mr. Cyril Clensy.

A new feature in Nottingham this season is the introduction of cheap chamber concerts, promoted by Mr. Janssen, of Hull. The first of these, which are well supported, was given on November 9, when the Bohemian String Quartet interpreted Smetana's 'Aus meinem Leben,' a Scherzo (Cherubini), and Beethoven's Quartet in F major. Miss Olitzka, the vocalist of the evening, charmed her audience in a varied selection of songs.

A vocal and pianoforte recital was given on November 15 by Miss Gertrude Foster and Miss Florence Schmidt, when the programme embraced pianoforte compositions from Lully to Liszt, and vocal solos ranging from Leo to Leoncavallo.

The Leicester Philharmonic Society opened their season with a performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' on November 16. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Maria Yelland, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Herbert Brown, and the orchestra and chorus—who did their work well—were under the direction of Mr. H. B. Ellis.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In the closing days of October there were two interesting concerts claiming record—one a 'benefit' concert given by the Sheffield Choral Union with the object of reducing the heavy debt on the Society, when Mr. J. Duffell directed performances of his own choral ballad 'Hohenlinden' and Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens.' The Society, which is doing a valuable educational work, merits support, and it was gratifying to see a large audience present. The other concert was a delightful one given by the Chamber Music Society, at which Brahms's clarinet quintet was performed by the Kruse Quartet and Mr. Charles Draper, the distinguished clarinetist.

The early days of November saw some excellent concerts given in the district. The Penistone Choral Society is making music flourish in that bleak countryside; Mr. J. Cooper directed more than adequate performances of Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' and Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm. At Ann's Road Church, Heeley, Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' formed one of a series of admirable services and concerts, and Oxford Street Chapel, another suburban centre of musical activity, was the locale of a particularly good all-round performance of 'The Creation' under Mr. Joseph Kaye. Two young choral bodies of the city merit recognition—St. Jude's (Moorfields) by reason of a satisfactory performance of Hatton's 'Robin Hood,' and a promising Society at Hillsborough, which rendered Gaul's 'Holy City' with much credit to themselves and Mr. F. Shimeld, conductor of the Society.

The first great choral concert of the season was the subscription meeting of the Sheffield Musical Union on November 14. The choice of the familiar 'Elijah' was partly due to the proximity of the festival, affecting many of the members and Dr. Coward (the conductor), necessitating economy of rehearsals. Any work by the Union, however well known, is always welcome. 'Elijah' is one of their battle-horses, and again they compassed a choral triumph. The Sheffield Orchestra assisted. The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Charles Tree. At the organ was Mr. W. S. Jessop, and Mr. H. Parkes led the orchestra.

The flood of 'Messiah' performances has overflowed into November; the end of the month saw several announced.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

At the first of the Philharmonic Society's concerts, on November 8, Beethoven's cantata 'The Glorious Hour' (Der glorreiche Augenblick), written for the Congress of Vienna in 1814, was given. Though it used occasionally to be heard with a substituted libretto, as 'The Praise of Music,' it had never before been given in public in this country in its original guise, and a new translation by Mr. W. A. Phillips was employed on this occasion for the first time. No doubt the cantata is too essentially a piece d'occasion to be very characteristic, yet there are many Beethovenish touches, and some highly interesting anticipations of the Choral Symphony. Coupled with it was Elgar's 'King Olaf,' a work so fresh and charming that it is surprising it had never before been heard at Leeds. Finished and refined performances of both works were given, if perhaps a little greater variety would have realized more of the romantic feeling which 'Olaf' seems to demand. Sir C. V. Stanford conducted, and Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mrs. James Wilson, Mr. W. Green and Mr. Gordon Heller formed a capable, if not too well-balanced quartet.

The Leeds Bohemian Quartet (Messrs. Elliott, Wright, Moxon and Bolton) began their seventh season of chamber concerts on October 25, with one of their varied and interesting programmes, including quartets by Haydn (in B flat, Op. 76, No. 4), Beethoven (in F, Op. 18, No. 1), and the quartet in D minor by a Leeds musician, M. A. E. Grimshaw, which made so strong and favourable an impression last season that its repetition was a fitting tribute to its excellence. On November 2 Mr. Johan Kasch, a young Dutch violinist who is settling at Leeds, gave a recital in which he afforded ample proof of first-rate qualities as both virtuoso and artist. The Leeds Musical Union, a male-voice choir, gave on November 6 a programme of which the chief features were Elgar's set of part-songs from the Greek Anthology, and some duets for two pianofortes, played very artistically by Messrs. H. P. Richardson and Mr. Noel Bell, the Society's conductor. The appearance of Franz von Vecsey at the first of Messrs. Haddock's musical evenings, and of Mr. E. H. Lemare at one of the municipal concerts, requires no more than mention, but a word is due to the recital given by Mr. T. Tertius Noble (of York Minster) on the organ in St. Bartholomew's Church, Armley, since this noble instrument, by the great German builder, Schulze, is one of peculiar dignity and grandeur of tone—a church organ in the truest sense of the word. Built in 1871, and re-erected in its present position in 1879, it has just been provided with new action, and many of the mechanical appliances which modern ingenuity has contrived, added by Mr. J. J. Binns, the Bramley organ-builder.

BRADFORD.

The Bradford subscription concerts were resumed on November 3, when the Hallé Orchestra, under Dr. Richter, gave a programme including Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto (Kreisler), Richard Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel,' Elgar's 'Cockaigne' overture, and Wagner's 'Walküre-ritzt,' a programme just suited to the capacities of band and conductor, so that some exceedingly fine performances resulted. Miss Amy Castles was the vocalist, and sang some florid operatic songs very brilliantly. The Bradford Old Choral Society gave its opening concert on October 31, under Mr. Fitton's direction, 'Elijah' being the work chosen. Mr. Dan Price sang the part of the Prophet artistically and with sincere dramatic feeling, and the other parts were efficiently filled by Miss Taggart, Miss Annie Grew, and Mr. Fred Fallas. The chorus sang pleasantly, if not quite with the robust tone one is accustomed to in the West Riding. Madame Melba appeared at Mr. Harrison's concert on October 27, and Miss Atkinson, a local pianist, gave on November 10, with the help of Mr. Rawdon Briggs's excellent quartet, a capital programme of chamber music, including Brahms's G minor pianoforte quartet and Schumann's familiar work for the same combination.

OTHER TOWNS.

On November 9 the Doncaster Musical Society, under the conductorship of Mr. T. Brameld—a Rotherham amateur who has done much for good music in the neighbourhood—gave Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' very successfully. The principal parts were taken by Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Goldsack, Messrs. Anderson Nicol, Dan Price, and R. Crawshaw.—On November 10 the Hull Harmonic Society, of which Mr. Walter Porter is conductor, repeated the performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius,' which they gave for the first time last season, the principals engaged being Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Joseph O'Mara, and Mr. Fowler Burton.—The York Chamber Concerts were resumed on November 11, when the 'Nora Clench' Quartet introduced a characteristic and very interesting string quartet in D minor, by Serge Tanéïev, Tchaikovsky's pupil, as well as one of Haydn's most delightful compositions. Miss Clench's violin solos and Miss Mukle's fine violoncello playing were the other features of the concert.—Chamber music was introduced at the first concert of the Middlesbrough Musical Union on November 7, when the Bohemian Quartet played works by Schubert and Dvorák, and Strauss's 'Enoch Arden' music was played by Mr. Harold Samuel, Mr. Richard Temple being the reciter. Unaccompanied pieces were sung by the Society's chorus, under Mr. Kilburn's direction.—On November 6 Mr. Edgar Haddock conducted a couple of concerts by the Harrogate Orchestral Society, which were dignified by the title of the 'Harrogate Festival.' The programme included a Haydn symphony, which was creditably performed, the first violins, of whom a large proportion were ladies, acquitting themselves well, and showing that Mr. Haddock's training had had good results.—The Halifax Orchestral Society, of which Mr. Van Dyk is the conductor, has of late made great progress under his enthusiastic lead, and gave a very interesting concert on November 9, the programme including Beethoven's 2nd Symphony, the 'Freischütz,' 'Di Ballo' and 'Lohengrin' overtures, which were, on the whole, exceedingly well played. Mr. Ben Calvert was the vocalist, and introduced a clever song by a local musician, Mr. C. Barber's 'If I were king.'—The Wakefield Chamber Concerts, on November 16, opened a fresh series with the Cathie Quartet, with whom Miss Ada Collier was associated in a very spirited performance of Dvorák's pianoforte Quintet. Some of Glazounov's 'Novelletten' for string quartet were also played, and Miss Barbara Brooke appeared as vocalist.—On October 24 and 28 the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society gave one of its programmes of part-songs and the like, under Mr. Ibeson's conductorship.

His Excellency The Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada, has graciously accepted the Honorary Presidency of The Philharmonic, a new musical organization recently founded by Dr. Charles A. E. Harriss in Montreal. The work of the Society will embrace a series of subscription concerts, six chamber classical concerts, and a series of people's concerts. The first subscription concerts will be held February 19-20, with Emil Paur as conductor. Amongst the novelties chosen for performance are Dr. Harriss's choric idyl 'Pan'—which is also to be given in London next June—in addition to Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Canadian Rhapsody.'

Mr. John Day, whose death we record with regret, was a well-known violinist who, for fifty-three years, was a member of Queen Victoria's Private Band. Born on March 7, 1830, he was formerly organist of New Upton Church, Slough. His hobby during fifty years of his life was the making of copies of violins after the models of the old artificers. Mr. Day, who died at his residence 50, Gloucester Street, Fimlico, on November 4, was much respected, and his loss will be mourned by those who enjoyed his friendship.

The death of Mr. Samuel Symes, on October 26, which we record with regret, has removed a familiar figure from Messrs. Novello's retail department, of which he was chief assistant, at Berners Street. Mr. Symes had been in the employment of the firm for thirty years.

Mr. Arthur Barracough, an excellent vocal professor, long resident in Dublin, died, we regret to record, on October 28, aged sixty-three years.

We are requested to state that Mr. Henry R. Clayton has kindly consented to take the place of the late Mr. F. R. Daldy as Honorary Secretary of the Copyright Association. All future communications should be addressed to him at 1, Berners Street, London, W.

Mr. Mark Hambourg offers to British composers three prizes—of the value of twenty, ten, and five guineas respectively—for a pianoforte composition in the form of a fantasia, sonata, ballade, scherzo, or set of variations, to occupy from ten to fifteen minutes in performance.

Mr. Daniel Mayer is retiring from the business of Messrs. S. & P. Erard, but the statement which has been circulated that the firm will not continue their London house is incorrect. The business will be carried on as heretofore at 18, Great Marlborough Street, by Mr. Blondel, of the Paris house of Erard, and without any change in the title.

Messrs. Novello have pleasure in stating that they have made arrangements with Messrs. Jones & Evans, Booksellers, Limited, of 77, Queen Street, Cheapside, to supply copies of THE MUSICAL TIMES, month by month, to their City customers.

A profile pencil portrait of Sir Edward Elgar has been accepted by the Hereford Free Library Committee, to be permanently hung in the institution. The portrait is by Master Max. H. Mason, aged 16, a son of Mr. William Mason, of Hereford; it is spoken of in the highest terms by Lady Elgar.

The Royal College of Music will give a performance of Mozart's opera 'The marriage of Figaro' at His Majesty's Theatre on December 7, at 2 p.m., under the direction of Sir Charles V. Stanford.

The sentence in our November issue (p. 711, col. 1) that 'Rimbault inaccurately states that Smith built the Worcester organ' needs modification. In the first issue (1855) of 'Hopkins and Rimbault,' as it is popularly called, Rimbault did include the Worcester instrument in the list of Father Smith's organs, but in subsequent editions of the work Harris is correctly given as the builder.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

BASINGSTOKE.—The Choral Society opened its sixteenth season in the Drill Hall on November 2 with a complete Elgar programme: 'The Black Knight,' 'The Banner of St. George,' 'Imperial March,' 'In Hammersbach' (from 'The Bavarian Highlands'), and the 'Pomp and Circumstance' March No. 1. The choir and orchestra consisted of 100 performers, and Mr. H. E. Powell conducted.

BATH.—The annual concert of the Avon Vale Musical Society was given in the Assembly Rooms on November 8. The programme included Humperdinck's 'Pilgrimage to Kevlaar,' Sterndale Bennett's fantastic-overture 'Paradise and the Peri' (previous to the performance of which Mrs. Calverley Bewicke recited a selection from Moore's poem), and Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner.' The choir and orchestra gave ample evidence of Mr. J. S. Liddle's careful training, and the solos in Barnett's cantata were efficiently sung by Miss Ethel Wood, Miss Sara Silvers, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. David Evans.

BOLTON.—The Philharmonic Society opened its fortieth season on November 17, in the Victoria Hall, with a performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf.' The choir and orchestra numbered over 200, the former specially reaching a high standard of excellence. The solo parts were undertaken by Madame Sadler Fogg, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Fowler Burton with much success. Mr. Charles Risegari was an able conductor. The miscellaneous second part included Sullivan's overture 'Di Ballo.'

BOURNEMOUTH.—Mr. Dan Godfrey continues to advance his claim on the gratitude of the music-loving visitors and residents of this popular watering-place. The symphony concerts entered on their eleventh season on October 5, and every credit is due to the enterprising conductor for the excellence of the performances. The programmes so far have included Brahms's first Symphony in C minor, Sullivan's 'Tempest' music, César Franck's Symphony in D minor, Dvorák's symphonic poem 'Das goldene Spinnrad,' and variations by J. A. Burton (conducted by the composer). Mention should also be made of the classical concerts given on Mondays.

BRIGHTON.—The Sacred Harmonic Society's first concert (seventy-ninth season) took place at the Dome on November 16, when Handel's 'Samson' was performed under the direction of Mr. Robert Taylor. There was a full and efficient orchestra and choir, and the principal vocalists were Miss Margaret Gascoigne, Miss Katherine Longland, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. W. A. Baker led the orchestra, and Mr. Percy Taylor presided at the organ.

BURTON-ON-TRENT.—The Musical Society gave a performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' on October 30. The singing of the choir was, with one or two trivial exceptions, highly creditable, and the orchestra, led by Mr. H. Suck, did admirable service. The solo vocalists were Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Dalton Baker, an unimpeachable trio. Mr. T. E. Lowe, Mayor of Burton, conducted with much care and skill. The able and enthusiastic work of this gentleman was properly recognized by the members of this Society in a presentation, made at the rehearsal on November 13, consisting of full-scores of 'King Olaf,' 'Faust,' 'Redemption' and 'Messiah.'

CHRISTCHURCH (N.Z.).—The Musical Union gave a performance of Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and a miscellaneous selection at the Canterbury Hall on September 19, when they had the advantage of the assistance of Mr. Watkin Mills's concert party as solo-vocalists. These comprised Miss Edith Kirkwood, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Harold Wilde, and Mr. Watkin Mills himself, who gave an excellent account of the solo parts in the oratorio. The choir sang admirably throughout and the orchestra was fully efficient. Dr. Bradshaw conducted.

DOVER.—Mr. H. J. Taylor's 'Legend of St. Martin' was performed at the Corporation concert by the Choral Union on November 11 (St. Martin's day), under the direction of the composer. St. Martin being the patron saint of Dover, the work was particularly appropriate. The remainder of the programme included a series of lantern-slides on ancient and modern Dover, interspersed with suitable music, including a new 'Song of Dover' by the Borough organist, Mr. H. J. Taylor, sung by Mr. Wilfred Barclay.

DUNEDIN (N.Z.).—The Dunedin Choral Society performed Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' and Cowen's 'Rose Maiden' on September 8 and 11, to the accompaniment of a full orchestra. The soloists were Miss Kirkwood, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Harold Wilde, and Mr. Watkin Mills. Both concerts, given under the able conductorship of Mr. W. Paget Gale, were a great success.

GRAHAMSTOWN.—An 'Evening with Beethoven' was given in the Athenæum, on October 12, by Mr. W. Deane, who read a short account of the composer's life and works. The musical illustrations included the Andante from the 'Septet', the Sonata in A, Op. 12 (first movement), and Romance for violin, and the 'Sonata appassionata.' Mr. W. Deane was the solo pianist, and Mr. Bernard Streatfield solo violinist.

HERDEN BRIDGE.—The first concert this season of the Choral and Harmonic Society was given at the Co-operative Hall on November 7, when 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' and a miscellaneous selection were performed. The choir sang with great credit and the orchestral accompaniments were played with much discretion. The tenor solo in Coleridge-Taylor's cantata was excellently sung by Mr. Charles Saunders. Mr. Walter Bolton's violoncello solos were a feature in the second part.

INVERCARGILL (N.Z.).—A choral and orchestral concert was given by the Musical Union in Zealandia Hall on September 29. The choir was heard to very great advantage in Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to Music' (unaccompanied), two-part songs 'Dim-lit woods' and 'Love song' by Brahms, MacCunn's 'O where art thou dreaming,' Jackson's 'Lord Ullin's Daughter,' and Fanning's 'The Vagabonds.' The orchestral selections, devoted to compositions by Sir Edward Elgar, were given with much spirit and effect. They consisted of 'Pomp and Circumstance' (No. 1) and 'Imperial' Marches, 'Contrasts,' 'Serenade Mauresque,' 'Chanson de Matin' and 'Chanson de Nuit.' Mr. Charles Gray conducted.

KILMARNOCK.—An interesting pianoforte recital was given by Mr. Tom B. Robertson at the Art Gallery on November 1. Beethoven's Sonata in C minor (Op. 13), a new Berceuse and Valse brillante by Paul Ambroise, and pieces by Chopin, Brahms and Liszt, were played by Mr. Robertson, who was assisted by Miss Margaret Horne (violinist) and Mr. David D. Slater (vocalist). Practically the same programme was given at Renfrew in October.

LEAMINGTON.—The Madrigal Society gave a miscellaneous concert in the Winter Hall on November 9, prominent features in the programme being Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George,' 'Imperial March,' and concert overture 'Cockaigne'; also Mackenzie's 'Britannia' overture and Cowen's 'Old English Dances.' These compositions were rendered with due efficiency by the orchestra, and the choir displayed a marked improvement in their work, especially in the cantata. Mr. E. Roberts West, who conducted, appeared as solo pianist in Schumann's Concertstück in G, the orchestra in this instance being conducted by Mr. H. A. Heden.

MACCLESFIELD.—The Philharmonic Society gave a concert on November 15, when the first part of the programme was devoted to Elgar's 'King Olaf.' This was said to be the first performance of any of the distinguished composer's works in this town, and much credit is due to the conductor, Dr. Jackson, and his forces for the satisfactory rendering of the cantata both by choir and orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Fanny Chetham, Mr. Alfred Heather, and Mr. Charles Tree, a thoroughly capable trio. The performance met with warm appreciation from a large audience.

NEWARK-ON-TRENT.—The opening concert of the Philharmonic Society (nineteenth season) took place at the Town Hall on October 31, when the programme was mainly devoted to the compositions of the late Mr. Samuel Reay, including three that had not been published. A conspicuous feature was of course the popular 'Dawn of day,' and other pieces were a 'Wedding-march,' 'Diamond Jubilee March,' and the part-songs 'The clouds that wrap' and 'O swallow, prithee stay.' The solo vocalists were Madame Norledge, Miss Pleasance Miller, and Mr. A. H. Ellis. Mr. W. T. Wright conducted. The concert was a graceful tribute to the gifted and lamented musician.

PENZANCE.—The Choral Society gave an extra concert on November 3, in St. John's Hall, when the first part of the programme consisted of Chopin's funeral march, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth' and the 'Hallelujah' chorus, and a song, 'Litany,' by F. Edward Bache, all In memoriam the Society's late conductor, Mr. J. H. Nunn. A selection on the organ by Dr. D. J. Wood followed, and the concert concluded with the 'Hymn of Praise.' The solo vocalists were Miss Bessie Cartwright, Mrs. C. L. Taylor, Mrs. T. H. Williams, and Mr. J. C. Truscott.

TIMPERLEY.—The first subscription concert of the Vocal Society took place in the Stockport Road Schoolroom on November 6, when the whole of the first part of the programme was devoted to compositions by Sir Edward Elgar, concluding with the 'Banner of St. George.' In the second part the choir sang the part-songs 'Now fie on love' (G. A. Macfarren), 'Spirits, advance' (Bishop), and the 'Boatman's good-night' (Schira). Mr. H. M. Sheaves conducted.

TODMORDEN.—Professor Prout's dramatic cantata 'The Red Cross Knight' was performed by the Musical Society at the Town Hall on November 14. The singing of the choir was spirited, and the orchestra, strengthened for the occasion, was efficient. The solo vocalists were Madame Sadler Fogg, Madame Cecile Vicars, Mr. H. Turnpenny, Mr. Fowler Burton, and Mr. Hamilton Harris. The work was ably conducted by Mr. W. A. Wrigley.

WALTHAMSTOW.—The Choral Union gave a performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' at the Walthamstow Baths on November 16. The result of careful preparation by the conductor, Mr. John Evans, was shown in the excellent rendering of the work given by both choir and orchestra, and thoroughly satisfactory soloists were found in Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Carrie Wilby, Miss Mabel Knott, Mr. H. Turnpenny, and Mr. Meurig James.

WELLINGTON (N.Z.).—The Musical Union, in conjunction with Mr. Watkin Mills and his quartet of soloists, gave a fine performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' on September 22 in the Town Hall. The noble choruses especially made a marked impression, and the orchestra gave an excellent rendering of the overture. Mr. Watkin Mills sang the name part like the experienced artist he is, and the other soloists—Miss Edith Kirkwood, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, and Mr. Harold Wilde—were all thoroughly efficient in their respective parts. Mr. Robert Parker, who conducted, had under his control an efficient choir of 200 voices and a band of about fifty instrumentalists. Mr. F. W. Rowley presided at the temporary organ.

WINDSOR.—The annual concert given by the Gentlemen of the choir of St. George's Chapel Royal and His Majesty's Private Chapel, took place at the Royal Albert Institute on November 8. The programme as usual included several popular glees and part-songs. Two new part-songs were introduced: 'Rest thee,' by R. F. Martin Akerman (assistant-organist of St. George's Chapel), and 'Come, tuneful friends,' by Dr. C. H. Lloyd. Both novelties, the latter especially being a very dainty and charming composition, were warmly received and conducted by their respective composers. Mr. Hubert Hunt artistically played two violin solos: 'Swedish Dances,' Max Bruch, and the Andante and Allegro from Bach's Sonata in A major; in both pieces he had the valuable co-operation of Sir Walter Parratt. On the following afternoon Messrs. Dunhill and Mason gave their sixth concert of chamber music in the same Hall. An important feature of the programme was a new Quintet in C minor, composed by Mr. T. F. Dunhill and played by the Grimson Quartet and the composer: the work was received with much appreciation.

Answers to Correspondents.

J. M.—The four-stringed double-bass is now largely used because, as Professor Prout, in his 'The Orchestra,' says, 'it possesses a great advantage over that with three strings, in having a compass a fourth lower.' The four-stringed double-bass is generally tuned :

but, as with the lowest note of the three-stringed bass, some players tune the fourth string a tone lower—down to the lower D. It is, however, not fair, certainly not polite, of Colonial possessors of 'made in Germany' double-basses to say that the three-stringed instruments are 'no good.' We are always glad to hear from readers in far-away Colonies.

H. T.—There are several biographies of Sir Arthur Sullivan, though some of them may be out of print. We give the list: 'Sir Arthur Sullivan,' by Arthur Lawrence (James Bowden, 1899); 'Souvenirs of Sir Arthur Sullivan,' by Walter J. Wells (Newnes, 1901); 'Sir Arthur Sullivan: his life and works,' by B. W. Findon (Nisbet, 1904); and 'Arthur Sullivan,' by H. Saxe Wyndham (Bell, 1903). See also 'Masters of English Music,' by Charles Willeby (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co., 1893). The article in the 'Dictionary of National Biography,' and several articles on Sullivan which have appeared during recent years in THE MUSICAL TIMES, may prove useful.

M. C. Y.—(1) A chromatic concord is a chord which is foreign to the key in which it appears, but which does not induce modulation. Macfarren gives the following example:

(2) 'Close harmony' is not the same as 'short score.' The former is 'Harmony produced by drawing the parts which form it closely together.' A 'short score' is when all the parts are arranged or transcribed so that they shall appear in two staves, as in most hymnals.

MAUD.—Stanford's setting of Tennyson's 'The Revenge' was composed for the Leeds Musical Festival of 1886, and received its first performance in the Town Hall there on October 14, the composer conducting. When Tennyson read the poem to Carlyle, the Sage of Chelsea remarked: 'Eh, Alfred, you have got the grip of it.' Some interesting particulars in regard to the poem and Sir Charles Stanford's music thereunto so excellently allied, will be found in THE MUSICAL TIMES of December, 1898, in a biographical sketch of the composer.

J. P. H.—(1) By all means employ the viola in preference to the two 2nd violins, as then you will obtain complete harmony in your strings. (2) Organ pedals, made to proper scale, attached to a pianoforte, are better for practice than those belonging to a harmonium, as in the latter instance the pedals are often not according to scale. (3) You will find Professor Prout's 'Counterpoint' a 'good supplement' to Sir Frederick Bridge's primer on that subject.

SEQUENCE.—Mordents should be 'diatonic with reference to the context,' says Mr. Dannreuther in his 'Musical ornamentation' primer, thus endorsing Bach's own practice in regard to the interpretation of these embellishments. Therefore, in all the three instances you mention (Bach's Partitur, No. 6) the lower note of the ornament should be a whole tone below the principal note.

F. T.—In singing the Psalms, and in all other instances where it occurs, the word 'mischievous' (Psalm 140) should, of course, be pronounced with an accent on the first syllable. Your chairman 'who has lately come from another part of the country,' in asserting that the second syllable should bear the accent, is probably of a mischievous turn of mind. Heed him not. The curate is right.

J. M. H.—Considering your age we should advise you to take up the viola, as it is a most useful, if not a popular instrument. If you cannot arrange to take lessons at the Guildhall School of Music, you would be able to obtain a reliable teacher at the Forest Gate branch of the London Academy of Music.

TIMID.—(1) For books on part-writing see: 'Part-writing for Beginners,' by J. W. Ivimey, and 'Part-writing,' by H. Hiles, both published by Messrs. Novello. (2) There is no law against an occasional crossing of the alto and tenor parts in a choral composition. Your chant has in it more of promise than fulfilment; but do not be discouraged. Try again.

ORGANUM.—(1) It would occupy too much of our space to give a list of all the organ-cases depicted in Vol. ii. of Mr. Hill's 'Organ-cases and organs of the Middle Ages.' (2) We are sorry not to be able to say whether Mr. Norbury's 'Box of whistles' is still in print.

J. W.—(1) In Mr. E. H. Lemare's arrangement for the organ of Rossini's 'William Tell' overture the metronomic indications agree exactly with the full-score. (2) As the double-basses enter at bar 11 of the Introduction (Andante), a 16 ft. pedal stop should be drawn at that point.

S. W. A.—We cannot trace the publisher of the motet by Guglielmi, 'Quem vidistis pastores.' Verdi's 'Stabat Mater,' with an English translation, is published by Messrs. Ricordi & Co.

H. T.—For violin solos, by Elgar, suitable for playing at a school 'At home' (which sounds rather paradoxical), try 'Chanson de Matin' and 'Chanson de Nuit' (Novello). We do not answer questions by post.

D. E. S.—The most complete biography of Miss Maude Valérie White that we know is that contained in Vol. iv. of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians.'

S. M. G.—The word 'livelong' should be sung with a short vowel, as in 'live.'

THE MUSIC TO KING ARTHUR

WRITTEN BY

J. COMYNS CARR

COMPOSED BY

ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

ARRANGED FOR CONCERT PERFORMANCE BY WILFRED BENDALL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In 1894 the late Sir Arthur Sullivan accepted a commission from Sir Henry Irving to compose incidental music to Mr. Comyns Carr's drama of "King Arthur." The work was produced at the Lyceum Theatre, on January 12, 1895, and proved a great artistic success. After the withdrawal of the drama it was suggested to the composer that it would be a pity to allow such beautiful music to remain unpublished and become forgotten, and that a selection from it might be arranged in the form of a short concert-cantata. . . . After the composer's death it was decided to revert to the original proposition regarding the music, and the present concert-arrangement is the result.

Vocal Score, One Shilling and Sixpence.

TECHNIQUE
EXPRESSIONIN
PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cetera.

HYMN OF FAITH

CANTATA

FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
THE WORDS ARRANGED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURES BY

EDWARD ELGAR

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

IVOR ATKINS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

THE TIMES.

Mr. Atkins has done his work well, and shows his wide experience among the chorus, while his writing for the orchestra is strikingly free from modern extravagances, and he has an invaluable sense of quiet dignity.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Some passages are of special charm and significance, especially that in which the chorus sing without accompaniment; and in the orchestral part, "Faith, the substance of things hoped for," &c. There is neither space nor time for details, and I sum up in saying that Mr. Atkins may take courage from the character of his latest venture and go on to higher things.

STANDARD.

This represents, so far, Mr. Atkins's largest work, and marks a great advance on his previous efforts. . . . The work is worthy of high praise, as an earnest and expressive composition; and in the orchestral part Mr. Atkins reveals a true feeling for tone-colour and variety, which stamps the work as far away from the ordinary and a welcome departure from the usual cathedral service type of music.

MORNING POST.

The hymn extols Faith, and the composer's treatment of the words is scholarly, yet not dry. The music, with its ecclesiastical subject-matter, shows modern influence and here and there that of Elgar, yet not so as to suggest direct imitation. The work, commendably short, promises well for Mr. Atkins's future as a composer.

DAILY NEWS.

Mr. Atkins has evidently been influenced by the music of his librettist, and, as far as the orchestra is concerned, by the modern school in general. Strangely enough, the most striking music of the new work is to be heard in the orchestra, which, by many picturesque touches of appropriate instrumentation, illustrates the text with the happiest effect.

PALM MALL GAZETTE.

In this work Mr. Atkins has shown his capacity for musical development quite extraordinarily. I find it to be a great improvement upon the excellently good work which he has before given to us. Not only does his thought rise to a higher range than heretofore, but there is a far greater grip of his musical material, and a greater condensation of method. The chorus, "In the Name of our God," and the solo immediately preceding it, "Rejoice," show a grip and a tendency towards the intellectual side of music which are very satisfactory; his melody is fluent, but never inclined to run to seed or to become blank, and there is many a touch of real beauty in his orchestral treatment, where all of it is musicianly.

ATHENÆUM.

Mr. Atkins shows skill in musicianship, yet it never becomes unduly prominent. . . . The Hymn under notice is excellent of its kind, and festival authorities will no doubt soon give its author an opportunity of displaying his powers on a larger scale.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The composer has produced an exceedingly well proportioned work. In sustained dignity of utterance, the music reaches a high level. It has real solemnity without any dryness, and the sensuous beauty frequently attained in the colouring has no touch of either tawdriness or vulgarity. There is something of Sir Hubert Parry's influence perceptible in the strong texture and fine construction of the music, together with a richness of colour which is outside the range of Sir Hubert's simple palette. . . . The music is eminently natural, and two unaccompanied passages for the chorus achieve a genuinely impressive effect by very simple means. And there is not a bar that can be styled sentimental, pretty, or sensational, which is negative praise of a high order.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

The musical treatment is in the modern continuous manner, without break, the alternating choral and solo sections forming one organic whole. Representative themes are employed, and with no little skill. One standing for Faith is the most important. A motive given at the outset by the brass gives an ecclesiastical stamp to the work, and use is made of part of the ancient hymn tune, "Vexilla Regis." But Mr. Atkins has the gift of melody, if not as yet of a very individual type; and there is lyric charm in the solo, "Unless the Lord had been my help," which is gracefully scored. The orchestration throughout is very good, and the voice-writing is effective.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE.

Of the cantata as an art work I have no hesitation in saying in terms almost superlative. Mr. Atkins is at once solid and interesting. There is not a dull moment; everywhere the music has a contagious warmth. One has the impression that all was given off at white heat. There is nothing laborious, nothing of the dry-as-dust style traditionally attributed to cathedral organists, nothing of the universally despised Kapellmeister-musik. On the contrary, Mr. Atkins, while in warp and woof having some kinship with Bach, is in colour and feeling as modern as Strauss. The solo, with its exquisite accompaniment, was especially beautiful, even where all was beautiful. Mr. Atkins has made his mark, and if he continues to progress at the same rate will, before many years, attain the highest rank.

A SONG OF EDEN

FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS TAKEN FROM "PARADISE LOST"

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price One Shilling.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The music is of high merit, and marks another advance on the part of a composer whom the most supercilious cannot now afford to pass over as negligible. . . . It seems characteristic of this composer to write good, honest, utterly intelligible music, and he has done so here, not even at times shrinking from simplicity, as knowing that simple utterance is always the best when dealing with subjects which are in their fulness inexpressible. But with all his reticence Dr. Brewer has not failed to write music which, while clear, interesting, and effective, is also in accord with the spirit of the text to which, if it do not add strength, it gives artistic charm in no mean degree.

STANDARD.

It is a melodious setting for chorus and orchestra of some words taken from "Paradise Lost." The orchestral part has a none too common quality in works of the kind, in that it shows a sense of colour. If it is not a large work, it is distinctive, and fulfilled its purpose admirably.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Dr. Brewer in this score scarcely cares to search out anything of a highly complex character, quite rightly choosing, in a work necessarily brief, choral harmonies of a recognised value, in his expression of his high theme. . . . The work ends with a natural development out of the musical material that has gone before, and it will remain as an excellent example of its kind, in which the composer while not sinking his personality, nevertheless realises that he naturally "owes a cock to" convention.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Not only are the voices sympathetically and effectively treated, as has always been the case with Dr. Brewer's music, but the orchestra is handled with much more freedom than hitherto, and in many passages an excellent colouring is attained. . . . Throughout the work there is abundant evidence of Dr. Brewer's power to produce pleasant and euphonious music, while there are many touches which add to pleasantness, distinction and character.

ATHENÆUM.

The music is well written and well scored, and, owing to its comparative simplicity, will no doubt be of general use.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL.

It opens with a leading theme in chords, the tenors and basses proclaiming "Now, Heaven in all her glory," the altos joining on the words "Earth in her rich attire." The orchestra then gives out a new theme, immediately followed by an impressive unaccompanied chorus a capella in seven parts to the words "These are Thy glorious works." Of importance is the section that follows, an orchestral interlude of fifty-two bars based on the leading themes employed in the work. In the choral number that follows the composer introduces another striking theme, of which great use is made hereafter. Yet another theme makes its appearance in the Adante in D flat on the words "Fairest of stars, last in the train of night," the composer here making use of the "Star" theme from his oratorio "The Holy Innocents." The constant changes of tempi give rise to variety of treatment of both the choral and orchestral parts, and the composer seems to have created a work full of colour and impressiveness that is likely to be favourably received by both performers and audience.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE AND EXPRESS.

Dr. Brewer's work occupies about a quarter of an hour. It is scored with modern fulness, and in style displays the happy medium between the grand, solid church style and the newer and more emotional manner.

GLOUCESTER JOURNAL.

With each work from his pen there is a greater mastery and command of musical resources. The effect produced upon the hearer by the "Song of Eden" is that of a work thoroughly well thought out, wisely planned, and skilfully worked out.

GLASGOW HERALD.

A composition of lofty aim and approximate beauty and force.

THE REFEREE.

A reverent and scholarly setting of passages derived from Milton's "Paradise Lost." To take such a text is to measure oneself with a giant mind, and if the composer has but skimmed the surface meaning of the lines, he at least may be credited with courage and loftiness of aim. Moreover, he has not striven to make his abilities appear greater than they are. He has written honestly, sanely, earnestly, and skilfully, and his production is worthy of esteem and a place amidst the best modern music of the Church.

LLOYD'S WEEKLY NEWSPAPER.

Dr. Brewer has found in "Paradise Lost" the material for inspiring "A Song of Eden." This composition is brief in character requiring only fourteen minutes for performance.

THE TIMES.

It is no easy matter to give to those who did not hear the first performance of Sir Hubert Parry's setting of "The Pied Piper of Hamelin" on Thursday evening a clear idea of the work. The fun is fast and furious, the meaning of the music as clear to the understanding as Browning's poem, and every point is made with complete success, while the humour is on the same high level as that of the poem itself. That frequent performances of the work will be given is tolerably certain, for there are no great difficulties to be overcome if only choruses can be found to sing lightly and delicately enough, while singing usually in a very rapid tempo any slackness would spoil the delightful spirit of the music, which is as witty as Calverley's verse and as subtle as the strategy of a Mackenzie chess problem. The ballad is one of the most successful pieces of genuinely humorous music that exist in the whole range of musical literature.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Sir Hubert has done exceedingly well in his music to the most mirthful tragedy of the Piper of Hamelin, taking in and breathing out the full spirit of the piece, and throwing it into new forms with an accomplished musician's art. The humour is immense, and the expression of it so frank and free that the duller listener can hardly miss a point. Not an opportunity of enhancing the fun has been lost. . . . There is nothing pretentious in the piece. Its design is to amuse, and that laudable purpose is carried out in the most direct and unaffected manner. Of course the composer reaped a harvest of success, and a full assurance that he has added to the gaiety of the nation.

DAILY NEWS.

It is well that the foremost of the older school of living British composers should break away from the fashionable pessimism of much modern music, and prove that there is such a thing as humour. . . . With all his sanity of thought and virility of emotion, he has not before written anything in a frankly humorous vein, and the cleverness and unflinching ingenuity of service with which he has illustrated Browning's poem came as a great surprise. . . . The work is full of new humorous devices, such as assigning the interpolations of "Quoth he," and "Cried they" and the like to the chorus, while the baritone and tenor sing the speeches of the Pied Piper and the Mayor. The orchestra plays its part too, in the humour, and the little work is certainly a masterpiece of musical humour. It will be a welcome addition to the repertoire of choral societies.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Last night Sir Hubert Parry's brilliant musical joke, "The Pied Piper of Hamelin," roused the audience at the Norwich Festival, who had become somewhat jaded, into a spontaneous display of merriment. There is scarcely a page in the score of the "Pied Piper" but contains some subtle orchestral witticism.

MORNING POST.

Humour in music is not so common a quality as some people might think. It reigns throughout the major portion of this delightful work—humour of the kind associated with the "Meistersinger." At a time when so much music is dreamy and dismal it is a particular pleasure to meet with a work like the present, every bar of which denotes the hand of a master. . . . Under the composer's direction the performance went with great spirit, and the cheers at the close testified to the appreciation of the audience. There is no doubt that the "Pied Piper of Hamelin" will be heard of again ere long.

MORNING LEADER.

Sir Hubert displayed a hitherto almost unsuspected vein of unconventional and fascinating humour, not only in the purely imitative passages, but rather in the whole spirit of the music. For instance, all the remarks of the Mayor are followed by the words "Said the mayor," in the bass, and the death of the rats is celebrated by a humorous perversion of the Funeral March of Chopin. The themes are melodious and cheerful, without flippancy, and the scoring is much lighter and clearer than is usual with the composer; and the fine, open-air vitality of it all make it extremely attractive. . . . The reception of the work was enthusiastic in the extreme, and it should be heard often.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It is a work fresh and humorous, entering into the spirit of the quaint story, and full of touches which give point to the poem. . . . The choral parts are written so as to give plenty of room for intelligent and pointed declamation, but they require extreme smartness in attack, and in this respect the chorus left something to be desired. Otherwise the singers entered thoroughly into the spirit of the work, while the soloists treated their parts in the right spirit of low comedy. Among the happy touches may be instanced the exciting climax which accompanies the appearance and rapid exit of the rats, and the tripping music which is associated with a troop of children, while the conclusion of the whole matter is broad and genial in treatment.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

In this work he lets himself go with all the enjoyment of a schoolboy determined to make the best of life, and he has caught the spirit of Browning's mock solemnity with wonderful skill. Sir Hubert's humour is direct and telling but never flippant, and never degenerates into buffoonery. . . . But the real humour of the music lies in the characterisation of the Mayor and of the Piper, and in touches like the setting of the oft-recurring phrase "Said the mayor" for the basses of the chorus. . . . In the end the composer, like the poet, touches a more serious note, but still remains true to the straightforward simplicity which had characterised the opening. . . . "The Pied Piper" will cause many audiences to spend a very pleasant half-hour.

ODE TO THE NORTH-EAST WIND

SET FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

FREDERIC CLIFFE.

VOCAL SCORE, PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Tonic Sol-fa, 9d. Full Score, MS.; String Parts, 7s. 6d.; Wind Parts (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

Like the poem, the composition is manly, direct, and purely English in style; the composer has made the most of every suggestion in the words, and, among other things, the second number, "Hark, the brave North-Easter!" contains delightful musical allusions to the chase, and is followed by a "nocturne" which may be interpreted as the dreams of the hounds. Fitful passages occur for a moment or two at a time, one a phrase of suave beauty, and the whole might be taken as an orchestral picture of a canine Queen Mab. A charmingly graceful, flowing chorus follows next, in which the four-part female chorus is used with great skill. The last chorus has a broad tune in the manner of a folk-song, and gathers up the chief theme of the "dream" movement.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

He seems to rejoice in the howl of the nor'-easter over a Yorkshire moor, but as that artist he restrains his ecstasy, and so orders the outcome of it that I should not be surprised to find choral societies all over the country taking up the "Ode to the North-East Wind." The composer has a sharp eye for contrasts, and the couplet referring to hounds, "Go and rest to-morrow in your dreams," suggested a nocturne which forms the central episode of the piece. Mr. Cliffe excels in dainty music of this kind, and the effect of the nocturne coming after the turbulent greeting to the wind is wholly charming. That turbulent greeting, by the way, is not wild beyond measure. Everywhere there is a proper restraint in consideration of the intelligible, the orderly, and the beautiful. This, in brief, is a summary of the new work as dictated by my own impressions, and I congratulate Mr. Cliffe upon another festival success in the programme.

MORNING POST.

The music is quite easy to follow; there is a distinct English flavour about it. Now if, on the one hand, composers who seek to be "up-to-date" often become too elaborate and vague, those who seek after clearness of form, and whose aim is to please rather than astonish, run the danger of being accounted old-fashioned, or it may be commonplace. Mr. Cliffe's music is easy to follow at a first hearing, but it is never open to the latter charge. It is distinctly good, and the very ease with which the composer expresses himself makes one overlook much clever workmanship. The picturesque scoring and the grateful writing for the voices will no doubt win popularity for the work.

DAILY NEWS.

It is a robust work, and is certainly well suited to the rhetoric of the poem. . . . Mr. Cliffe, jocund and open though he be in general effect, has been wise enough to strike a deeper note, to lift, as it were, the surface-thought of his feeling out of any sentiment of commonplace. His conception of the south-west wind is altogether delightful, and there is some strong choral work in the finale.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The work, a short one, which was well performed and given an enthusiastic reception by a large audience, is likely to find general popularity owing to its melodious and forceful themes. It is essentially English, direct, and straightforward in treatment, while containing many happily descriptive passages. It has evidently been written with an eye to popular favour.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It is a work which has both brilliance and charm, and, having regard to the nature of the poem, in which neither mood nor metre is subjected to any material variation, the success of the composer in giving variety of effect is quite remarkable. . . . The whole work has a vigour and a freshness quite in keeping with the subject, and the power which it evidences enhances the surprise one has long felt that Mr. Cliffe has not done more than he has. . . . Mr. Cliffe has done more than turn Kingsley's poem into an effective composition; he has caught its atmosphere admirably. There is the breeziness of the poetry in the music; there is also its distinctively English sentiment; and while he has secured variety he has also given his music coherence.

MORNING LEADER.

Mr. Cliffe writes choral music such as Yorkshire loves—melodious, with well-marked rhythms and solid harmonies, and there is a splendidly healthy, open-air spirit in all which appeals to the North-country imagination. He displays more especially in the nocturne, gifts of fancy which prevent the music from becoming merely boisterous, and the scoring is throughout excellent.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In his treatment of the lines the composer has adopted a characteristic directness which will without doubt serve to make it immensely popular. It is all very obvious, because the subject makes no call upon subtlety or psychology. The composer has adopted Handel's advice to the amateur composer, when he hung his music out of the window—he has given it "some fresh air." The work teems with tunefulness. If the composer had sat down and, recognising the barrenness of recently-issued publishers' lists of novelties, deliberately set about to write a pleasant, easy, and effective work for the market, he could not have succeeded better. It must not be inferred from this that there is anything unworthy or cheap in the "Ode to the North-East Wind." On the contrary, it is full of cleverness, musically to a degree. . . . It may well be prophesied that soon Mr. Cliffe's Ode will go the round of the choral societies.

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.

Mr. Cliffe is a craftsman needing not to be ashamed. He has not given the world anything better than this Ode. It is a work in which the orchestra and the chorus alike delight. He thrills and he enthuses by his musical portrayal of his text. There is a feeling of the presence of celebrities as he sings of the black north-easter, and there is the reflex of the pride of the parson-poet in the doings of our conquering fathers who sailed over seas. There is most grateful music for every voice. That assigned to the ladies' voices is of the most captivating and entrancing, while that for his men's voices has the true manly ring in it, something of the salt spray, and of the field sports which have done so much in making England mistress of the seas. He must be an alien who did not feel proud of the setting of the last stanza of the Ode, who did not feel its bracing effect as the men and women of Hallamshire gave it full-larynxed utterance—"Blow, thou wind of God." The instrumental workmanship is not less delightful than the vocal. Mr. Cliffe uses the full orchestra in the manner of the mature music-maker. . . . Whatever may be the future of works heard during the Festival, "The Ode to the North-East Wind" will have a long and popular survival.

LEEDS MERCURY.

The difficulty for a composer undertaking to set the lines was their lack of variety in idea and treatment, but Mr. Cliffe has provided a point of repose by introducing an instrumental Nocturne hinting of dreams and the subdued echoes of the hunt. The rest consists of strong, vigorous, and simple choral writing, full of picturesque and even dramatic effects, such as the Sheffield chorus love. It is a thoroughly successful little work, which will undoubtedly add to the composer's repute.

YORKSHIRE DAILY OBSERVER.

It is English music to the core, one may say, looking to the age in which we live. I do not know whether Mr. Cliffe would feel altogether complimented by the comparison of his Ode with Bennett's "May Queen," but, remembering the new orientation in the republic of music which has ensued from the observatory of Bayreuth, that genial work by his once-famous Yorkshire predecessor presents as good a parallel as I can think of at the moment. The English note is heard in the straightforward style of the declamatory passages and the tunes of the melodic part-writing. . . . The pith of the matter is—and at this I may leave it—that Mr. Cliffe has written a work which is at once popular and good music. The audience does not need to be educated up to it. Its acceptance this evening was instant and enthusiastic.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1603. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

THE

TENTERDEN STREET, HANOVER SQUARE.

INSTITUTED, 1822.

INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

Patron: HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter. Last day for entry for the September Examination, June 30; for the Christmas Examination, October 31.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

F. W. RENAUT, Secretary.

LISZT

"For twenty-eight years I have now used your Pianos, & they have maintained their superiority. Your instruments are perfect."

RUBINSTEIN

"At my Concerts I use Bechstein's Pianos almost exclusively. C. Bechstein has attained the utmost degree of perfection in the art of instrument making."

VON BÜLOW

"C. Bechstein's Instruments are distinguished by their superior quality in every branch of Pianoforte manufacture."

LESCHETIZKY

"The Bechstein Piano is of the same importance to the Pianist as a Stradivarius is to the violinist."

EUGEN D'ALBERT

"My best teachers & dearest friends are the Bechstein Grands."

BUSONI

"Your pianos are as regards beauty of tone & evenness, precision & delicacy of touch, the acme of what can be produced in this art."

VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN

"The beauty of tone of a Bechstein Piano I can only compare with that of a Stradivarius String Quartet."

SOPHIE MENTER

"Bechstein, the King of all Pianoforte Manufacturers."

CARREÑO

"The Bechstein Piano is the ideal of perfection & above all other instruments responds to all the demands of an artist."

SARASATE

"Bechstein is the Stradivarius of the Piano."

MOSZKOWSKI

"By Bechstein the last word in Pianoforte manufacture has been said."
